CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 9, 1912.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore, under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

LEATHER TRADE IN FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND (H. DOC. NO. 902).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report by Commercial Agent A. B. Butman, containing the result of his investigations of the shoe and leather trade in France and Switzerland, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

KERCKHOFF-CUZNER MILL & LUMBER CO. (S. DOC. NO. 906).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, reporting under the provisions of the naval act of June 24, 1910, that the Navy Department has considered, ascertained, adjusted, and determined the claim of the Kerckhoff-Cuzner Mill & Lumber Co., owner of dock at San Pedro, Cal., for damages thereto as the result of being struck by the U. S. S. Preble on April 19, 1912, and found the sum of $52.30 due the claimant, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House adheres to its amendments to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 2, 3, and 4 to the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and adheres to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 5, 9, 10, and 11 to the bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 5817. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the county of Hill, in the State of Montana, the jail building and fixtures now upon the abandoned Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, in the State of Montana;

H. R. 24023. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 129. Joint resolution to provide transportation for American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented a resolution adopted by the board of managers of the New York Produce Exchange, favoring the enactment of legislation extending to the shipper the right of appeal to the Commerce Court from decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of members of the National Association of State Libraries, praying for the establishment of a national legislative reference bureau at Washington, D. C., which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25073) to authorize the Moline-Bettendorf Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Moline, Ill., and Bettendorf, Iowa, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1023) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7424) to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1026) thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 22650) to amend sections 4214 and 4218 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1024) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25764) to subject lands of former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation and other lands to homestead entry, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, which was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13417) granting unsurveyed and unattached islands to the State of Wisconsin for forestry purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 1025) thereon.

EXTENSION OF FIRST STREET EAST.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 1068) authorizing the extension of First Street east, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1022) thereon. If the Senator from Connecticut would kindly give me one minute—the bill will pass in that length of time—I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is in the usual form providing for street extensions.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIVERSARY OF FRAMING OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. DU PONT. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 333) to authorize the loan of obsolete Springfield rifles, and so forth, to the Historical Pageant Committee, Philadelphia, Pa., and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of War to loan to the Historical Pageant Committee of Philadelphia, Pa., for use in the ceremonies pertaining to the celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the framing of the Constitution of the United States, not to exceed 2,000 obsolete Springfield rifles, caliber 45, and such number of obsolete swords or sabers as may be desired and are on hand and available.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 7438) for the relief of Lewis Montgomery (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 7439) granting an increase of pension to James Edwards (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WATSON (for Mr. CHILTON):

A bill (S. 7440) for the relief of P. H. Harper; and

A bill (S. 7441) for the relief of the heirs of John Morgan; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 7442) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. Ryan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 7443) granting a pension to Mary A. Fisher; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,305,257.19, being the net amount of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 25970), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SPEECH OF ACCEPTANCE OF PRESIDENT TAFT (S. DOC. NO. 902).

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the speech of notification of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] to the President and the President's speech accepting the nomination for the Presidency by the Republican national convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the papers the contents of which he has stated be printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LEGISLATION (S. DOC. NO. 905).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I send to the desk an article written by Congressman BRANTLEY, of the House, on the subject of workmen's compensation legislation, and I ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if the article, after having been written, was delivered in the House?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; it was not.

Mr. SMOOT. It has never been delivered there?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It has never been delivered there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that an article the nature of which he has stated shall be printed as a public document. Is there objection?

Mr. SHIVELY. There was some confusion on this side of the Chamber when the Senator from Utah made his statement. What is the character of the document which he desires printed?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a short article on the subject of workmen's compensation legislation.

Mr. SHIVELY. By whom?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. By Representative BRANTLEY, of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SPEECH OF ACCEPTANCE OF GOV. WILSON (S. DOC. NO. 903).

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask to have printed as a public document the speech of acceptance of Gov. Wilson, a copy of which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks that the document which he has stated——

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not the document, but I think the speech of Representative JAMES notifying Mr. Wilson ought also to be printed, just as in the case of the request a little while ago with reference to Mr. ROOT's speech of notification. I ask that that be included, the speech to be furnished by me as soon as I can get a copy of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas modify his request?

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection, of course. I have not, however, the speech of Representative JAMES, nor have I ever seen it.

Mr. SIMMONS. It can be obtained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is that the speech of acceptance of Gov. Wilson and the speech of notification by Representative JAMES be printed as a public document. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. JONES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is endeavoring to submit a question to the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I was merely going to ask why not have all the speeches of acceptance printed as one document—the speech of former President Roosevelt, of President Taft, and of Mr. Wilson?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I concur heartily with my colleague's suggestion. I think that would be an excellent plan.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] if his request includes printing in the RECORD also?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no; I have been informed that it is not usual to so print the speech of a presidential candidate accepting the nomination.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that it has already been printed in the RECORD by the extension of the remarks of certain Members of the other House.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the speech of Gov. Wilson and Representative JAMES be also printed in the RECORD, as well as printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand the request now is that the notification speech of Senator ROOT——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That has been granted, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. The proposition is to print both speeches in one document?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Both in one document.

Mr. SMOOT. The notification speech of Senator ROOT and the speech of acceptance of President Taft?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; that was my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request now is that the acceptance speech of Gov. Wilson and the notification speech of Representative JAMES be printed as a document and also printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The speeches referred to are as follows:

HON. OLLIE M. JAMES'S SPEECH OF NOTIFICATION.

[Speech of Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES, delivered at Seagirt, N. J., August 7, 1912, notifying Gov. Woodrow Wilson of his nomination for President by the Democratic Party.]

Gov. Wilson, the Democracy of this Republic, assembled in national convention at Baltimore on June 25, 1912, was truly representative of the people of this country. They represented a political faith that was born with the Government and founded by the one who wrote the charter of our freedom. The Democratic Party has lived through all the years since then to see the parties that battled against it die in the political arena in which they fought.

REPUBLICAN PARTY, ONCE TRIUMPHANT, NOW TORN.

And now we behold the Republican Party—once militant, united, and triumphant—divided, torn, and disheartened, presenting to the American people a disappearing and dissolving view. And in the melancholy reflection of its leaders we can almost hear them say, "What shall it profit a party if it shall gain all the trusts and lose the common people?"

On the forty-sixth ballot, in perhaps the most memorable and epoch-making convention ever held in our political history, you were unanimously nominated for President by the Democratic Party amid great enthusiasm. No cry of a fraud-controlled convention was heard, no charge of theft-made delegations was uttered, no bribery of delegates debauched that convention, no combination or trade, no bosses' mandate was responsible for your nomination.

But it came to you as untainted as the Nation's honor; it was the unbought, free voice and will of the people's honestly selected delegates. There are no disgruntled Democrats sulking in their tents. The men who contended against you for this prize, the loftiest political station in the world, take their defeat like the brave and seasoned soldiers they are, knowing that all could not achieve it and that the will of the people selected you.

ATTRIBUTES BEFIT HIM FOR GREAT UNDERTAKING.

The Democratic Party believe that you possess in splendid fullness those great attributes of constructive genius, inventive intellect, and resistless will that so transcendently befit you for the great undertaking for which your party has commissioned you. As the Democracy has bestowed upon you its most exalted confidence by naming you for the highest office in the gift of your countrymen, they have done so with an abiding confidence that your service to all the people by striving for equal laws and equal opportunities and in justly apportioning their burdens will meet in full and rounded measure all their hopes and expectations.

The principles for which our party fought and for which we fell in the last campaign have so aroused the public conscience, so touched the popular heart, have become so strong with the masses of the people that they have drawn to the support of the Democratic Party practically all unselfish Americans and have divided into irreconcilable factions the hitherto victorious Republian Party, which in the past triumphed by opposing them.

The Democratic Party is striving to give to all the people a government so just, with laws so righteous, that monopoly can find no hiding place and oppression no haven here; one that will make every citizen for his country a volunteer and every home a fortress against its invaders. We want to approach as nearly as possible to that ideal individualism for which republics were born, where the fruit of every man's toil can be enjoyed by his own family and every man's labor will inure to his own benefit.

NATION'S SAFETY RESTS ON EQUAL LAWS AND HONOR.

The safety and life of this Government, this free Republic, this home of constitutional liberty, rests at last not in its marching armies, nor its mighty navy, nor in its great wealth, but in its equal laws, its national honor, and in the everliving truth that above cottage, hut, and palace alike the ægis of the Constitution rests, which is the spirit of justice, the greatest attribute of God.

Great as is the honor of being President of this splendid Republic, yet the glory is not in the office, not in the fame of having held it, but in the service rendered to the people, by which the public servant is properly judged and which makes immortal the names of those who hold it.

And the people know you would not put the armor on if you did not hope and believe you would see a happier, more prosperous, and a more contented people when you take it off.

We all recognize the mighty task in front of you. Sixteen years of Republican rule have riveted the chains of monopoly, special privilege, and greed upon every field of industrial and commercial endeavor, upon every market place, upon every avenue of trade.

Trust and monopoly walk with arrogant and brutal tread, fixing with equal insolence and oppression the market of the buyer and the seller. The Republican Party has taught the trusts that it only barks and never bites. Their prosecutions against these outlaws are but a signal to play a rising market, to drive higher the value of the stocks they own, to increase the prices of articles that they sell, and to grant greater dividends to those who are interested in them.

WANT PRESIDENT WHO CAN PROSECUTE MALEFACTORS.

The people call for a President and they believe they have found him in you, who will not alone proceed in chancery against these men who defy the laws, oppress the people, drive men, women, and children to desperation by reason of hunger and deny them the necessaries of life by monopolistic prices; one who will demand that the stripes of the felon shall be placed upon them; one who will give a vigorous and genuine Democratic people's rule enforcement to the criminal laws against malefactors of great wealth.

It will take a giant for this task, a hero's heart, a soldier's courage. Democracy looked this Republic over, and with millions to choose from selected you as the man. No general ever commanded in a greater contest, the successful outcome of which will be prolific of so much good, or failure fraught with so much disaster. The people will be with you. They are going to give you a Congress in sympathy with our cause, which will stand ready to aid you in all patriotic endeavor. The struggling masses everywhere, the toilers in field, shop, and factory; those who make up the great electorate, will stand with you in this contest.

The Democratic Party is the friend of honest business, whether the business be big or little, and is striving to make it impossible for criminal business to destroy legitimate business and oppress the people. The party which held that you had the right by law to tax all the people to give a profit to the favored few, which was the utterance of the Republican national platform of 1908, undertook to put in operation in their convention system the same principle by the committee on credentials giving a majority of votes to one of the candidates which had been taken away from another in order that he might profit by having the nomination.

FOUND GREAT PLEASURE IN USE OF COMMANDMENT.

And yet some of those who have been playing this system for the benefit of the special and favored few at the expense of the American people immediately severed their connection with the Republican Party, and in their distress, defeat, and dismay went to that book which offers a remedy for every wrong, balm for every sorrow, and found to their surprise and delight a commandment uttered centuries ago, "Thou shalt not steal."

This is not new doctrine to our party. We have heard it and demanded its application long ago, not only to conventions, but to the beneficiaries of convention platforms, to tariff taxes, to trusts and monopolies, the legitimate offspring of the protective-tariff system; and if the Republican convention held at Chicago had no other virtue, it caused some of the participants to read the Ten Commandments.

That principle which has divided the Republican Party upon practical application in convention proceedings has caused the American people to come to the Democratic Party, which says, "Thou shalt not steal by taxation, thou shalt not commission trusts and monopolies to steal by taxation," and the American people are allying themselves as never before with this party, which believes that a tax is a governmental agency and can be used only for governmental purposes and collected by the Government itself, and not farmed out to favor-seeking and special-privileged classes.

The American people demand the extirpation of trusts and monopolies, not the plucking of a blossom here and yonder, but that the ax shall be laid at the very root of the tree of special privilege. They demand the application of a just system of taxation that shall meet the immediate and reasonable needs of the Government administered in economy and honesty, that no tax shall be laid either to protect monopoly or to allow them to plunder the people.

TARIFF OUT OF POLITICS AND HANDS FROM POCKETS.

And in answer to the tariff trust-fed barons, who are demanding that the tariff shall be taken out of politics, when they have secured rates higher than ever before, hiding behind each one of them a monopoly that feeds upon labor's toil, we answer and say we will take the tariff out of politics when they take their larcenous hands out the pockets of the American people.

If elected, as now seems assured, it is our hope and belief that your name and administration will be embalmed in the hearts of the people, and that history may record the great truth that you found your country with all the avenues of commerce, the arteries of trade, in the grasp of vicious monopoly, and that you left it free, untrammeled, unshackled by law-protected greed, and no longer dominated by privilege; that you, through your powerful talents and great genius, cast off the monopolies that hold chained the commerce of the country; that you resisted the desperate stand of those money-changers and did so in triumph.

A former President charges the present President with being friendly with certain trusts and failure to prosecute them; the present President charges the former President with being friendly with certain other trusts and failure to prosecute them. I have carefully examined the record of both of their administrations and I am entirely unable to find anything upon which to base a denial of either of their statements.

What the people want, what they demand, is a President who will enforce the law to the utmost letter and prosecute all trusts; not one who is friendly with some and unfriendly with others, but a President friendly to the people and friendly to the law, and unfriendly to no legitimate business. One who will draw the sword of justice and law against all monopoly. For they know the cost of living can not be reduced, relief can not come to the people unless monopoly is destroyed.

The people demand something more than a President who is friendly with the good trusts—which usually means those that divide their loot of the people with their campaign managers—and unfriendly with the bad trusts, generally those that refuse to contribute freely.

KNOW HOW INDUSTRIAL PIRATES HAVE THRIVED.

The people know that all these industrial pirates and monopolistic cormorants have grown up and have been fostered and encouraged by the Republican Party during its control of the Government.

The cost of living has increased enormously during this time; wages have practically stood still. No relief has come to the people, but we are told by the Republican Party that if they are given further control of the Government they will do in the future what they have failed to do in the 16 years of the past—destroy their own creation.

When the Democratic Party passed tariff-reduction measures, so just that the Senate, controlled by the opposition party, could not resist their passage, offering to the people cheaper clothes, to the farmer and laborer cheaper implements with which to toil, cheaper meat and bread to the hungry, reducing the cost of living greatly, privilege made its last desperate stand in the White House and won, by reason of the President's veto of these righteous measures.

The American people desire to turn the White House from a bulwark of privilege into a fortress of justice to the people. The people want one in control there who will not resist the people's will, but who will lead the fight upon their behalf.

NEW JERSEY IN GLORY OF SELF-GOVERNMENT.

New Jersey, two years ago, was one of the most unprogressive States in the Union. Special privilege was strongly intrenched; public-service agencies had become the masters of the people; labor was burdened by laws not only archaic but oppressive; ballot reform was greatly needed; boss rule had both parties by the throat. The people of the great State were themselves really progressive; they wanted a voice to speak for them, a real fighter for the people's rule.

They selected you for this mighty task, nominated upon a platform calling for justice to the people. You were elected by them as their governor. Now we behold New Jersey in the majesty and glory of self-government. In less than two years your master mind, your splendid leadership, your love of the people's rule, your belief that platform promises were to be faithfully carried out, a real bond of honor between the party and the people, broke the chains that bound New Jersey and she stands to-day the redeemed Commonwealth.

The other States of the Union watched your struggle to free the people here and now they are ready to call you to do for the whole Nation what you did for a single State, deliver the Government into the hands of the people.

A committee composed of the permanent chairman of the convention and one delegate from each State and Territory was appointed to inform you of your selection as the nominee of the Democratic Party for President of the United States, and to request you to accept it, and the convention did me the honor to make me the chairman of this committee, charged with such a happy mission.

Therefore, in compliance with the command of that convention, this committee performs that pleasing duty, and as the appointed agent of that great national convention I hand you this formal letter of notification signed by the members of the notification committee, accompanied by a copy of the platform adopted by the convention, and upon that platform I have the honor to request your acceptance of the tendered nomination. And upon behalf of the Democrats of the whole Republic, who are united, aggressive, and militant, we pledge you their united and earnest support, and may God guide you to a glorious victory in November.

GOV. WILSON'S SPEECH OF ACCEPTANCE.

Mr. JAMES and gentlemen of the notification committee: Speaking for the Democratic national convention, recently assembled at Baltimore, you have notified me of my nomination by the Democratic Party for the high office of President of the United States. Allow me to thank you very warmly for the generous terms in which you have, through your distinguished chairman, conveyed the notification, and for the thoughtful personal courtesy with which you have performed your interesting and important errand.

I accept the nominatiion with a deep sense of its unusual significance and of the great honor done me, and also with a very profound sense of my responsibility to the party and to the Nation. You will expect me in accepting the honor to speak very plainly the faith that is in me. You will expect me, in brief, to talk politics and open the campaign in words whose meaning no one need doubt. You will expect me to speak to the country as well as to yourselves.

We can not intelligently talk politics unless we know to whom we are talking and in what circumstances. The present circumstances are clearly unusual. No previous political campaign in our time has disclosed anything like them. The audience we address is in no ordinary temper. It is no audience of partisans. Citizens of every class and party and prepossession sit together, a single people, to learn whether we understand their life and know how to afford them the counsel and guidance they are now keenly aware that they stand in need of. We must speak, not to catch votes, but to satisfy the thought and conscience of a people deeply stirred by the conviction that they have come to a critical turning point in their moral and political development.

IN PRESENCE OF AN AWAKENED NATION.

We stand in the presence of an awakened Nation, impatient of partisan make-believe. The public man who does not realize the fact and feel its stimulation must be singularly unsusceptible to the influences that stir in every quarter about him. The Nation has awakened to a sense of neglected ideals and neglected duties; to a consciousness that the rank and file of her people find life very hard to sustain, that her young men find opportunity embarrassed, and that her older men find business difficult to renew and maintain because of circumstances of privilege and private advantage which have interlaced their subtle threads throughout almost every part of the framework of our present law. She has awakened to the knowledge that she has lost certain cherished liberties and has wasted priceless resources which she had solemnly undertaken to hold in trust for posterity and for all mankind; and to the conviction that she stands confronted with an occasion for constructive statesmanship such as has not arisen since the great days in which her Government was set up.

Plainly it is a new age. The tonic of such a time is very exhilarating. It requires self-restraint not to attempt too much, and yet it would be cowardly to attempt too little. The path of duty soberly and bravely trod is the way to service and distinction, and many adventurous feet seek to set out upon it.

There never was a time when impatience and suspicion were more keenly aroused by private power selfishly employed; when jealousy of everything concealed or touched with any purpose not linked with general good, or inconsistent with it, more sharply or immediately displayed itself.

Nor was the country ever more susceptible to unselfish appeals or to the high arguments of sincere justice. These are the unmistakable symptoms of an awakening. There is the more need for wise counsel because the people are so ready to heed counsel if it be given honestly and in their interest.

GREAT QUESTIONS OF RIGHT AND JUSTICE.

It is in the broad light of this new day that we stand face to face—with what? Plainly not with questions of party, not with a contest for office, not with a petty struggle for advantage, Democrat against Republican, liberal against conservative, progressive against reactionary. With great questions of right and of justice, rather—questions of national development, of the development of character and of standards of action no less than of a better business system, more free, more equitable, more open to ordinary men, practicable to live under, tolerable to work under, or a better fiscal system whose taxes shall not come out of the pockets of the many to go into the pockets of the few, and within whose intricacies special privilege may not so easily find covert. The forces of the Nation are asserting themselves against every form of special privilege and private control, and are seeking bigger things than they have ever heretofore achieved. They are sweeping away what is unrighteous in order to vindicate once more the essential rights of human life; and, what is very serious for us, they are looking to us for guidance, disinterested guidance, at once honest and fearless.

At such a time, and in the presence of such circumstances, what is the meaning of our platform, and what is our responsibility under it? What are our duty and our purpose? The platform is meant to show that we know what the Nation is thinking about, what it is most concerned about, what it wishes corrected, and what it desires to see attained that is new and constructive and intended for its long future. But for us it is a very practical document. We are not about to ask the people of the United States to adopt our platform; we are about to ask them to intrust us with office and power and the guidance of their affairs. They will wish to know what sort of men we are and of what definite purpose; what translation of action and of policy we intend to give to the general terms of the platform which the convention at Baltimore put forth, should we be elected.

The platform is not a program. A program must consist of measures, administrative acts, and acts of legislation. The proof of the pudding is the eating thereof. How do we intend to make it edible and digestible? From this time on we shall be under interrogation. How do we expect to handle each of the great matters that must be taken up by the next Congress and the next administration?

RULE OF JUSTICE FOR TARIFF AND TRUSTS.

What is there to do? It is hard to sum the great task up, but apparently this is the sum of the matter: There are two great things to do. One is to set up the rule of justice and of right in such matters as the tariff, the regulation of the trusts, and the prevention of monopoly, the adaptation of our banking and currency laws to the various uses to which our people must put them, the treatment of those who do the daily labor in our factories and mines and throughout all our great industrial and commercial undertakings, and the political life of the people of the Philippines, for whom we hold governmental power in trust, for their service, not our own. The other, the additional duty, is the great task of protecting our people and our resources and of keeping open to the whole people the doors of opportunity through which they must, generation by generation, pass if they are to make conquest of their fortunes in health, freedom, in peace, and in contentment. In the performance of this second great duty we are face to face with questions of conservation and of development, questions of forests and water powers and mines and waterways, of the building of an adequate merchant marine, and the opening of every highway and facility and the setting up of every safeguard needed by a great, industrious, expanding nation.

These are all great matters upon which everybody should be heard. We have got into trouble in recent years chiefly because these large things, which ought to have been handled by taking counsel with as large a number of persons as possible, because they touched every interest and the life of every class and region, have, in fact, been too often handled in private conference. They have been settled by very small, and often deliberately exclusive, groups of men who undertook to speak for the whole Nation, or rather for themselves in the terms of the whole Nation—very honestly, it may be true, but very ignorantly sometimes, and very shortsightedly, too—a poor substitute for genuine common counsel. No group of directors, economic or political, can speak for a people. They have neither the point of view nor the knowledge. Our difficulty is not that wicked and designing men have plotted against us, but that our common affairs have been determined upon too narrow a view, and by too private an initiative. Our task now is to effect a great readjustment and get the forces of the whole people once more into play. We need no revolution; we need no excited change; we need only a new point of view and a new method and spirit of counsel.

NATION HAS BEEN AT WAR WITHIN ITSELF.

We are servants of the people, the whole people. The Nation has been unnecessarily, unreasonably, at war within itself. Interest has clashed with interest when there were common principles of right and of fair dealing which might and should have bound them all together, not as rivals, but as partners. As the servants of all we are bound to undertake the great duty of accommodation and adjustment.

We can not undertake it except in a spirit which some find it hard to understand. Some people only smile when you speak of yourself as a servant of the people; it seems to them like affectation or mere demagoguery. They ask what the unthinking crowd knows or comprehends of great complicated matters of government. They shrug their shoulders and lift their eyebrows when you speak as if you really believed in presidential primaries, in the direct election of United States Senators, and in an utter publicity about everything that concerns government, from the sources of campaign funds to the intimate debate of the higher affairs of State.

They do not, or will not, comprehend the solemn thing that is in your thought. You know as well as they do that there are all sorts and conditions of men—the unthinking mixed with the wise, the reckless with the prudent, the unscrupulous with the fair and honest—and you know what they sometimes forget, that every class without exception affords a sample of the mixture, the learned and the fortunate no less than the uneducated and the struggling mass. But you see more than they do. You see that these multitudes of men, mixed, of every kind and quality, constitute somehow an organic and noble whole, a single people, and that they have interests which no man can privately determine without their knowledge and counsel. That is the meaning of representative government itself. Representative government is nothing more or less than an effort to give voice to this great body through spokesmen chosen out of every grade and class.

TARIFF HAS BEEN POLITICS INSTEAD OF BUSINESS.

You may think that I am wandering off into a general disquisition that has little to do with the business in hand, but I am not. This is business—business of the deepest sort. It will solve our difficulties if you will but take it as business.

See how it makes business out of the tariff question. The tariff question, as dealt with in our time at any rate, has not been business. It has been politics. Tariff schedules have been made up for the purpose of keeping as large a number as possible of the rich and influential manufacturers of the country in a good humor with the Republican Party, which desired their constant financial support. The tariff has become a system of favors, which the phraseology of the schedule was often deliberately contrived to conceal. It becomes a matter of business, of legitimate business, only when the partnership and understanding it represents is between the leaders of Congress and the whole people of the United States, instead of between the leaders of Congress and small groups of manufacturers demanding special recognition and consideration. That is why the general idea of representative government becomes a necessary part of the tariff question. Who, when you come down to the hard facts of the matter, have been represented in recent years when our tariff schedules were being discussed and determined, not on the floor of Congress, for that is not where they have been determined, but in the committee rooms and conferences? That is the heart of the whole affair. Will you, can you, bring the whole people into the partnership or not? No one is discontented with representative government; it falls under question only when it ceases to be representative. It is at bottom a question of good faith and morals.

TARIFF HAS BEEN USED TO FOSTER SPECIAL PRIVILEGE.

How does the present tariff look in the light of it? I say nothing for the moment about the policy of protection, conceived and carried out as a disinterested statesman might conceive it. Our own clear conviction as Democrats is that in the last analysis the only safe and legitimate object of tariff duties, as of taxes of every other kind, is to raise revenue for the support of the Government; but that is not my present point. We denounce the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act as the most conspicuous example ever afforded the country of the special favors and monopolistic advantages which the leaders of the Republican Party have so often shown themselves willing to extend to those to whom they looked for campaign contributions. Tariff duties as they have employed them have not been a means of setting up an equitable system of protection. They have been, on the contrary, a method of fostering special privilege. They have made it easy to establish monopoly in our domestic markets. Trusts have owed their origin and their secure power to them. The economic freedom of our people, our prosperity in trade, our untrammeled energy in manufacture depend upon their reconsideration from top to bottom in an entirely different spirit.

We do not ignore the fact that the business of a country like ours is exceedingly sensitive to changes in legislation of this kind. It has been built up, however inadvisedly, upon tariff schedules written in the way I have indicated, and its foundations must not be too radically or too suddenly disturbed. When we act, we should act with caution and prudence, like men who know what they are about, and not like those in love with a theory. It is obvious that the changes we make should be made only at such a rate and in such a way as will least interfere with the normal and healthful course of commerce and manufacture. But we shall not on that account act with timidity, as if we did not know our own minds, for we are certain of our ground and of our object. There should be an immediate revision, and it should be downward, unhesitatingly and steadily downward.

DUTIES MUST BE REVISED TO END SPECIAL FAVORS.

It should begin with the schedules which have been most obviously used to kill competition to raise prices in the United States, arbitrarily and without regard to the prices pertaining elsewhere in the markets of the world; and it should, before it is finished or intermitted, be extended to every item in every schedule which affords any opportunity for monopoly, for special advantage to limited groups of beneficiaries, or for subsidized control of any kind in the markets or the enterprises of the country; until special favors of every sort shall have been absolutely withdrawn and every part of our laws of taxation shall have been transformed from a system of governmental patronage into a system of just and reasonable charges which shall fall where they will create the least burden. When we shall have done that, we can fix questions of revenue and of business adjustment in a new spirit and with clear minds. We shall then be partners with all the business men of the country, and a day of freer, more stable property shall have dawned.

There has been no more demoralizing influence in our politics in our time than the influence of tariff legislation, the influence of the idea that the Government was the grand dispenser of favors, the maker and unmaker of fortunes and of opportunities such as certain men have sought in order to control the movement of trade and industry throughout the continent. It has made the Government a prize to be captured and parties the means of effecting the capture. It has made the business men of one of the most virile and enterprising nations of the world timid, fretful, full of alarms; has robbed them of self-confidence and manly force, until they have cried out that they could do nothing without the assistance of the Government at Washington. It has made them feel that their lives depended upon the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate (in these later years particularly the Finance Committee of the Senate). They have insisted very anxiously that these committees should be made up only of their "friends"; until the country in its turn grew suspicious and wondered how those committees were being guided and controlled, by what influences and plans of personal advantage. Government can not be wholesomely conducted in such an atmosphere. Its very honesty is in jeopardy. Favors are never conceived in the general interest; they are always for the benefit of the few, and the few who seek and obtain them have only themselves to blame if presently they seem to be contemned and distrusted.

MAJORITY POORER, THOUGH WAGES HAVE INCREASED.

For what has the result been? Prosperity? Yes, if by prosperity you mean vast wealth, no matter how distributed, or whether distributed at all, or not; if you mean vast enterprises built up to be presently concentrated under the control of comparatively small bodies of men, who can determine almost at pleasure whether there shall be competition or not. The Nation as a nation has grown immensely rich. She is justly proud of her industries and of the genius of her men of affairs. They can master anything they set their minds to, and we have been greatly stimulated under their leadership and command. Their laurels are many and very green. We must accord them the great honors that are due and we must preserve what they have built up for us. But what of the other side of the picture? It is not as easy for us to live as it used to be. Our money will not buy as much. High wages, even when we can get them, yield us no great comfort. We used to be better off with less because a dollar could buy so much more. The majority of us have been disturbed to find ourselves growing poorer, even though our earnings were slowly increasing. Prices climb faster than we can push our earnings up.

Moreover, we begin to perceive some things about the movement of prices that concern us very deeply, and fix our attention upon the tariff schedules with a more definite determination than ever to get to the bottom of this matter. We have been looking into it, at trials held under the Sherman Act and in investigations in the committee rooms of Congress, where men who wanted to know the real facts have been busy with inquiry; and we begin to see very clearly what at least some of the methods are by which prices are fixed. We know that they are not fixed by the competitions of the market or by the ancient law of supply and demand which is to be found stated in all the primers of economics, but by private arrangements with regard to what the supply should be and agreements among the producers themselves. Those who buy are not even represented by counsel. The high cost of living is arranged by private understanding.

LEGISLATION THAT HAS BEEN MADE FOR THE FEW.

We naturally ask ourselves, How did these gentlemen get control of these things? Who handed our economic laws over to them for legislative and contractual alteration? We have in these disclosures still another view of the tariff, still another proof that not the people of the United States but only a very small number of them have been partners in that legislation. Those few have learned how to control tariff legislation, and as they have perfected their control they have consolidated their interests. Men of the same interest have drawn together, have united their enterprises and have formed trusts; and trusts can control prices. Up to a certain point (and only up to a certain point) great combinations effect great economies in administration, and increase efficiency by simplifying and perfecting organization; but whether they effect economies or not, they can very easily determine prices by intimate agreement so soon as they come to control a sufficient percentage of the product in any great line of business; and we know that they do.

I am not drawing up an indictment against anybody. That is the natural history of such tariffs as are now contrived, as it is the natural history of all other governmental favors and of all licenses to use the Government to help certain groups of individuals along in life. Nobody in particular, I suppose, is to blame, and I am not interested just now in blaming anybody. I am simply trying to point out what the situation is, in order to suggest what there is for us to do if we would serve the country as a whole. The fact is that the trusts have been formed, have gained all but complete control of the larger enterprises of the country, have fixed prices and fixed them high so that profits might be rolled up that were thoroughly worth while, and that the tariff, with its artificial protection and stimulations, gave them the opportunity to do these things and has safeguarded them in that opportunity.

PERIOD OF INFANT INDUSTRIES HAS PASSED.

The trusts do not belong to the period of infant industries. They are not the products of the time, that old, laborious time, when the great continent we live on was undeveloped, the young Nation struggling to find itself and get upon its feet amidst older and more experienced competitors. They belong to a very recent and very sophisticated age, when men knew what they wanted and knew how to get it by the favor of the Government. It is another chapter in the natural history of power and of "governing classes." The next chapter will set us free again. There will be no flavor of tragedy in it. It will be a chapter of readjustment, not of pain and rough disturbance. It will witness a turning back from what is abnormal to what is normal. It will see a restoration of the laws of trade, which are the laws of competition and of unhampered opportunity, under which men of every sort are set free and encouraged to enrich the Nation.

I am not one of those who think that competition can be established by law against the drift of a world-wide economic tendency; neither am I one of those who believe that business done upon a great scale by a single organization—call it corporation, or what you will—is necessarily dangerous to the liberties, even the economic liberties, of a great people like our own, full of intelligence and of indomitable energy. I am not afraid of anything that is normal. I dare say we shall never return to the old order of individual competition, and that the organization of business upon a great scale of cooperation is, up to a certain point, itself normal and inevitable.

BIG BUSINESS NOT DANGEROUS BECAUSE IT IS BIG.

Power in the hands of great business men does not make me apprehensive, unless it springs out of advantages which they have not created for themselves. Big business is not dangerous because it is big, but because its bigness is an unwholesome inflation created by privileges and exemptions which it ought not to enjoy. While competition can not be created by statutory enactment, it can in large measure be revived by changing the laws and forbidding the practices that killed it, and by enacting laws that will give it heart and occasion again. We can arrest and prevent monopoly. It has assumed new shapes and adopted new processes in our time, but these are now being disclosed and can be dealt with.

The general terms of the present Federal antitrust law, forbidding "combinations in restraint of trade," have apparently proved ineffectual. Trusts have grown up under its ban very luxuriantly and have pursued the methods by which so many of them have established virtual monopolies without serious let or hindrance. It has roared against them like any sucking dove. I am not assessing the responsibility. I am merely stating the fact. But the means and methods by which trusts have established monopolies have now become known. It will be necessary to supplement the present law with such laws, both civil and criminal, as will effectually punish and prevent those methods, adding such other laws as may be necessary to provide suitable and adequate judicial processes, whether civil or criminal, to disclose them and follow them to final verdict and judgment. They must be specifically and directly met by law as they develop.

VAST CONFEDERACIES OF BANKS AND RAILWAYS.

But the problem and the difficulty are much greater than that. There are not merely great trusts and combinations which are to be controlled and deprived of their power to create monopolies and destroy rivals; there is something bigger still than they are and more subtle, more evasive, more difficult to deal with. There are vast confederacies—as I may perhaps call them for the sake of convenience—of banks, railways, express companies, insurance companies, manufacturing corporations, mining corporations, power and development companies, and all the rest of the circle, bound together by the fact that the ownership of their stock and the members of their boards of directors are controlled and determined by comparatively small and closely interrelated groups of persons who, by their informal confederacy, may control, if they please and when they will, both credit and enterprise. There is nothing illegal about these confederacies, so far as I can perceive. They have come about very naturally, generally without plan or deliberation, rather because there was so much money to be invested, and it was in the hands, at great financial centers, of men acquainted with one another and intimately associated in business, than because anyone had conceived and was carrying out a plan of general control; but they are none the less potent a force in our economic and financial system on that account. They are part of our problem. Their very existence gives rise to the suspicion of a "money trust," a concentration of the control of credit which may at any time become infinitely dangerous to free enterprise. If such a concentration and control does not actually exist it is evident that it can easily be set up and used at will. Laws must be devised which will prevent this, if laws can be worked out by fair and free counsel that will accomplish that result without destroying or seriously embarrassing any sound or legitimate business undertaking or necessary and wholesome arrangement.

Let me say again that what we are seeking is not destruction of any kind nor the disruption of any sound or honest thing, but merely the rule of right and of the common advantage. I am happy to say that a new spirit has begun to show itself in the last year or two among influential men of business, and, what is perhaps even more significant, among the lawyers who are their expert advisers; and that this spirit has displayed itself very notably in the last few months in an effort to return, in some degree at any rate, to the practices of genuine competition. Only a very little while ago our men of business were united in resisting every proposal of change and reform as an attack on business, an embarrassment to all large enterprise, an intimation that settled ideas of property were to be set aside and a new and strange order of things created out of hand. While they thought in that way, progress seemed impossible without hot contest and a bitter clash between interests, almost a war of classes. Common counsel seemed all but hopeless, because some of the chief parties in interest would not take part; seemed even to resent discussion as a manifestation of hostility toward themselves. They talked constantly about vested interests and were very hot.

BIG BUSINESS MEN ARE SEEING THE LIGHT.

It is a happy omen that their attitude has changed. They see that what is right can hurt no man; that a new adjustment of interests is inevitable and desirable, is in the interest of everybody; that their own honor, their own intelligence, their own practical comprehension of affairs is involved. They are beginning to adjust their business to the new standards. Their hand is no longer against the Nation; they are part of it; their interests are bound up with its interests. This is not true of all of them; but it is true of enough of them to show what the new age is to be and how the anxieties of statesmen are to be eased if the light that is dawning broadens into day.

If I am right about this, it is going to be easier to act in accordance with the rule of right and justice in dealing with the labor question. The so-called labor question is a question only because we have not yet found the rule of right in adjusting the interests of labor and capital. The welfare, the happiness, the energy and spirit of the men and women who do the daily work in our mines and factories, on our railroads, in our offices and marts of trade, on our farms and on the sea, are of the essence of our national life. There can be nothing wholesome unless their life is wholesome; there can be no contentment unless they are contented. Their physical welfare affects the soundness of the whole Nation. We shall never get very far in the settlement of these vital matters so long as we regard everything done for the workingman, by law or by private agreement, as a concession yielded to keep him from agitation and a disturbance of our peace. Here, again, the sense of universal partnership must come into play if we are to act like statesmen, as those who serve, not a class, but a Nation.

FIRST REGARD MUST BE CARE OF WORKING PEOPLE.

The working people of America—if they must be distinguished from the minority that constitutes the rest of it—are, of course, the backbone of the Nation. No law that safeguards their life, that makes their hours of labor rational and tolerable, that gives them freedom to act in their own interest, and that protects them where they can not protect themselves, can properly be regarded as class legislation or as anything but as a measure taken in the interest of the whole people, whose partnership in right action we are trying to establish and make real and practical. It is in this spirit that we shall act if we are genuine spokesmen of the whole country.

As our program is disclosed—for no man can forecast it ready-made and before counsel is taken of everyone concerned—this must be its measure and standard, the interest of all concerned. For example, in dealing with the complicated and difficult question of the reform of our banking and currency laws it is plain that we ought to consult very many persons besides the bankers, not because we distrust the bankers, but because they do not necessarily comprehend the business of the country, notwithstanding they are indispensable servants of it and may do a vast deal to make it hard or easy. No mere bankers' plan will meet the requirements, no matter how honestly conceived. It should be a merchants' and farmers' plan as well, elastic in the hands of those who use it as an indispensable part of their daily business. I do not know enough about this subject to be dogmatic about it; I know only enough to be sure what the partnerships in it should be and that the control exercised over any system we may set up should be, as far as possible, a control emanating not from a single special class but from the general body and authority of the Nation itself.

WE MERELY HOLD THE PHILIPPINES IN TRUST.

In dealing with the Philippines we should not allow ourselves to stand upon any mere point of pride, as if, in order to keep countenance in the families of nations, it were necessary for us to make the same blunders of selfishness that other nations have made. We are not the owners of the Philippine Islands. We hold them in trust for the people who live in them. They are theirs, for the uses of their life. We are not even their partners. It is our duty, as trustees, to make whatever arrangement of government will be most serviceable to their freedom and development. Here, again, we are to set up the rule of justice and of right.

The rule of the people is no idle phrase; those who believe in it—as who does not that has caught the real spirit of America?—believe that there can be no rule of right without it; that right in politics is made up of the interests of everybody, and everybody should take part in the action that is to determine it. We have been keen for presidential primaries and the direct election of United States Senators, because we wanted the action of the Government to be determined by persons whom the people had actually designated as men whom they were ready to trust and follow. We have been anxious that all campaign contributions and expenditures should be disclosed to the public in fullest detail, because we regarded the influences which govern campaigns to be as much a part of the people's business as anything else connected with their Government. We are working toward a very definite object—the universal partnership in public affairs upon which the purity of politics and its aim and spirit depend.

For there is much for the partners to undertake. In the affairs of a great nation we plan and labor, not for the present only, but for the long future as well. There are great tasks of protection and conservation and development to which we have to address ourselves. Government has much more to do than merely to right wrongs and set the house in order.

WE MUST HUSBAND OUR NATURAL RESOURCES.

I do not know any greater question than that of conservation. We have been a spendthrift Nation, and now must husband what we have left. We must do more than that. We must develop, as well as preserve, our water powers and must add great waterways to the transportation facilities of the Nation, to supplement the railways within our borders as well as upon the Isthmus. We must revive our merchant marine, too, and fill the seas again with our own fleets. We must add to our present post-office service a parcel post as complete as that of any other nation. We must look to the health of our people upon every hand, as well as hearten them with justice and opportunity. This is the constructive work of government. This is the policy that has a vision and a hope and that looks to serve mankind.

There are many sides to these great matters. Conservation is easy to generalize about, but hard to particularize about wisely. Reservation is not the whole of conservation. The development of great States must not be stayed indefinitely to await a policy by which our forests and water powers can prudently be made use of. Use and development must go hand in hand. The policy we adopt must be progressive, not negative, merely, as if we did not know what to do.

With regard to the development of greater and more numerous waterways and the building up of a merchant marine, we must follow great constructive lines and not fall back upon the cheap device of bounties and subsidies. In the case of the Mississippi River, that great central artery of our trade, it is plain that the Federal Government must build and maintain the levees and keep the great waters in harness for the general use. It is plain, too, that vast sums of money must be spent to develop new waterways where trade will be most served and transportation most readily cheapened by them. Such expenditures are no largess on the part of the Government; they are national investments.

AMERICAN SHIPS MUST CARRY AMERICAN GOODS.

The question of a merchant marine turns back to the tariff again, to which all roads seem to lead, and to our registry laws, which, if coupled with the tariff, might almost be supposed to have been intended to take the American flag off the seas. Bounties are not necessary if you will but undo some of the things that have been done. Without a great merchant marine we can not take our rightful place in the commerce of the world. Merchants who must depend upon the carriers of rival mercantile nations to carry their goods to market are at a disadvantage in international trade too manifest to need to be pointed out, and our merchants will not long suffer themselves—ought not to suffer themselves—to be placed at such a disadvantage. Our industries have expanded to such a point that they will burst their jackets if they can not find a free outlet to the markets of the world, and they can not find such an outlet unless they be given ships of their own to carry their goods—ships that will go the routes they want them to go—and prefer the interests of America in their sailing orders and their equipment. Our domestic markets no longer suffice. We need foreign markets. That is another force that is going to break the tariff down. The tariff was once a bulwark; now it is a dam. For trade is reciprocal; we can not sell unless we also buy.

The very fact that we have at last taken the Panama Canal seriously in hand and are vigorously pushing it toward completion is eloquent of our reawakened interest in international trade. We are not building the canal and pouring out millions upon millions of money upon its construction merely to establish a water connection between the two coasts of the continent, important and desirable as that may be, particularly from the point of view of naval defense. It is meant to be a great international highway. It would be a little ridiculous if we should build it and then have no ships to send through it. There have been years when not a single ton of freight passed through the great Suez Canal in an American bottom, so empty are the seas of our ships and seamen. We must mean to put an end to that kind of thing or we would not be cutting a new canal at our very doors merely for the use of our men-of-war. We shall not manage the revival by the mere paltry device of tolls. We must build and buy ships in competition with the world. We can do it if we will but give ourselves leave

EDUCATION IS A PART OF CONSERVATION.

There is another duty which the Democratic Party has shown itself great enough and close enough to the people to perceive, the duty of Government to share in promoting agricultural, industrial, vocational education in every way possible within its constitutional powers. No other platform has given this intimate vision of a party's duty. The Nation can not enjoy its deserved supremacy in the markets and enterprises of the world unless its people are given the ease and effectiveness that come only with knowledge and training. Education is part of the great task of conservation, part of the task of renewal and of perfected power.

We have set ourselves a great program, and it will be a great party that carries it out. It must be a party without entangling alliances with any special interest whatever. It must have the spirit and the point of view of the new age. Men are turning away from the Republican Party, as organized under its old leaders, because they found that it was not free; that it was entangled; and they are turning to us because they deem us free to serve them. They are immensely interested, as we are, as every man who reads the signs of the time and feels the spirit of the new age is, in the new program. It is solidly based on the facts of our national life; its items are items of present business; it is what every man should wish to see done who wishes to see our present distemper made an end of and our old free cooperative life restored.

We should go into this campaign confident of only one thing—confident of what we want to do if intrusted with the Government. It is not a partisan fight we are entering upon. We are happily excused from personal attacks upon opponents and from all general indictments against the men opposed to us. The facts are patent to everybody; we do not have to prove them; the more frank among our opponents admit them. Our thinking must be constructive from start to finish. We must show that we understand the problems that confront us, and that we are soberly minded to deal with them; applying to them, not nostrums and notions, but hard sense and good courage.

IT IS A CONTEST OF PRINCIPLES.

A presidential campaign may easily degenerate into a mere personal contest and so lose its real dignity and significance. There is no indispensable man. The Government will not collapse and go to pieces if any one of the gentlemen who are seeking to be intrusted with its guidance should be left at home. But men are instruments. We are as important as the cause we represent, and in order to be important must really represent a cause. What is our cause? The people's cause. That is easy to say, but what does it mean? The common as against any particular interest whatever? Yes; but that, too, needs translation into acts and policies. We represent the desire to set up an unentangled government, a government that can not be used for private purposes, either in the field of business or in the field of politics; a government that will not tolerate the use of the organization of a great party to serve the personal aims and ambitions of any individual, and that will not permit legislation to be employed to further any private interest. It is a great conception, but I am free to serve it, as you also are. I could not have accepted a nomination which left me bound to any man or group of men. No man can be just who is not free; and no man who has to show favors ought to undertake the solemn responsibility of government in any rank or post whatever, least of all in the supreme post of President of the United States.

To be free is not necessarily to be wise. But wisdom comes with counsel, with the frank and free conference of untrammeled men united in the common interest. Should I be intrusted with the great office of President, I would seek counsel wherever it could be had upon free terms. I know the temper of the great convention which nominated me; I know the temper of the country that lay back of that convention and spoke through it. I heed with deep thankfulness the message you bring me from it. I feel that I am surrounded by men whose principles and ambitions are those of true servants of the people. I thank God and will take courage.

SPEECH OF ACCEPTANCE OF EX-PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT (S. DOC. NO. 904).

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make a similar request that the speech of ex-President Roosevelt, delivered at the Chicago Progressive convention, August 6, be printed as a public document. I will furnish a copy to the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks that the speech delivered by ex-President Roosevelt at the Chicago convention relative to his nomination to the Presidency be printed as a public document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the further request that the speech of Col. Roosevelt, which I have referred to, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks that the speech delivered by ex-President Roosevelt at Chicago, and which has been ordered printed as a public document, be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The speech referred to is as follows:

PURPOSES AND POLICIES OF THE PROGRESSIVE PARTY.

To you, men and women who have come here to this great city of this great State formally to launch a new party, a party of the people of the whole Union, the Progressive Party, I extend my hearty greeting. You are taking a bold and a greatly needed step for the service of our beloved country. The old parties are husks, with no real soul within either, divided on artificial lines, boss ridden and privilege controlled, each a jumble of incongruous elements, and neither daring to speak out wisely and fearlessly what should be said on the vital issues of the day.

This new movement is a movement of truth, sincerity, and wisdom, a movement which proposes to put at the service of all our people the collective power of the people, through their governmental agencies, alike in the Nation and in the several States.

We propose boldly to face the real and great questions of the day, and not skillfully to evade them as do the old parties. We propose to raise aloft a standard to which all honest men can repair, and under which all can fight, no matter what their past political differences, if they are content to face the future and no longer to dwell among the dead issues of the past.

We propose to put forth a platform which shall not be a platform of the ordinary and insincere kind, but shall be a contract with the people; and, if the people accept this contract by putting us in power, we shall hold ourselves under honorable obligation to fulfill every promise it contains as loyally as if it were actually enforceable under the penalties of the law.

NO HOPE FOR THE OLD PARTY MACHINES.

The prime need to-day is to face the fact that we are now in the midst of a great economic evolution. There is urgent necessity of applying both common sense and the highest ethical standard to this movement for better economic conditions among the mass of our people if we are to make it one of healthy evolution and not one of revolution. It is, from the standpoint of our country, wicked as well as foolish longer to refuse to face the real issues of the day.

Only by so facing them can we go forward; and to do this we must break up the old party organizations and obliterate the old cleavage lines on the dead issues inherited from 50 years ago.

Our fight is a fundamental fight against both of the old corrupt party machines, for both are under the dominion of the plunder league of the professional politicians, who are controlled and sustained by the great beneficiaries of privilege and reaction. How close is the alliance between the two machines is shown by the attitude of that portion of those northeastern newspapers, including the majority of the great dailies in all the northeastern cities—Boston, Buffalo, Springfield, Hartford, Philadelphia, and, above all, New York—which are controlled by or representative of the interests which, in popular phrase, are conveniently grouped together as the Wall Street interests.

The large majority of these papers supported Judge Parker for the Presidency in 1904; almost unanimously they supported Mr. Taft for the Republican nomination this year; the large majority are now supporting Prof. Wilson for the election. Some of them still prefer Mr. Taft to Mr. Wilson, but all make either Mr. Taft or Mr. Wilson their first choice; and one of the ludicrous features of the campaign is that those papers supporting Prof. Wilson show the most jealous partisanship for Mr. Taft whenever they think his interests are jeopardized by the Progressive movement—that, for instance, any electors will obey the will of the majority of the Republican voters at the primaries, and vote for me instead of obeying the will of the Messrs. Barnes-Penrose-Guggenheim combination by voting for Mr. Taft.

INTERESTS TO BEAT THE NEW PARTY.

No better proof can be given than this of the fact that the fundamental concern of the privileged interests is to beat the new party. Some of them would rather beat it with Mr. Wilson; others would rather beat it with Mr. Taft; but the difference between Mr. Wilson and Mr. Taft they consider as trivial, as a mere matter of personal preference. Their real fight is for either as against the Progressives. They represent the allied reactionaries of the country, and they are against the new party because to their unerring vision it is evident that the real danger to privilege comes from the new party, and from the new party alone.

The men who presided over the Baltimore and the Chicago conventions and the great bosses who controlled the two conventions—Mr. ROOT and Mr. Parker, Mr. Barnes and Mr. Murphy, Mr. PENROSE and Mr. Taggart, Mr. GUGGENHEIM and Mr. Sullivan—differ from one another, of course, on certain points. But these are the differences which one corporation lawyer has with another corporation lawyer when acting for different corporations. They come together at once as against a common enemy when the dominion of both is threatened by the supremacy of the people of the United States, now aroused to the need of a national alignment on the vital economic issues of this generation.

Neither the Republican nor the Democratic platform contains the slightest promise of approaching the great problems of to-day, either with understanding or good faith; and yet never was there greater need in this Nation than now of understanding, and of action taken in good faith, on the part of the men and the organizations shaping our governmental policy.

Moreover, our needs are such that there should be coherent action among those responsible for the conduct of national affairs and those responsible for the conduct of State affairs, because our aim should be the same in both State and Nation—that is, to use the Government as an efficient agency for the practical betterment of social and economic conditions throughout this land.

There are other important things to be done, but this is the most important thing. It is preposterous to leave such a movement in the hands of men who have broken their promises as have the present heads of the Republican organization—not of the Republican voters, for they in no shape represent the rank and file of Republican voters.

These men, by their deeds, give the lie to their words. There is no health in them, and they can not be trusted.

But the Democratic Party is just as little to be trusted. The Underwood-Fitzgerald combination in the House of Representatives has shown that it can not safely be trusted to maintain the interests of this country abroad or to represent the interests of the plain people at home.

The control of the various State bosses in the State organizations has been strengthened by the action at Baltimore; and scant, indeed, would be the use of exchanging the whips of Messrs. Barnes, PENROSE, and GUGGENHEIM for the scorpions of Messrs. Murphy, Taggart, and Sullivan. Finally, the Democratic platform not only shows an utter failure to understand either present conditions or the means of making these conditions better, but also a reckless willingnes to try to attract various sections of the electorate by making mutually incompatible promises which there is not the slightest intention of redeeming, and which, if redeemed, would result in sheer ruin. Farseeing patriots should turn scornfully from men who seek power on a platform which with exquisite nicety combines silly inability to understand the national needs and dishonest insincerity in promising conflicting and impossible remedies.

If this country is really to go forward along the path of social and economic justice there must be a new party of nation-wide and nonsectional principles; a party where the titular national chiefs and the real State leaders shall be in genuine accord; a party in whose counsels the people shall be supreme; a party that shall represent in the Nation and the several States alike the same cause—the cause of human rights and of governmental efficiency.

At present both the old parties are controlled by professional politicians in the interests of the privileged classes, and apparently each has set up as its ideal of business and political development a government by financial despotism, tempered by make-believe political assassination.

Democrat and Republican alike, they represent government of the needy many by professional politicians in the interests of the rich few. This is class government, and class government of a peculiarly unwholesome kind.

RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE TO RULE.

It seems to me, therefore, that the time is ripe, and overripe, for a genuine progressive movement, nation-wide and justice-loving, sprung from and responsible to the people themselves, and sundered by a great gulf from both of the old party organizations, while representing all that is best in the hopes, beliefs, and aspirations of the plain people, who make up the immense majority of the rank and file of both the old parties.

The first essential in the Progressive program is the right of the people to rule. But a few months ago our opponents were assuring us with insincere clamor that it was absurd for us to talk about desiring that the people should rule, because, as a matter of fact, the people actually do rule. Since that time the actions of the Chicago convention, and to an only less degree of the Baltimore convention, have shown in striking fashion how little the people do rule under our present conditions. We should provide by national law for Presidential primaries. We should provide for the election of United States Senators by popular vote. We should provide for a short ballot; nothing makes it harder for the people to control their public servants than to force them to vote for so many officials that they can not really keep track of any one of them, so that each becomes indistinguishable in the crowd around him.

There must be stringent and efficient corrupt-practices acts, applying to the primaries as well as the elections; and there should be publicity of campaign contributions during the campaign. We should provide throughout this Union for giving the people in every State the real right to rule themselves and really and not nominally to control their public servants and their agencies for doing the public business, an incident of this being giving the people the right themselves to do this public business if they find it impossible to get what they desire through the existing agencies.

NO COMMUNITY HAS RIGHT TO DICTATE.

I do not attempt to dogmatize as to the machinery by which this end should be achieved. In each community it must be shaped so as to correspond not merely with the needs but with the customs and ways of thought of that community, and no community has a right to dictate to any other in this matter.

But wherever representative government has in actual fact become nonrepresentative there the people should secure to themselves the initiative, the referendum, and the recall, doing it in such fashion as to make it evident that they do not intend to use these instrumentalities wantonly or frequently, but to hold them ready for use in order to correct the misdeeds or failures of the public servants when it has become evident that these misdeeds and failures can not be corrected in ordinary and normal fashion.

The administrative officer should be given full power, for otherwise he can not do well the people's work; and the people should be given full power over him.

I do not mean that we shall abandon representative government; on the contrary, I mean that we shall devise methods by which our Government shall become really representative. To use such measures as the initiative, referendum, and recall indiscriminately and promiscuously on all kinds of occasions would undoubtedly cause disaster; but events have shown that at present our institutions are not representative—at any rate in many States, and sometimes in the Nation—and that we can not wisely afford to let this condition of things remain longer uncorrected.

We have permitted the growing up of a breed of politicians who, sometimes for improper political purposes, sometimes as a means of serving the great special interests of privilege which stand behind them, twist so-called representative institutions into a means of thwarting instead of expressing the deliberate and well-thought-out judgment of the people as a whole. This can not be permitted. We choose our Representatives for two purposes. In the first place, we choose them with the desire that as experts they shall study certain matters with which we, the people as a whole, can not be intimately acquainted, and that as regards these matters they shall formulate a policy for our betterment.

SHOULD HAVE RIGHT TO VOTE DISAPPROVAL.

Even as regards such a policy and the actions taken thereunder, we ourselves should have the right ultimately to vote our disapproval of it, if we feel such disapproval. But, in the next place, our Representatives are chosen to carry out certain policies as to which we have definitely made up our minds, and here we expect them to represent us by doing what we have decided ought to be done.

All I desire to do by securing more direct control of the governmental agents and agencies of the people is to give the people the chance to make their Representatives really represent them whenever the Government becomes misrepresentative instead of representative.

I have not come to this way of thinking from closet study or as a mere matter of theory; I have been forced to it by a long experience with the actual conditions of our political life.

A few years ago, for instance, there was very little demand in this country for presidential primaries. There would have been no demand now if the politicians had really endeavored to carry out the will of the people as regards nominations for President. But, largely under the influence of special privilege in the business world, there have arisen castes of politicians who not only do not represent the people, but who make their bread and butter by thwarting the wishes of the people.

This is true of the bosses of both political parties in my own State of New York, and it is just as true of the bosses of one or the other political party in a great many States of the Union. The power of the people must be made supreme within the several party organizations.

RESORTED TO THIEVERY TO CARRY POINT.

In the contest which culminated six weeks ago in this city I speedily found that my chance was at a minimum in any State where I could not get an expression of the people themselves in the primaries. I found that if I could appeal to the rank and file of the Republican voters I could generally win; whereas if I had to appeal to the political caste—which includes the most noisy defenders of the old system—I generally lost. Moreover, I found, as a matter of fact, not as a matter of theory, that these politicians habitually and unhesitatingly resort to every species of mean swindling and cheating in order to carry their point. It is because of the general recognition of this fact that the words "politics" and "politicians" have grown to have a sinister meaning throughout this country.

The bosses and their agents in the national Republican convention at Chicago treated political theft as a legitimate political weapon.

It is instructive to compare the votes of States where there were open primaries and the votes of States where there were not. In Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Ohio we had direct primaries and the Taft machine was beaten two to one. Between and bordering on these States were Michigan, Indiana, and Kentucky. In these States we could not get direct primaries, and the politicians elected two delegates to our one. In the first three States the contests were absolutely open, absolutely honest. The rank and file expressed their wishes and there was no taint of fraud about what they did. In the other three States the contest was marked by every species of fraud and violence on the part of our opponents, and half the Taft delegates in the Chicago convention from these States had tainted titles.

The entire Wall Street press at this moment is vigorously engaged in denouncing the direct primary system and upholding the old convention system, or, as they call it, the "old representative system."

They are so doing because they know that the bosses and the powers of special privilege have tenfold the chance under the convention system that they have when the rank and file of the people can express themselves at the primaries.

NOMINATION OF TAFT GAINED BY FRAUD.

The nomination of Mr. Taft at Chicago was a fraud upon the rank and file of the Republican Party; it was obtained only by defrauding the rank and file of the party of their right to express their choice, and such fraudulent action does not bind a single honest member of the party.

Well, what the national committee and the fraudulent majority of the national convention did at Chicago in misrepresenting the people has been done again and again in Congress, perhaps especially in the Senate, and in the State legislatures. Again and again laws demanded by the people have been refused to the people because the representatives of the people misrepresented them.

Now, my proposal is merely that we shall give to the people the power, to be used not wantonly but only in exceptional cases, themselves to see to it that the governmental action taken in their name is really the action that they desire.

The American people and not the courts are to determine their own fundamental policies. The people should have power to deal with the effect of the acts of all their governmental agencies. This must be extended to include the effects of judicial acts as well as the acts of the Executive and legislative representatives of the people.

Where the judge merely does justice as between man and man, not dealing with constitutional questions, then the interest of the public is only to see that he is a wise and upright judge.

Means should be devised for making it easier than at present to get rid of an incompetent judge; means should be devised by the bar and the bench, acting in conjunction with the various legislative bodies, to make justice far more expeditious and more certain than at present. The stick-in-the-bark legalism, the legalism that subordinates equity to technicalities, should be recognized as a potent enemy of justice.

SHOULD NOT BE ABOVE PEOPLE'S CONTROL.

But this is not the matter of most concern at the moment. Our prime concern is that in dealing with the fundamental law of the land, in assuming finally to interpret it, and therefore finally to make it, the acts of the courts should be subject to and not above the final control of the people as a whole. I deny that the American people have surrendered to any set of men, no matter what their position or their character, the final right to determine those fundamental questions upon which free self-government ultimately depends.

The people themselves must be the ultimate makers of their own Constitution, and where their agents differ in their interpretations of the Constitution the people themselves should be given the chance, after full and deliberate judgment, authoritatively to settle what interpretaion it is that their representatives shall thereafter adopt as binding.

Whenever in our constitutional system of government there exist general prohibitions that, as interpreted by the courts, nullify, or may be used to nullify, specific laws passed, and admittedly passed, in the interest of social justice, we are for such immediate law, or amendment to the Constitution, if that be necessary, as will thereafter permit a reference to the people of the public effect of such decision, under forms securing full deliberation, to the end that the specific act of the legislative branch of the Government thus judicially nullified, and such amendments therof as come within its scope and purpose, may constitutionally be excepted by vote of the people from the general prohibitions, the same as if that particular act had been expressly excepted when the prohibition was adopted.

This will necessitate the establishment of machinery for making much easier of amendment both the national and the several State constitutions, especially with the view of prompt action on certain judicial decisions—action as specific and limited as that taken by the passage of the eleventh amendment to the National Constitution.

DECRYING OF COURTS ENACTED AT CHICAGO.

We are not in this decrying the courts. That was reserved for the Chicago convention in its plank respecting impeachment. Impeachment implies the proof of dishonesty. We do not question the general honesty of the courts. But in applying to present-day social conditions the general prohibitions that were intended originally as safeguards to the citizen against the arbitrary power of government in the hands of caste and privilege, these prohibitions have been turned by the courts from safeguards against political and social justice and advancement.

Our purpose is not to impugn the courts, but to emancipate them from a position where they stand in the way of social justice, and to emancipate the people, in an orderly way, from the iniquity of enforced submission to a doctrine which would turn constitutional provisions which were intended to favor social justice and advancement into prohibitions against such justice and advancement.

We in America have peculiar need thus to make the acts of the courts subject to the people, because, owing to causes which I need not now discuss, the courts have here grown to occupy a position unknown in any other country, a position of superiority over both the legislature and the executive. Just at this time, when we have begun in this country to move toward social and industrial betterment and true industrial democracy, this attitude on the part of the courts is of grave portent, because privilege has intrenched itself in many courts, just as it formerly intrenched itself in many legislative bodies and in many executive offices. Even in England, where the constitution is based upon the theory of the supremacy of the legislative body over the courts, the cause of democracy has at times been hampered by court action.

QUOTES FROM BOOK OF ENGLISH LIBERAL.

In a recent book by a notable English Liberal leader, L. T. Hobhouse, there occurs the following sentences dealing with this subject:

> Labor itself had experienced the full brunt of the attack. It had come, not from the politicians, but from the judges; but in this country we have to realize that within wide limits the judges are, in effect, legislators, and legislators with a certain persistent bent which can be held in check only by the constant vigilance and repeated efforts of the recognized organ for the making and repeal of law.

It thus appears that even in England it is necessary to exercise vigilance in order to prevent reactionary thwarting of the popular will by courts that are subject to the power of the legislature.

In the United States, where the courts are supreme over the legislature, it is vital that the people should keep in their own hands the right of interpreting their own Constitution when their public servants differ as to the interpretation.

I am well aware that every upholder of privilege, every hired agent or beneficiary of the special interests, including many well-meaning parlor reformers, will denounce all this as "Socialism" or "anarchy"—the same terms they used in the past in denouncing the movements to control the railways and to control public utilities.

As a matter of fact, the propositions I make constitute neither anarchy nor Socialism, but, on the contrary, a corrective to Socialism and an antidote to anarchy.

JUSTICE TO WAGEWORKERS.

I especially challenge the attention of the people to the need of dealing in far-reaching fashion with our human resources, and therefore our labor power. In a century and a quarter as a Nation the American people have subdued and settled the vast reaches of a continent; ahead lies the greater task of building upon this foundation, by themselves, for themselves, and with themselves, an American Commonwealth which in its social and economic structure shall be foursquare with democracy.

With England striving to make good the human wreckage to which a scrap-heap scheme of industrialism has relegated her, with Germany putting the painstaking resources of an empire at the work of developing her crafts and industrial sciences, with the Far East placing in the hands of its millions the tools invented and fashioned by Western civilization, it behooves Americans to keep abreast of the great industrial changes and to show that the people themselves, through popular self-government, can meet an age of crisis with wisdom and strength.

In the last 20 years an increasing percentage of our people have come to depend on industry for their livelihood, so that to-day the wageworkers in industry rank in importance side by side with the tillers of the soil.

As a people we can not afford to let any group of citizens or any individual citizen live or labor under conditions which are injurious to the common welfare.

Industry, therefore, must submit to such public regulation as will make it a means of life and health, not of death or inefficiency. We must protect the crushable elements at the base of our present industrial structure.

FIRST CHARGE ON INDUSTRIAL STATESMANSHIP.

The first charge on the industrial statesmanship of the day is to prevent human waste. The dead weight of orphanage and depleted craftsmanship, of crippled workers and workers suffering from trade diseases, of casual labor, of insecure old age, and of household depletion due to industrial conditions are, like our depleted soils, our gashed mountain sides and flooded river bottoms, so many strains upon the national structure, draining the reserve strength of all industries and showing beyond all peradventure the public element and public concern in industrial health.

Ultimately we desire to use the Government to aid, as far as can safely be done, in helping the industrial tool users to become in part tool owners, just as our farmers now are. Ultimately the Government may have to join more efficiently than at present in strengthening the hands of the workingmen who already stand at a high level industrially and socially and who are able by joint action to serve themselves. But the most pressing and immediate need is to deal with the cases of those who are on the level, and who are not only in need themselves, but, because of their need, tend to jeopardize the welfare of those who are better off.

We hold that under no industrial order, in no Commonwealth, in no trade, and in no establishment should industry be carried on under conditions inimical to the social welfare.

The abnormal, ruthless spendthrift industry or establishment tends to drag down all to the level of the least considerate.

SHOULD PLACE BEYOND QUIBBLE AND DISPUTE.

Here the sovereign responsibility of the people as a whole should be placed beyond all quibble and dispute.

The public needs have been well summarized as follows:

1. We hold that the public has a right to complete knowledge of the facts of work.
2. On the basis of these facts and with the recent discoveries of physicians and neurologists, engineers, and economists, the public can formulate minimum occupational standards below which, demonstrably, work can be prosecuted only at a human deficit.
3. In the third place, we hold that all industrial conditions which fall below such standards should come within the scope of governmental action and control in the same way that subnormal sanitary conditions are subject to public regulation and for the same reason—because they threaten the general welfare.

To the first end, we hold that the constituted authorities should be empowered to require all employers to file with them for public purposes such wage scales and other data as the public element in industry demands. The movement for honest weights and measures has its counterpart in industry All tallies, scales, and check systems should be open to public inspection and inspection of committees of the workers concerned. All deaths, injuries, and diseases due to industrial operation should be reported to public authorities.

WOULD ESTABLISH WAGE COMMISSIONS.

To the second end, we hold that minimum wage commissions should be established in the Nation and in each State to inquire into wages paid in various industries and to determine the standard which the public ought to sanction as a minimum; and we believe that, as a present installment of what we hope for in the future, there should be at once established in the Nation and its several States minimum standards for the wages of women, taking the present Massachusetts law as a basis from which to start and on which to improve.

We pledge the Federal Government to an investigation of industries along the lines pursued by the Bureau of Mines, with the view to establishing standards of sanitation and safety; we call for the standardization of mine and factory inspection by interstate agreement or the establishment of a Federal standard.

We stand for the passage of legislation in the Nation and in all States providing standards of compensation for industrial accidents and death, and for diseases clearly due to the nature of conditions of industry, and we stand for the adoption by law of a fair standard of compensation for casualties resulting fatally which shall clearly fix the minimum compensation in all cases.

In the third place, certain industrial conditions fall clearly below the levels which the public to-day sanction.

We stand for a living wage. Wages are subnormal if they fail to provide a living for those who devote their time and energy to industrial occupations.

The monetary equivalent of a living wage varies according to local conditions, but must include enough to secure the elements of a normal standard of living—a standard high enough to make morality possible, to provide for education and recreation, to care for immature members of the family, to maintain the family during periods of sickness, and to permit of reasonable saving for old age.

WOULD PROHIBIT CHILD LABOR.

Hours are excessive if they fail to afford the worker sufficient time to recuperate and return to his work thoroughly refreshed. We hold that the night labor of women and children is abnormal and should be prohibited; we hold that the employment of women over 48 hours per week is abnormal and should be prohibited.

We hold that the seven-day working week is abnormal, and we hold that one day of rest in seven should be provided by law.

We hold that the continuous industries, operating 24 hours out of 24, are abnormal, and where, because of public necessity or of technical reasons—such as molten metal—the 24 hours must be divided into 2 shifts of 12 hours or 3 shifts of 8, they should by law be divided into 3 of 8.

Safety conditions are abnormal when, through unguarded machinery, poisons, electrical voltage, or otherwise, the workers are subjected to unnecessary hazards of life and limb; and all such occupations should come under governmental regulation and control.

Home life is abnormal when tenement manufacture is carried on in the household. It is a serious menace to health, education, and childhood, and should therefore be entirely prohibited. Temporary construction camps are abnormal homes and should be subjected to governmental sanitary regulation.

The premature employment of children is abnormal and should be prohibited; so also the employment of women in manufacturing, commerce, or other trades where work compels standing constantly, and also any employment of women in such trades for a period of at least eight weeks at time of childbirth.

WOULD AVOID RUSH PERIODS OF WORK.

Our aim should be to secure conditions which will tend everywhere toward regular industry and will do away with the necessity for rush periods, followed by out-of-work seasons, which put so severe a strain on wageworkers.

It is abnormal for any industry to throw back upon the community the human wreckage due to its wear and tear; and the hazards of sickness, accident, invalidism, involuntary unemployment, and old age should be provided for through insurance.

This should be made a charge in whole or in part upon the industries—the employer, the employee, and, perhaps, the people at large, to contribute severally in some degree.

Wherever such standards are not met by given establishments, by given industries, are unprovided for by a legislature, or are balked by unenlightened courts, the workers are in jeopardy, the progressive employer is penalized, and the community pays a heavy cost in lessened efficiency and in misery.

What Germany has done in the way of old-age pensions or insurance should be studied by us and the system adapted to our uses with whatever modifications are rendered necessary by our different ways of life and habits of thought.

Working women have the same need to combine for protection that workingmen have; the ballot is as necessary for one class as for the other; we do not believe that with the two sexes there is identity of function; but we do believe that there should be equality of right, and therefore we favor woman suffrage.

WOULD LEAVE VOTE TO THE WOMEN.

In those conservative States where there is genuine doubt how the women stand on this matter I suggest that it be referred to a vote of the women, so that they may themselves make the decision. Surely if women could vote they would strengthen the hands of those who are endeavoring to deal in efficient fashion with evils such as the white-slave traffic, evils which can in part be dealt with nationally, but which in large part can be reached only by determined local action, such as insisting on the widespread publication of the names of the owners, the landlords, of houses used for immoral purposes.

No people are more vitally interested than workingmen and working women in questions affecting the public health. The pure-food law must be strengthened and efficiently enforced.

In the National Government one department should be intrusted with all the agencies relating to the public health, from the enforcement of the pure-food law to the administration of quarantine.

This department, through its special health service, would cooperate intelligently with the various State and municipal bodies established for the same end. There would be no discrimination against or for any one set of therapeutic methods, against or for any one school of medicine or system of healing; the aim would be merely to secure under one administrative body efficient sanitary regulation in the interest of the people as a whole.

THE FARMER AND PEOPLE'S INTERESTS.

There is no body of our people whose interests are more inextricably interwoven with the interests of all the people than is the case with the farmers. The Country Life Commission should be revived with greatly increased powers; its abandonment was a severe blow to the interests of our people. The welfare of the farmer is a basic need of this Nation. It is the men from the farm who in the past have taken the lead in every great movement within this Nation, whether in time of war or in time of peace.

It is well to have our cities prosper, but it is not well if they prosper at the expense of the country.

I am glad to say that in many sections of our country there has been an extraordinary revival of recent years in intelligent interest in and work for those who live in the open country. In this movement the lead must be taken by the farmers themselves; but our people, as a whole, through their governmental agencies, should back the farmers.

Everything possible should be done to better the economic condition of the farmer, and also to increase the social value of the life of the farmer, the farmer's wife, and their children.

The burdens of labor and loneliness bear heavily on the women in the country; their welfare should be the especial concern of all of us. Everything possible should be done to make life in the country profitable, so as to be attractive from the economic standpoint, and also to give an outlet among farming people for those forms of activity which now tend to make life in the cities especially desirable for ambitious men and women.

There should be just the same chance to live as full, as well rounded, and as highly useful lives in the country as in the city.

The Government must cooperate with the farmer to make the farm more productive. There must be no skinning of the soil. The farm should be left to the farmer's son in better and no worse condition because of its cultivation.

AID IN PRODUCTION FOR THE FARMER.

Moreover, every invention and improvement, every discovery and economy, should be at the service of the farmer in the work of production; and, in addition, he should be helped to cooperate in business fashion with his fellows, so that the money paid by the consumer for the product of the soil shall to as large a degree as possible go into the pockets of the man who raised that product from the soil.

So long as the farmer leaves cooperative activities with their profit sharing to the city man of business, so long will the foundations of wealth be undermined and the comforts of enlightenment be impossible in the country communities.

In every respect this Nation has to learn the lessons of efficiency in production and distribution, and of avoidance of waste and destruction; we must develop and improve instead of exhausting our resources. It is entirely possible by improvements in production, in the avoidance of waste, and in business methods on the part of the farmer to give him an increased income from his farm, while at the same time reducing to the consumer the price of the articles raised on the farm.

Important although education is everywhere, it has a special importance in the country. The country school must fit the country life; in the country, as elsewhere, education must be hitched up with life.

The country church and the country Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations have great parts to play. The farmers must own and work their own land; steps must be taken at once to put a stop to the tendency toward absentee landlordism and tenant farming; this is one of the most imperative duties confronting the Nation.

The question of rural banking and rural credits is also of immediate importance.

BUSINESS AND CONTROL OF THE TRUSTS.

The present conditions of business can not be accepted as satisfactory. There are too many who do not prosper enough, and of the few who prosper greatly there are certainly some whose prosperity does not mean well for the country.

Rational Progressives, no matter how radical, are well aware that nothing the Government can do will make some men prosper, and we heartily approve the prosperity, no matter how great, of any man, if it comes as an incident to rendering service to the community; but we wish to shape conditions so that a greater number of small men who are decent, industrious, and energetic shall be able to succeed, and so that the big man who is dishonest shall not be allowed to succeed at all.

Our aim is to control business, not to strangle it—and, above all, not to continue a policy of make-believe strangle toward big concerns that do evil, and constant menace toward both big and little concerns that do well.

Our aim is to promote prosperity and then see to its proper division. We do not believe that any good comes to anyone by a policy which means destruction of prosperity; for in such cases it is not possible to divide it because of the very obvious fact that there is nothing to divide.

We wish to control big business so as to secure, among other things, good wages for the wageworkers and reasonable prices for the consumers. Wherever in any business the prosperity of the business man is obtained by lowering the wages of his workmen and charging an excessive price to the consumers we wish to interfere and stop such practices.

We will not submit to that kind of prosperity any more than we will submit to prosperity obtained by swindling investors or getting unfair advantages over business rivals. But it is obvious that unless the business is prosperous the wageworker employed therein will be badly paid and the consumer badly served.

SELF-INTEREST OF THE WAGE EARNER.

Therefore, not merely as a matter of justice to the business man, but from the standpoint of the self-interest of the wageworker and the consumer, we desire that business shall prosper; but it should be so supervised as to make prosperity also take the shape of good wages to the wageworker and reasonable prices to the consumer, while investors and business rivals are insured just treatment, and the farmer, the man who tills the soil, is protected as sedulously as the wageworker himself.

Unfortunately, those dealing with the subject have tended to divide into two camps, each as unwise as the other. One camp has fixed its eyes only on the need of prosperity, loudly announcing that our attention must be confined to securing it in bulk, and that the division must be left to take care of itself.

This is merely the plan, already tested and found wanting, of giving prosperity to the big men on top, and trusting to their mercy to let something leak through to the mass of their countrymen below—which, in effect, means that there shall be no attempt to regulate the ferocious scramble in which greed and cunning reap the largest rewards.

The other set has fixed its eyes purely on the injustice of distribution, omitting all consideration of the need of having something to distribute, and advocates action which, it is true, would abolish most of the inequalities of the distribution of prosperity, but only by the unfortunately simple process of abolishing the prosperity itself.

This means merely that conditions are to be evened, not up, but down, so that all shall stand on a common level, where nobody has any prosperity at all. The task of the wise radical must be to refuse to be misled by either set of false advisers; he must both favor and promote the agencies that make for prosperity, and at the same time see to it that these agencies are so used as to be primarily of service to the average man.

MUST KEEP ANTITRUST LAWS ON THE BOOKS.

Again and again while I was President, from 1902 to 1908, I pointed out that under the antitrust law alone it was neither possible to put a stop to business abuses nor possible to secure the highest efficiency in the service rendered by business to the general public. The antitrust law must be kept on our statute books, and, as hereafter shown, must be rendered more effective in the cases where it is applied.

But to treat the antitrust law as an adequate or as by itself a wise measure of relief and betterment is a sign not of progress but of toryism and reaction. It has been of benefit so far as it has implied the recognition of a real and great evil and the at least sporadic application of the principle that all men alike must obey the law.

But as a sole remedy, universally applicable, it has in actual practice completely broken down; as now applied, it works more mischief than benefit.

It represents the waste of effort—always damaging to a community—which arises from the attempt to meet new conditions by the application of outworn remedies instead of fearlessly and in common-sense fashion facing the new conditions and devising the new remedies which alone can work effectively for good.

The antitrust law, if interpreted as the Baltimore platform demands it shall be interpreted, would apply to every agency by which not merely industrial but agricultural business is carried on in this country; under such an interpretation it ought in theory to be applied universally, in which case practically all industries would stop. As a matter of fact it is utterly out of the question to enforce it universally, and when enforced sporadically it causes continual unrest, puts the country at a disadvantage with its trade competitors in international commerce, hopelessly puzzles honest business men and honest farmers as to what their rights are, and yet, as has just been shown in the cases of the Standard Oil and the Tobacco Trusts, it is no real check on the great trusts at which it was in theory aimed, and indeed operates to their benefit.

Moreover, if we are to compete with other nations in the markets of the world, as well as to develop our own material civilization at home, we must utilize those forms of industrial organization that are indispensable to the highest industrial productivity and efficiency.

QUOTES FROM BOOK BY UNIVERSITY HEAD.

An important volume, entitled "Concentration and Control," has just been issued by President Charles R. Van Hise, of the University of Wisconsin. The University of Wisconsin has been more influential than any other agency in making Wisconsin what it has become, a laboratory for wise social and industrial experiment in the betterment of conditions. President Van Hise is one of those thoroughgoing but sane and intelligent radicals from whom much of leadership is to be expected in such a matter.

The subtitle of his book shows that his endeavor is to turn the attention of his countrymen toward practically solving the trust problem of the United States. In his preface he states that his aim is to suggest a way to gain the economic advantages of the concentration of industry, and at the same time to guard the interests of the public and to assist in the rule of enlightenment, reason, fair play, mutual consideration, and toleration.

In sum, he shows that unrestrained competition as an economic principle has become too destructive to be permitted to exist, and that the small men must be allowed to cooperate under penalty of succumbing before their big competitors; and yet such cooperation, vitally necessary to the small man, is criminal under the present law. He says:

With the alternative before the business men of cooperation or failure, we may be sure that they will cooperate. Since the law is violated by practically every group of men engaged in trade, from one end of the country to the other, they do not feel that in combining they are doing a moral wrong. The selection of the individual or corporation for prosecution depends upon the arbitrary choice of the Attorney General, perhaps somewhat influenced by the odium which attaches to some of the violators of the law. They all take their chance, hoping that the blow will fall elsewhere. With general violation and sporadic enforcement of an impracticable law we can not hope that our people will gain respect for it.

In conclusion, there is presented as the solution of the difficulties of the present industrial situation concentration, cooperation, and control. Through concentration we may have the economic advantages coming from magnitude of operations. Through cooperation we may limit the wastes of the competitive system. Through control by commission we may secure freedom for fair competition, elimination of unfair practices, conservation of our natural resources, fair wages, good social conditions, and reasonable prices.

Concentration and cooperation in industry in order to secure efficiency are a world-wide movement. The United States can not resist it. If we isolate ourselves and insist upon the subdivision of industry below the highest economic efficiency, and do not allow cooperation, we shall be defeated in the world's markets. We can not adopt an economic system less efficient than our great competitors—Germany, England, France, and Austria. Either we must modify our present obsolete laws regarding concentration and cooperation so as to conform with the world movement or else fall behind in the race for the world's markets. Concentration and cooperation are conditions imperatively essential for industrial advance; but if we allow concentration and cooperation there must be control in order to protect the people, and adequate control is only possible through the administrative commission. Hence concentration, cooperation, and control are the key words for a scientific solution of the mighty industrial problem which now confronts this Nation.

DEMOCRATS OFFER NO WAY OF REMEDY.

In his main thesis President Van Hise is unquestionably right. The Democratic platform offers nothing in the way of remedy for present industrial conditions except, first, the enforcement of the antitrust law in a fashion which, if words mean anything, means bringing business to a standstill; and, second, the insistence upon an archaic construction of the States' rights doctrine in thus dealing with interstate commerce—an insistence which, in the first place, is the most flagrant possible violation of the Constitution to which the members of the Baltimore convention assert their devotion, and which, in the next place, nullifies and makes an empty pretense of their first statement. The proposals of the platform are so conflicting and so absurd that it is hard to imagine how any attempt could be made in good faith to carry them out; but if such attempt were sincerely made it could only produce industrial chaos.

Were such an attempt made, every man who acts honestly would have something to fear, and yet no great adroit criminal able to command the advice of the best corporation lawyers would have much to fear.

What is needed is action directly the reverse of that thus confusedly indicated. We progressives stand for the rights of the people. When these rights can best be secured by insistence upon State rights, then we are for State rights; when they can best be secured by insistence upon national rights, then we are for national rights. Interstate commerce can be effectively controlled only by the Nation. The States can not control it under the Constitution, and to amend the Constitution by giving them control of it would amount to a dissolution of the Government.

WORK OF NATION WOULD BE INEFFECTIVE.

The worst of the big trusts have always endeavored to keep alive the feeling in favor of having the States themselves, and not the Nation, attempt to do this work, because they know that in the long run such effort would be ineffective. There is no surer way to prevent all successful effort to deal with the trusts than to insist that they be dealt with by the States rather than by the Nation, or to create a conflict between the States and the Nation on the subject.

The well-meaning ignorant man who advances such a proposition does as much damage as if he were hired by the trusts themselves, for he is playing the game of every big crooked corporation in the country.

The only effective way in which to regulate the trusts is through the exercise of the collective power of our people as a whole through the governmental agencies established by the Constitution for this very purpose.

Grave injustice is done by the Congress when it fails to give the National Government complete power in this matter; and still graver injustice by the Federal courts when they endeavor in any way to pare down the right of the people collectively to act in this matter as they deem wise; such conduct does itself tend to cause the creation of a twilight zone in which neither the Nation nor the States have power.

Fortunately, the Federal courts have more and more of recent years tended to adopt the true doctrine, which is that all these matters are to be settled by the people themselves, and that the conscience of the people, and not the preferences of any servants of the people, is to be the standard in deciding what action shall be taken by the people. As Lincoln phrased it: "The question of national power and State rights as a principle is no other than the principle of generality and locality. Whatever concerns the whole should be confided to the whole—to the General Government; while whatever concerns only the State should be left exclusively to the State."

HOPELESS TO ATTEMPT CONTROL OF TRUSTS.

It is utterly hopeless to attempt to control the trusts merely by the antitrust law or by any law the same in principle, no matter what the modifications may be in detail. In the first place, these great corporations can not possibly be controlled merely by a succession of lawsuits. The administrative branch of the Government must exercise such control.

The preposterous failure of the Commerce Court has shown that only damage comes from the effort to substitute judicial for administrative control of great corporations.

In the next place, a loosely drawn law which promises to do everything would reduce business to complete ruin if it were not so drawn as to accomplish almost nothing.

As construed by the Democratic platform, the antitrust law would, if it could be enforced, abolish all business of any size or any efficiency. The promise thus to apply and construe the law would undoubtedly be broken, but the mere fitful effort thus to apply it would do no good whatever, would accomplish widespread harm, and would bring all trust legislation into contempt.

Contrast what has actually been accomplished under the interstate-commerce law with what has actually been accomplished under the antitrust law.

The first has, on the whole, worked in a highly efficient manner and achieved real and greater results, and it promises to achieve even greater results, although I firmly believe that if the power of the commissioners grows greater it will be necessary to make them and their superior, the President, even more completely responsible to the people for their acts.

The second has occasionally done good, has usually accomplished nothing, has generally left the worst conditions wholly unchanged, and has been responsible for a considerable amount of downright and positive evil.

MUST BE APPLICABLE TO ALL CONCERNED.

What is needed is the application to all industrial concerns and all cooperating interests engaged in interstate commerce in which there is either monopoly or control of the market of the principles on which we have gone in regulating transportation concerns engaged in such commerce. The antitrust law should be kept on the statute books and strengthened so as to make it genuinely and thoroughly effective against every big concern tending to monopoly or guilty of antisocial practices.

At the same time a national industrial commission should be created which should have complete power to regulate and control all the great industrial concerns engaged in interstate business, which practically means all of them in this country.

This commission should exercise over these industrial concerns like powers to those exercised over the railways by the Interstate Commerce Commission and over the national banks by the Comptroller of the Currency, and additional powers if found necessary.

The establishment of such a commission would enable us to punish the individual rather than merely the corporation, just as we now do with banks, where the aim of the Government is not to close the bank, but to bring to justice personally any bank official who has gone wrong. This commission should deal with all the abuses of the trusts—all the abuses, such as those developed by the Government suit against the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trusts—as the Interstate Commerce Commission now deals with rebates. It should have complete power to make the capitalization absolutely honest and put a stop to all stock watering.

Such supervision over the issuance of corporate securities would put a stop to exploitation of the people by dishonest capitalists desiring to declare dividends on watered securities and would open this kind of industrial property to ownership by the people at large. It should have free access to the books of each corporation and power to find out exactly how it treats its employees, its rivals, and the general public. It should have power to compel the unsparing publicity of all the acts of any corporation which goes wrong.

REGULATION SHOULD NOT BE BY LAWSUIT.

The regulation should be primarily under the administrative branch of the Government, and not by lawsuit. It should prohibit and effectually punish monopoly achieved through wrong, and also actual wrongs done by industrial corporations which are not monopolies, such as the artificial raising of prices, the artificial restriction of productivity, the elimination of competition by unfair or predatory practices, and the like, leaving industrial organizations free within the limits of fair and honest dealing to promote through the inherent efficiency of organization the power of the United States as a competitive nation among nations, and the greater abundance at home will come to our people from that power wisely exercised.

Any corporation voluntarily coming under the commission should not be prosecuted under the antitrust law as long as it obeys in good faith the orders of the commission.

The commission would be able to interpret in advance, to any honest man asking the interpretation, what he may do and what he may not do in carrying on a legitimate business. Any corporation not coming under the commission should be exposed to prosecution under the antitrust law, and any corporation violating the orders of the commission should also at once become exposed to such prosecution; and when such a prosecution is successful, it should be the duty of the commission to see that the decree of the court is put into effect completely and in good faith, so that the combination is absolutely broken up and it is not allowed to come together again, nor the constituent parts thereof permitted to do business save under the conditions laid down by the commission.

This last provision would prevent the repetition of such gross scandals as those attendant upon the present administration's prosecution of the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trusts.

The Supreme Court of the United States in condemning these two trusts to dissolution used language of unsparing severity concerning their actions. But the decree was carried out in such a manner as to turn into a farce this bitter condemnation of the criminals by the highest court in the country.

NOT ONE PARTICLE OF BENEFIT GAINED.

Not one particle of benefit to the community at large was gained; on the contrary, the prices went up to consumers, independent competitors were placed in greater jeopardy than ever before, and the possessions of the wrongdoers greatly appreciated in value.

There never was a more flagrant travesty of justice, never an instance in which wealthy wrongdoers benefited more conspicuously by a law which was supposed to be aimed at them, and which undoubtedly would have brought about severe punishment of less wealthy wrongdoers.

The progressive proposal is definite. It is practicable. We promise nothing that we can not carry out. We promise nothing which will jeopardize honest business.

We promise adequate control of all big business and the stern suppression of the evils connected with big business, and this promise we can absolutely keep. Our proposal is to help honest business activity, however extensive, and to see that it is rewarded with fair returns, so that there may be no oppression either of business men or of the common people. We propose to make it worth while for our business men to develop the most efficient business agencies for use in international trade, for it is to the interest of our whole people that we should do well in international business. But we propose to make those business agencies do complete justice to our own people.

Every dishonest business man will unquestionably prefer either the program of the Republican convention or the program of the Democratic convention to our proposal, because neither of these programs means or can mean what it purports to mean.

But every honest business man, big or little, should support the Progressive program, and it is the one and only program which offers real hope to all our people, for it is the one program under which the Government can be used with real efficiency to see justice done by the big corporation alike to the wage earners it employs, to the small rivals with whom it competes, to the investors who purchase its securities, and to the consumers who purchase its products, or to the general public which it ought to serve, as well as to the business man himself.

HONESTY AND FAIRNESS ASKED IN BUSINESS.

We favor cooperation in business and ask only that it be carried on in a spirit of honesty and fairness. We are against crooked business, big or little. We are in favor of honest business, big or little. We propose to penalize conduct and not size.

But all very big business, even though honestly conducted, is fraught with such potentiality of menace that there should be thoroughgoing governmental control over it, so that its efficiency in promoting prosperity at home and increasing the power of the Nation in international commerce may be maintained and at the same time fair play insured to the wageworkers, the small business competitors, the investors, and the general public. Wherever it is practicable we propose to preserve competition, but where under modern conditions competition has been eliminated and can not be successfully restored, then the Government must step in and itself supply the needed control on behalf of the people as a whole.

It is imperative to the welfare of our people that we enlarge and extend our foreign commerce. We are preeminently fitted to do this, because as a people we have developed high skill in the art of manufacturing. Our business men are strong executives, strong organizers. In every way possible our Federal Government should cooperate in this important matter.

Anyone who has had opportunity to study and observe first-hand Germany's course in this respect must realize that their policy of cooperation between government and business has in comparatively few years made them a leading competitor for the commerce of the world. It should be remembered that they are doing this on a national scale and with large units of business, while the Democrats would have us believe that we should do it with small units of business, which would be controlled not by the National Government but by 49 conflicting State sovereignties.

POLICY OUT OF KEEPING WITH ALL PROGRESS.

Such a policy is utterly out of keeping with the progress of the times and gives our great commercial rivals in Europe—hungry for international markets—golden opportunities of which they are rapidly taking advantage.

I very much wish that legitimate business would no longer permit itself to be frightened by the outcries of illegitimate business into believing that they have any community of interest.

Legitimate business ought to understand that its interests are jeopardized when they are confounded with those of illegitimate business; and the latter, whenever threatened with just control, always tries to persuade the former that it also is endangered. As a matter of fact, if legitimate business can only be persuaded to look cool-headedly into our proposition, it is bound to support us.

There are a number of lesser, but still important, ways of improving our business situation. It is not necessary to enumerate all of them; but I desire to allude to two, which can be adopted forthwith. Our patent laws should be remodeled; patents can secure ample royalties to inventors without our permitting them to be tools of monopoly or shut out from general use; and a parcel post, on the zone principle, should be established.

PROTECTIVE TARIFF AS A PRINCIPLE.

I believe in a protective tariff, but I believe in it as a principle, approached from the standpoint of the interests of the whole people, and not as a bundle of preferences to be given to favored individuals. In my opinion, the American people favor the principle of a protective tariff, but they desire such a tariff to be established primarily in the interests of the wageworker and the consumer. The chief opposition to our tariff at the present moment comes from the general conviction that certain interests have been improperly favored by overproduction. I agree with this view.

The commercial and industrial experience of this country has demonstrated the wisdom of the protective policy, but it has also demonstrated that in the application of that policy certain clearly recognized abuses have developed.

It is not merely the tariff that should be revised, but the method of tariff making and of tariff administration.

Wherever nowadays an industry is to be protected it should be on the theory that such protection will serve to keep up the wages and the standard of living of the wageworker in that industry with full regard for the interest of the consumer.

To accomplish this the tariff to be levied should, as nearly as is scientifically possible, approximate the differential between the cost of production at home and abroad. This differential is chiefly, if not wholly, in labor cost. No duty should be permitted to stand as regards any industry unless the workers receive their full share of the benefits of that duty.

In other words, there is no warrant for protection unless a legitimate share of the benefits gets into the pay envelope of the wageworker.

The practice of undertaking a general revision of all the schedules at one time and of securing information as to conditions in the different industries and as to rates of duty desired chiefly from those engaged in the industries, who themselves benefit directly from the rates they propose, has been demonstrated to be not only iniquitous but futile. It has afforded opportunity for practically all of the abuses which have crept into our tariff making and our tariff administration.

LOGROLLING TARIFF DAYS MUST END.

The day of the logrolling tariff must end. The progressive thought of the country has recognized this fact for several years, and the time has come when all genuine progressives should insist upon a thorough and radical change in the method of tariff making.

The first step should be the creation of a permanent commission of nonpartisan experts, whose business shall be to study scientifically all phases of tariff making and of tariff effects. This commission should be large enough to cover all the different and widely varying branches of American industry. It should have ample powers to enable it to secure exact and reliable information. It should have authority to examine closely all correlated subjects, such as the effect of any given duty on the consumers of the article on which the duty is levied; that is, it should directly consider the question as to what any duty costs the people in the price of living.

It should examine into the wages and conditions of labor and life of the workmen in any industry, so as to insure our refusing protection to any industry unless the showing as regards the share labor receives therefrom is satisfactory. This commission would be wholly different from the present unsatisfactory Tariff Board, which was created under a provision of law which failed to give it the powers indispensable if it was to do the work it should do.

It will be well for us to study the experience of Germany in considering this question. The German tariff commission has proved conclusively the efficiency and wisdom of this method of handling tariff questions.

NONPARTISAN BOARD TO SOLVE PROBLEMS.

The reports of a permanent, expert, and nonpartisan tariff commission would at once strike a most powerful blow against the chief iniquity of the old logrolling method of tariff making.

One of the principal difficulties with the old method has been that it was impossible for the public generally, and especially for those Members of Congress not directly connected with the committees handling a tariff bill, to secure anything like adequate and impartial information on the particular subjects under consideration. The reports of such a tariff commission would at once correct this evil and furnish to the general public full, complete, and disinterested information on every subject treated in a tariff bill.

With such reports it would no longer be possible to construct a tariff bill in secret or to jam it through either House of Congress without the fullest and most illuminating discussion. The path of the tariff "joker" would be rendered infinitely difficult.

As a further means of disrupting the old crooked, logrolling method of tariff making, all future revisions of the tariff should be made schedule by schedule as changing conditions may require. Thus a great obstacle will be thrown in the way of the trading votes which has marked so scandalously the enactment of every tariff bill of recent years.

The tariff commission should render reports at the call of Congress or of either branch of Congress and to the President. Under the Constitution Congress is the tariff-making power. It should not be the purpose in creating a tariff commission to take anything away from this power of Congress, but rather to afford a wise means of giving to Congress the widest and most scientific assistance possible, and of furnishing it and the public with the fullest disinterested information.

Only by this means can the tariff be taken out of politics. The creation of such a permanent tariff commission, and the adoption of the policy of schedule by schedule revision, will do more to accomplish this highly desired object than any other means yet devised.

WOULD PLUNGE COUNTRY INTO WIDE DEPRESSION.

The Democratic platform declares for a tariff for revenue only, asserting that a protective tariff is unconstitutional. To say that a protective tariff is unconstitutional, as the Democratic platform insists, is only excusable on a theory of the Constitution which would make it unconstitutional to legislate in any shape or way for the betterment of social and industrial conditions. The abolition of the protective tariff or the substitution for it of a tariff for revenue only, as proposed by the Democratic platform, would plunge this country into the most widespread industrial depression we have yet seen, and this depression would continue for an indefinite period.

There is no hope from the standpoint of our people from action such as the Democrats propose.

The one and only chance to secure stable and favorable business conditions in this country, while at the same time guaranteeing fair play to farmer, consumer, business man, and wageworker, lies in the creation of such a commission as I herein advocate.

Only by such a commission and only by such activities of the commission will it be possible for us to get a reasonably quick revision of the tariff, schedule by schedule—a revision which shall be downward and not upward—and at the same time secure a square deal not merely to the manufacturer, but to the wageworker and to the general consumer.

HIGH LIVING COST GIVEN ATTENTION.

There can be no more important question than the high cost of living necessities. The main purpose of the Progressive movement is to place the American people in possession of their birthright, to secure for all the American people unobstructed access to the fountains of measureless prosperity which their Creator offers them. We in this country are blessed with great natural resources, and our men and women have a high standard of intelligence and of industrial capacity. Surely, such being the case, we can not permanently support conditions under which each family finds it increasingly difficult to secure the necessaries of life and a fair share of its comforts through the earnings of its members.

The cost of living in this country has risen during the last few years out of all proportion to the increase in the rate of most salaries and wages; the same situation confronts alike the majority of wageworkers, small business men, small professional men, the clerks, the doctors, clergymen.

Now, grave though the problem is, there is one way to make it graver, and that is to deal with it insincerely, to advance false remedies, to promise the impossible. Our opponents, Republicans and Democrats alike, propose to deal with it in this way. The Republicans in their platform promise an inquiry into the facts. Most certainly there should be such inquiry.

But the way the present administration has failed to keep its promises in the past, and the rank dishonesty of action on the part of the Penrose-Barnes-Guggenheim national convention makes their every promise worthless. The Democratic platform affects to find the entire cause of the high cost of living in the tariff, and promises to remedy it by free trade, especially free trade in the necessaries of life.

In the first place, this attitude ignores the patent fact that the problem is world-wide; that everywhere—in England and France, as in Germany and Japan—it appears with greater or less severity; that in England, for instance, it has become a very severe problem, although neither the tariff nor, save to a small degree, the trusts can there have any possible effect upon the situation.

In the second place, the Democratic platform, if it is sincere, must mean that all duties will be taken off the products of the farmer; yet most certainly we can not afford to have the farmer struck down.

WELFARE OF TILLER IS ALL IMPORTANT.

The welfare of the tiller of the soil is as important as the welfare of the wageworker himself, and we must sedulously guard both. The farmer, the producer of the necessities of life, can himself live only if he raises these necessities for a profit.

On the other hand, the consumer who must have that farmer's product in order to live, must be allowed to purchase it at the lowest cost that can give the farmer his profit, and everything possible must be done to eliminate any middleman whose function does not tend to increase the cheapness of distribution of the product; and, moreover, everything must be done to stop all speculating, all gambling with the bread basket, which has even the slightest deleterious effect upon the producer and consumer.

There must be legislation which will bring about a closer business relationship between the farmer and the consumer.

Recently experts in the Agricultural Department have figured that nearly 50 per cent of the price for agricultural products paid by the consumer goes into the pockets not of the farmer, but of various middlemen; and it is probable that over half of what is thus paid to middlemen is needless, can be saved by wise business methods—introduced through both law and custom—and can therefore be returned to the farmer and the consumer.

Through the proposed interstate industrial commission we can effectively do away with any arbitrary control by combinations of the necessities of life. Furthermore, the Governments of the Nation and of the several States must combine in doing everything they can to make the farmer's business profitable, so that he shall get more out of the soil, and enjoy better business facilities for marketing what he thus gets. In this manner his return will be increased, while the price to the consumer is diminished.

URGES ELIMINATION OF MIDDLEMAN.

The elimination of the middleman by agricultural exchanges and by the use of improved business methods generally, the development of good roads, the reclamation of arid lands and swamp lands, the improvement in the productivity of farms, the encouragement of all agencies which tend to bring people back to the soil and to make country life more interesting as well as more profitable—all these movements will help not only the farmer but the man who consumes the farmer's products.

There is urgent need of nonpartisan expert examination into any tariff schedule which seems to increase the cost of living, and, unless the increase thus caused is more than countervailed by the benefit to the class of the community which actually receives the protection, it must of course mean that that particular duty must be reduced.

The system of levying a tariff for the protection and encouragement of American industry so as to secure higher wages and better conditions of life for American laborers must never be perverted so as to operate for the impoverishment of those whom it was intended to benefit.

But in any event, the effect of the tariff on the cost of living is slight; any householder can satisfy himself of this fact by considering the increase in price of articles like milk and eggs, where the influence of both the tariff and the trusts is negligible. No conditions have been shown which warrant us in believing that the abolition of the protective tariff as a whole would bring any substantial benefit to the consumer, while it would certainly cause unheard of immediate disaster to all wageworkers, all business men, and all farmers, and in all probability would permanently lower the standard of living here.

In order to show the utter futility of the belief that the abolition of the tariff and the establishment of free trade would remedy the condition complained of, all that is necessary is to look at the course of industrial events in England and in Germany during the last 30 years, the former under free trade, the latter under a protective system.

During these 30 years it is a matter of common knowledge that Germany has forged ahead relatively to England, and this not only as regards the employers, but as regards the wage earners—in short, as regards all members of the industrial classes.

Doubtless many causes have combined to produce this result; it is not to be ascribed to the tariff alone, but, on the other hand, it is evident that it could not have come about if a protective tariff were even a chief cause among many other causes of the high cost of living.

AGREES THAT TRUSTS ARE RESPONSIBLE.

It is also asserted that the trusts are responsible for the high cost of living. I have no question that, as regards certain trusts, this is true. I also have no question that it will continue to be true just as long as the country confines itself to acting as the Baltimore platform demands that we act.

This demand is, in effect, for the States and National Government to make the futile attempt to exercise 49 sovereign and conflicting authorities in the effort jointly to suppress the trusts, while at the same time the National Government refuses to exercise proper control over them. There will be no diminution in the cost of trust-made articles so long as our Government attempts the impossible task of restoring the flintlock conditions of business 60 years ago by trusting only to a succession of lawsuits under the antitrust law—a method which it has been definitely shown usually results to the benefit of any big business concern which really ought to be dissolved, but which cause disturbance and distress to multitudes of smaller concerns.

Trusts which increase production—unless they do it wastefully, as in certain forms of mining and lumbering—can not permanently increase the cost of living. It is the trusts which limit production or which, without limiting production, take advantage of the lack of governmental control and eliminate competition by combining to control the market that cause an increase in the cost of living.

There should be established at once, as I have elsewhere said, under the National Government an interstate industrial commission, which should exercise full supervision over the big industrial concerns doing an interstate business into which an element of monopoly enters.

Where these concerns deal with the necessaries of life the commission should not shrink, if the necessity is proved, of going to the extent of exercising regulatory control over the conditions that create or determine monopoly prices.

POSSIBLE TO REMOVE DISTURBING ELEMENT.

By such action we shall certainly be able to remove the element of contributory causation on the part of the trusts and the tariff toward the high cost of living. There will remain many other elements. Wrong taxation, including failure to tax swollen inheritances and unused land and other natural resources held for speculative purposes, is one of these elements.

The modern tendency to leave the country for the town is another element, and exhaustion of the soil and poor methods of raising and marketing the products of the soil make up another element, as I have already shown.

Another element is that of waste and extravagance, individual and national. No laws which the wit of man can devise will avail to make the community prosperous if the average individual lives in such fashion that his expenditure always exceeds his income.

National extravagance—that is, the expenditure of money which is not warranted—we can ourselves control, and to some degree we can help in doing away with the extravagance caused by international rivalries.

These are all definite methods by which something can be accomplished in the direction of decreasing the cost of living. All taken together will not fully meet the situation. There are in it elements which as yet we do not understand. We can be certain that the remedy proposed by the Democratic Party is a quack remedy. It is just as emphatically a quack remedy as was the quack remedy, the panacea, the universal cure-all, which they proposed 16 years ago. It is instructive to compare what they now say with what they said in 1896.

WHAT WAS BEING TOLD 16 YEARS AGO.

Only 16 years ago they were telling us that the decrease in prices was fatal to our people, that the fall in the production of gold, and, as a consequence, the fall in the prices of commodities, was responsible for our ills. Now they ascribe these ills to diametrically opposite causes, such as the rise in the price of commodities.

It may well be that the immense output of gold during the last few years is partly responsible for certain phases of the present trouble—which is an instructive commentary on the wisdom of those men who 16 years ago insisted that the remedy for everything was to be found in the mere additional output of coin, silver and gold alike.

There is no more curious delusion than that the Democratic platform is a progressive platform.

The Democratic platform, representing the best thought of the acknowledged Democratic leaders at Baltimore, is purely retrogressive and reactionary. There is no progress in it. It represents an effort to go back; to put this Nation of 100,000,000, existing under modern conditions, back to where it was as a Nation of 25,000,000 in the days of the stagecoach and canal boat. Such an attitude is toryism, not progressivism.

In addition, then, to the remedies that we can begin forthwith, there should be a fearless, intelligent, and searching inquiry into the whole subject, made by an absolutely nonpartisan body of experts, with no prejudices to warp their minds, no object to serve, who shall recommend any necessary remedy, heedless of what interest may be helped or hurt thereby, and caring only for the interests of the people as a whole.

NEED LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE CURRENCY.

We believe that there exists an imperative need for prompt legislation for the improvement of our national currency system. The experience of repeated financial crises in the last 40 years has proved that the present method of issuing, through private agencies, notes secured by Government bonds is both harmful and unscientific.

This method was adopted as a means of financing the Government during the Civil War through furnishing a domestic market for Government bonds. It was largely successful in fulfilling that purpose; but that need is long past, and the system has outlived this feature of its usefulness. The issue of currency is fundamentally a governmental function.

The system to be adopted should have as its basic principles soundness and elasticity. The currency should flow forth readily at the demand of commercial activity and retire as promptly when the demand diminishes. It should be automatically sufficient for all of the legitimate needs of business in any section of the country.

Only by such means can the country be freed from the danger of recurring panics. The control should be lodged with the Government and should be safeguarded against manipulation by Wall Street or the large interests.

It should be made impossible to use the machinery or perquisites of the currency system for any speculative purposes. The country must be safeguarded against overexpansion or unjust contraction of either credit or circulating medium.

NO GREATER ISSUE THAN CONSERVATION.

There can be no greater issue than that of conservation in this country. Just as we must conserve our men, women, and children, so we must conserve the resources of the land on which they live. We must conserve the soil so that our children shall have a land that is more and not less fertile than that our fathers dwelt in.

We must conserve the forests, not by disuse, but by use, making them more valuable at the same time that we use them. We must conserve the mines. Moreover, we must insure so far as possible the use of certain types of great natural resources for the benefit of the people as a whole. The public should not alienate its fee in the water power which will be of incalculable consequence as a source of power in the immediate future.

The Nation and the States within their several spheres should by immediate legislation keep the fee of the water power, leasing its use only for a reasonable length of time on terms that will secure the interests of the public.

Just as the Nation has gone into the work of irrigation in the West, so it should go into the work of helping reclaim the swamp lands of the South. We should undertake the complete development and control of the Mississippi as a national work, just as we have undertaken the work of building the Panama Canal. We can use the plant, and we can use the human experience, left free by the completion of the Panama Canal in so developing the Mississippi as to make it a mighty highroad of commerce and a source of fructification and not of death to the rich and fertile lands lying along its lower length.

In the West, the forests, the grazing lands, the reserves of every kind should be so handled as to be in the interests of the actual settler, the actual homemaker. He should be encouraged to use them at once, but in such a way as to preserve and not exhaust them. We do not intend that our natural resources shall be exploited by the few against the interests of the many, nor do we intend to turn them over to any man who will wastefully use them by destruction and leave to those who come after us a heritage damaged by just so much.

The man in whose interests we are working is the small farmer and settler, the man who works with his own hands, who is working not only for himself, but for his children, and who wishes to leave to them the fruits of his labor.

His permanent welfare is the prime factor for consideration in developing the policy of conservation, for our aim is to preserve our natural resources for the public as a whole, for the average man and the average woman who make up the body of the American people.

Alaska should be developed at once, but in the interests of the actual settler. In Alaska the Government has an opportunity of starting in what is almost a fresh field to work out various problems by actual experience.

The Government should at once construct, own, and operate the railways in Alaska.

The Government should keep the fee of all the coal fields and allow them to be operated by lessees, with the condition in the lease that nonuse shall operate as a forfeit. Telegraph lines should be operated as the railways are. Moreover, it would be well in Alaska to try a system of land taxation which will, so far as possible, remove all the burdens from those who actually use the land, whether for building or for agricultural purposes, and will operate against any man who holds the land for speculation or derives an income from it based, not on his own exertions, but on the increase in value due to activities not his own. There is very real need that this Nation shall seriously prepare itself for the task of remedying social injustice and meeting social problems by well-considered governmental effort; and the best preparation for such wise action is to test by actual experiment under favorable conditions the devices which we have reason to believe will work well, but which is is difficult to apply in old-settled communities without preliminary experiment.

In international affairs this country should behave toward other nations exactly as an honorable private citizen behaves toward other private citizens. We should do no wrong to any nation, weak or strong, and we should submit to no wrong. Above all, we should never in any treaty make any promise which we do not intend in good faith to fulfill. I believe it essential that our small Army should be kept at a high pitch of perfection, and in no way can it be so damaged as by permitting it to become the plaything of men in Congress who wish to gratify either spite or favoritism, or to secure to localities advantages to which those localities are not entitled.

BELIEVES IN NAVY BEING BUILT UP.

The Navy should be steadily built up, and the process of upbuilding must not be stopped until—and not before—it proves possible to secure by international agreement a general reduction of armaments. The Panama Canal must be fortified. It would have been criminal to build it if we were not prepared to fortify it and to keep our Navy at such a pitch of strength as to render it unsafe for any foreign power to attack us and get control of it.

We have a perfect right to permit our coastwise traffic (with which there can be no competition by the merchant marine of any foreign nation—so that there is no discrimination against any foreign marine) to pass through that canal on any terms we choose, and I personally think that no toll should be charged on such traffic.

Moreover, in time of war, where all treaties between warring nations save those connected with the management of the war at once lapse, the canal would, of course, be open to the use of our warships and closed to warships of the nation with which we were engaged in hostilities.

But at all times the canal should be opened on equal terms to the ships of all nations, including our own, engaged in international commerce. That was the understanding of the treaty when it was adopted, and the United States must always, as a matter of honorable obligation and with scrupulous nicety, live up to every understanding which she has entered into with any foreign power.

The question that has arisen over the right of this Nation to charge tolls on the canal vividly illustrates the folly and iniquity of making treaties which can not and ought not to be kept. As a people there is no lesson we more need to learn than the lesson not in an outburst of emotionalism to make a treaty that ought not to be and could not be kept, and the further lesson that when we do make a treaty we must soberly live up to it as long as changed conditions do not warrant the serious step of denouncing it.

If we had been so unwise as to adopt the general arbitration treaties a few months ago we would now be bound to arbitrate the question of our right to free our own coastwise traffic from canal tolls, and at any future time we might have found ourselves obliged to arbitrate the question whether, in the event of war, we could keep the canal open to our own war vessels and closed to those of our foes.

There could be no better illustration of the extreme unwisdom of entering into international agreements without paying heed to the question of keeping them.

On the other hand, we deliberately and with our eyes open, and after ample consideration and discussion, agreed to treat all merchant ships on the same basis; it was partly because of this agreement that there was no question raised by foreign nations as to our digging and fortifying the canal; and having given our word, we must keep it. When the American people make a promise, that promise must and will be kept.

PLACES HIS POSITION CLEARLY BEFORE THEM.

Now, friends, this is my confession of faith. I have made it rather long, because I wish you to know just what my deepest convictions are on the great questions of to-day, so that if you choose to make me your standard bearer in the fight you shall make your choice understanding exactly how I feel; and if, after hearing me, you think you ought to choose some one else, I shall loyally abide by your choice. The convictions to which I have come have not been arrived at as the result of study in the closet or the library, but from the knowledge I have gained through hard experience during the many years in which, under many and varied conditions, I have striven and toiled with men. I believe in a larger use of the governmental power to help remedy industrial wrongs, because it has been borne in on me by actual experience that without the exercise of such power many of the wrongs will go unremedied.

I believe in a larger opportunity for the people themselves directly to participate in government and to control their governmental agents, because long experience has taught me that without such control many of their agents will represent them badly.

By actual experience in office I have found that, as a rule, I could secure the triumph of the causes in which I most believed, not from the politicians and the men who claim an exceptional right to speak in business and government, but by going over their heads and appealing directly to the people themselves.

HIS POWER OBTAINED FROM THE PEOPLE.

I am not under the slightest delusion as to any power that during my political career I have at any time possessed. Whatever of power I at any time had I obtained from the people. I could exercise it only so long as and to the extent that the people not merely believed in me, but heartily backed me up.

Whatever I did as President, I was able to do only because I had the backing of the people.

When on any point I did not have that backing, when on any point I differed from the people, it mattered not whether I was right or whether I was wrong, my power vanished. I tried my best to lead the people, to advise them, to tell them what I thought was right; if necessary, I never hesitated to tell them what I thought they ought to hear, even though I thought it would be unpleasant for them to hear it; but I recognized that my task was to try to lead them and not to drive them, to take them into my confidence, to try to show them that I was right, and then loyally and in good faith to accept their decision.

I will do anything for the people except what my conscience tells me is wrong, and that I can do for no man and no set of men; I hold that a man can not serve the people well unless he serves his conscience; but I hold also that where his conscience bids him refuse to do what the people desire, he should not try to continue in office against their will.

Our Government system should be so shaped that the public servant, when he can not conscientiously carry out the wishes of the people, shall, at their desire, leave his office and not misrepresent them in office; and I hold that the public servant can by so doing, better than in any other way, serve both them and his conscience.

SAYS THE FIGHT WORTH THE MAKING.

Surely there never was a fight better worth making than the one in which we are engaged. It little matters what befalls any one of us who for the time being stands in the forefront of the battle. I hope we shall win, and I believe that if we can wake the people to what the fight really means we shall win. But, win or lose, we shall not falter. Whatever fate may at the moment overtake any of us, the movement itself will not stop. Our cause is based on the eternal principles of righteousness; and even though we who now lead may for the time fail, in the end the cause itself shall triumph.

Six weeks ago, here in Chicago, I spoke to the honest representatives of a convention which was not dominated by honest men; a convention wherein sat, alas, a majority of men who, with sneering indifference to every principle of right, so acted as to bring to a shameful end a party which had been founded over half a century ago by men in whose souls burned the fire of lofty endeavor.

Now, to you men, who, in your turn, have come together to spend and be spent in the endless crusade against wrong, to you who face the future resolute and confident, to you who strive in a spirit of brotherhood for the betterment of our Nation, to you who gird yourselves for this great new fight in the never-ending warfare for the good of humankind, I say in closing what in that speech I said in closing: "We stand at Armageddon, and we battle for the Lord."

PARTY PLATFORMS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask that the platforms of the Republican Party, of the Democratic Party, and of the Progressive Party be printed together as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks that the platforms of the three parties—the Republican Party, the Democratic Party, and the Progressive Party—be printed together as a public document. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to object, but I should like to inquire whether Debs has yet been nominated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to give the Senator the information.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am going to object. Each party can print its own platform, and I think this would be an expense to the Government that ought not to be imposed upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

THE TARSNEY ACT.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee what disposition was made of the amendment, on page 29, striking out the repeal of the Tarsney Act?

Mr. WARREN. The amendment striking out the House provision was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the matter will go into conference and the House conferees may adhere to their original proposal, claiming that it is in the interest of economy and efficiency; and I would like, therefore, to say a few words and to present some statistics upon this subject.

In our early history the control of the construction of Federal buildings was given to our Presidents, and Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson personally interested themselves in this work and each endeavored to select the most skillful architect of his day. In 1855 the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury was created by an appropriation in the sundry civil bill, and from that time on it became the custom of Congress to place the construction of public buildings under this office. From this time on there was a gradual depreciation in the character of governmental architecture. The whole business fell, in a measure, under the spoils system, until the American Institute of Architects commenced, in 1875, an agitation for the rectification of these conditions. After a long contention, from 1875 to 1892, during which period many measures for the improvement of the Federal practice relating to architecture were proposed, a bill known as the "Tarsney bill" was introduced by Mr. Tarsney, a Democratic Representative from Michigan, and in 1893, after a full hearing from representative architects from various sections of the country, it became a law. The Tarsney Act is as follows:

TARSNEY ACT.

[Public, No. 77; Fifty-second Congress, second session.]

An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain plans and specifications for public buildings to be erected under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and providing for local supervision of the construction of the same.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to obtain plans, drawings, and specifications for the erection of public buildings for the United States, authorized by Congress to be erected under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the local supervision of the construction thereof by competition among architects under such conditions as he may prescribe, and to make payment for the services of the architect whose plan may be selected out of the appropriations for the respective buildings: Provided, That not less than five architects shall be invited by the said Secretary to compete for the furnishing of such plans and specifications and the supervision of such construction: And provided further, That the general supervision of the work shall continue in the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, the Supervising Architect to be the representative of the Government in all matters connected with the erection and completion of such buildings, the receipt of proposals, the award of contracts therefor, and the disbursement of moneys thereunder, and perform all the duties that now pertain to his office, except the preparation of drawings and specifications for such buildings and the local supervision of the construction thereof, the said drawings and specifications, however, to be subject at all times to modification and change relating to plan or arrangement of building and selection of material therefor as may be directed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Approved, February 20, 1893.

Later on Mr. Carlisle, then the Secretary of the Treasury, refused to act under this provision, as the act was not obligatory and its operation was in the discretion of the Secretary. The refusal of the Secretary caused the noted Burnham-Carlisle correspondence, and the matter was taken up for discussion by the technical and daily press in all sections of the United States. Public opinion backed the Tarsney Act.

During Mr. Cleveland's administration the Dockery Commission made a report on the Supervising Architect's Office. The commission recommended competition under the Tarsney Act, as well as the reorganization of the Supervising Architect's Office into a public buildings bureau to represent the Government, and advised that there would be a saving in expense to the Government by giving out the work to private architects at the regular rate of 5 per cent.

Later on, during the administrations of Mr. McKinley, Mr. Roosevelt, and Mr. Taft, the law was fully executed as to buildings involving large appropriations, and the result has been a distinct advance in the character of governmental architecture. The various Secretaries of the Treasury during the last three administrations have expressed their approval of the operation of the act and have declared that it has been successful.

During this time a pressing necessity developed for the organization of a bureau of public buildings and a board of public works. In December, 1909, I introduced in the Senate (S. 3718, 61st Cong., 2d sess.) a bill for the creation of a bureau of the arts and of public buildings and for a council of the arts, and defining their duties. This bill provided that the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, which had originally been created simply by a provision in a sundry civil bill, should be thereafter known as a bureau of arts and public buildings, and that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury should be known as the director of arts and public buildings. The bill transferred to this new bureau all the officials, employees, and funds of the Supervising Architect's Office and gave the bureau control of the construction and alteration of all public buildings, including furniture and equipment, and the selection of sites for buildings, monuments, the landscape treatment of public buildings and parks, the selection and installation of statuary and paintings, and all other work of an artistic nature. It also provided for an advisory council, to be known as the council of arts, composed of eminent architects, painters, sculptors, landscape architects, and laymen, to be appointed by the President, to serve without compensation.

This bill was referred to the Committee on the Library, but no action was taken thereon.

At the same session Mr. BARTHOLDT, a Representative from the State of Missouri, and chairman of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, introduced this bill in the House. No action was taken on the bill, however, either in the Senate or the House.

Later on a bill did pass the Senate and House providing for a commission of arts, and to that extent satisfied the provisions of the original bills introduced by Mr. BARTHOLDT and myself.

The American Institute of Architects has for years been urging the creation of a bureau or ministry of arts and architecture, but as yet its recommendations and efforts have been unavailing.

During this session of Congress the House Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings made an investigation of the Supervising Architect's office, and on July 19, 1912, made a report criticizing certain features of that office, making a recommendation that the office should be made a bureau of the Treasury Department, insisting that its work had so enlarged as to make it impossible for the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, with the numerous bureaus and divisions under him which required attention, to give the proper supervision to the work of the Supervising Architect's Office. It also criticized the Tarsney Act and indicated that the work now intrusted to private architects could be as well and as cheaply done by the Office of the Supervising Architect.

At this session of Congress a bill was also introduced in the House by Mr. Cox of Indiana for the repeal of the Tarsney Act. It was referred to the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and, so far as I am informed, no action appears to have been taken upon it, nor has any action whatever been taken upon the subject by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate. The opinion, however, of the Secretary of the Treasury was asked regarding this bill, and appears in the following letter:

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In compliance with your request for a report on H. R. 11179, a bill to repeal an act passed February 20, 1893 (27 Stat. L., p. 468), being a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain plans and specifications for public buildings, etc.; also to repeal section 34 of chapter 383 of Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 699, being an act giving to the Secretary of the Treasury power to employ outside architects, etc., I have the honor to advise you that, in my opinion, the act in question should not be repealed.

I feel most strongly that to make it impossible for the Government to secure the services of the best architectural ability the country affords would be most detrimental to the advancement of Government architecture.

Respectfully, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH,
Secretary.

We find, therefore, that, on the one hand, the Dockery Commission advised the creation of a bureau of public buildings and the construction of all public buildings under private architects, upon the ground both of economy and efficiency; and that, on the other hand, the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings of the House, whilst repeating the recommendation of the Dockery Commission as to the organization of a bureau of public buildings, makes a contrary report as to the employment of private architects. And we also find new legislation in the sundry civil bill providing for the repeal of the Tarsney Act; and this, too, apparently without any consideration or recommendation by the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate or House—committees charged with jurisdiction over the matter.

The Senate has stricken out the House provision. The matter goes into conference, and it would seem that comity between the two Houses would require that a matter involving new legislation and a change of existing law, concerning which the two Houses differ, should not be urged unduly by the House conferees. Undoubtedly, many administrative reforms have been accomplished upon appropriation bills; but, clearly, where the House and the Senate differ as to their wisdom, the compulsory failure of an appropriation bill should not be resorted to in order to force through legislation concerning which the two Houses differ and concerning which the powers of the legitimate committees have not been exercised.

I believe, Mr. President, that this whole matter should be left either to the next Congress or, at the most, that a joint commission, composed of Members of the Senate and House, should be appointed to investigate the whole question of the construction of public buildings and to recommend legislation.

But lest it should be necessary to go further and to show that this legislation has no proper basis either with regard to the excellence or to the economy of the work, I have to say that there can be no question but that there has been an immense improvement in public architecture since the adoption of the Tarsney Act. That act introduced the merit system which now rules in public architecture, and has had a material influence in raising the general character of the work done in the Supervising Architect's office upon the minor buildings. The act has been beneficial in its example, both to the States and to municipalities, in securing regulations similar to the provisions of the Tarsney Act.

As to economy, I have to say that until recently the commissions of the Institute of Architects were 5 per cent, and they have recently been raised to 6 per cent because of the higher cost of the services of designers, draftsmen, and employees generally. Some years ago a careful inquiry was made as to what proportion of the 5 per cent really went to the architect for his services and what proportion was spent in subsidiary services and the employment of draftsmen, designers, engineers, etc., and it was found that at least 3 per cent of the 5 per cent was paid out by the responsible architect and that only 2 per cent remained as his compensation.

It has been a matter of contention as to the comparative cost of making plans and specifications in the Supervising Architect's office and in the offices of private architects. A public document (H. Doc. No. 845, 61st Cong., 2d sess.) containing a communication from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, includes an analytical statement of the expenditures for the maintenance of the office of the Supervising Architect for the fiscal year 1909, and this has been relied upon as indicating that the cost of planning and specifications was less in the Supervising Architect's office than if the work were placed in the hands of private architects. But the report of a committee appointed by the American Institute of Architects demonstrates that this inference was unwarranted; that the amount expended for planning and specifications by the Supervising Architect's office on work conducted in that office was estimated, not upon the amount actually expended for public buildings during that year, but upon the amount authorized to be expended by completed contracts. It was also demonstrated that it was unfair to take a single year, and that by taking a series of years a more reliable comparison could be made; and, judged by this standard, it was shown by the report of the committee of the American Institute of Architects that the percentage cost of planning and specifications in the office of the Supervising Architect for a period of six years amounted to more than the customary commission paid to private architects.

It is my purpose to ask the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, under whose control the Supervising Architect's office rests, to make a statement covering a series of years with a view to ascertaining the cost of preparing plans and specifications in the Supervising Architect's office, and I shall present such statement when received to the Senate.

So much regarding the cost. But so far as efficiency is concerned, there can be no question of the great advance that has been made in the architecture of the Nation since the Tarsney Act was passed. The national architecture was exceedingly good under the administrations of Washington and Jefferson and men of their class of culture. Later on the architecture of the country, both public and private, became exceedingly inferior, and there was a restoration to the old standards of art only when the Chicago exposition was created by the matchless skill and genius of the architects of the country who had received the very best training in the École des Arts of Paris.

Since that time and since the passage of the Tarsney Act, which was about the time of the Chicago exposition, there has been immense improvement in the public art, and the buildings constructed by these architects have been models not only to be followed by the National Government in its future work, but to be followed by States and municipal administrations. I think it would be a great misfortune to repeal that act and to throw over the planning of these magnificent public buildings which we contemplate constructing in the future entirely to the Supervising Architect's Office. The Supervising Architect's Office has been run well under the administration of the late Supervising Architect, and I have no doubt will be run well under the recent appointee. But the salaries of the Government employees are necessarily limited, and it can not be contended for a moment that that office can command the genius or the talent shown in the private architectural offices of the country.

These great architectural offices are not only models so far as the art is concerned, but are models in administration. One has only to go into the office of one of these great architectural firms in New York or Chicago, and he will find numerous employees, consisting of architects, artists, engineers, constructors, and draftsmen whose entire work is conducted with the most admirable system. It seems to me that so far as efficiency is concerned, it would be a great mistake to go back to the old condition of things.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire as to the purpose the Senator from Nevada has in view.

Do I understand the Senator is speaking in favor of a national class of architecture, to be applied to public buildings, or a composite of recognized architectural schools?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am not contending in favor of any school or of any class of architecture.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why, then, inject into the RECORD an article such as is proposed? The result of just that kind of consideration of this question is in evidence now in the Capital here, in one of the more recently constructed buildings. For instance, the museum that is projected over into the Mall. One part of it is Doric, one part Ionic, one part Corinthian in architecture. It looks as though the architect had not been able to determine as to just what he wanted to do. So he included a little of each. We will refine that question, if we keep on in the direction we are going on, so that no two rooms in a public building will belong to the same school of architecture. There will be no recognized architectural system or class or design in any building. They will be composite, resulting in architectural nightmares.

I do not desire to go into an analysis of some of these more recent buildings, except to say they represent nothing in the way of architecture—nothing at all, no school, no class of architecture—and if we are to go on the theories represented by this class of publication we will land nowhere and have no national character to our national buildings.

I should like to see the time come when Congress in providing the money would say, "This building shall belong to a certain class of architecture; it shall be Corinthian, Doric, or Ionic," or whatever may be selected, instead of turning loose the architects, one of one school and another of another, to produce a composite, such as we have down here, so that when a visiting student of architecture inquires, "To what class of architecture does this building belong?" the only answer is, "It depends upon the point of view from which you look at it. If you look at it from the east, it is Doric; if you look at it from the south, it is Corinthian," and so on. The result of the present system is you get such a conglomeration as that in the architecture of a great country.

The theories, such as were referred to by the Senator from Nevada, are leading to this result, and I sincerely hope that, whatever system is adopted, it will result in stamping upon each building some school that shall be peculiar to that building.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have not been endeavoring to impress my views upon the Senate as to any school of architecture or any particular plan or any particular policy, beyond this, that I am endeavoring to rescue from repeal the Tarsney Act, which provided for securing the plans from noted architects through the country, when considered desirable by the Secretary of the Treasury, through the competitive system, a system which has worked admirably thus far; and as a provision for the repeal of the Tarsney Act was inserted in this bill by the House, and is stricken out by the Senate committee, I assume that might be a matter of contention between the conferees, and I wished to put upon the RECORD some facts regarding the comparative cost of the two systems—one of intrusting these works to architects of distinction, under the competitive system, and the other of confining the planning entirely to the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

It seems to me that this whole matter is one that ought to be gone into very carefully by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as the Senator from Idaho suggests. It ought not to have been inserted in an appropriation bill. The question of architecture and of public works is an important one, which ought to be solved by the proper committees after thorough study and deliberation. For a long time I have urged a bill to that effect, that we should merge the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury into a bureau of architecture and arts, and that we should make the Commission of Fine Arts an advisory council to that bureau, and then that we should ask that bureau, with the aid of the commission, to submit to Congress some consecutive and comprehensive plan not only for planning the public works of the country, but for constructing them according to the advanced methods of efficiency and art. I think, however, that is a matter for the proper committee, to which the Senator from Idaho belongs, and that it ought not to be brought up on an appropriation bill.

I have ventured these remarks with reference both to the question of art and the question of efficiency, in the hope that the House will abandon its contention, or, at all events, that the Senate conferees will insist upon striking out this provision.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to take advantage of this occasion to suggest that we have now introduced a new school of architecture, which I would denominate the store-box system. We have it now in the construction of a Red Cross building down here in the ornamental part of the city. It looks something like a lot of store boxes run together with an uneven roof put over them.

Then, again, we have the horse stable, which might be denominated a brick-block class of architecture, right in the midst and under the eye of those coming here to see the beauties of the city, and instead of seeing the beauties of the city they see something that looks like a cross between a livery stable and a chicken house, right here in the Mall, in the ornamental part of the city. I should like to have seen an amendment in this bill which would forbid the construction of those buildings and require them to be removed in the night time.

Subsequently, Mr. NEWLANDS said:

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, some days since I presented my views with reference to the proposed repeal of the Tarsney Act in the sundry civil bill. I then stated my intention of obtaining from the Treasury Department a statement of the ratio of cost of preparing plans and specifications in the Supervising Architect's Office for the buildings planned, supervised, and constructed by that office and not intrusted to private architects. I present herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated August 6, 1912, inclosing two tables showing the ratio of the cost of the administrative expense of the Office of the Supervising Architect as compared with the total amount disbursed for each fiscal year. It will be observed by reference to the second table, covering the years from 1905 to 1911, that the average ratio of cost of preparing plans and specifications in the Supervising Architect's Office for new buildings not intrusted to private architects was 6.02 per cent, being in excess of even the present commission of private architects. The notes in connection with this table are explanatory.

I ask that the letter and statement be published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 6, 1912.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring to letter from this department of July 26, 1912, acknowledging the receipt from you of a report prepared by a committee representing the American Institute of Architects, relative to the cost of architectural service in the Treasury Department, I have pleasure in sending you herewith a statement prepared some years ago showing the expenditures for administrative expenses as compared with the total amounts disbursed by the Office of the Supervising Architect for the fiscal years 1898 to 1908, inclusive.

The statement referred to shows that the average percentage cost as compared with the total amount disbursed during the years named was 7.2 per cent. It is, of course, evident that the total expenditures during the period covered features of work entirely aside from strictly architectural service, as, for instance, expenditures for sites, repairs, and maintenance of buildings already constructed, etc.

In order to arrive at a reasonably close estimate of the cost of strictly architectural service in the Office of the Supervising Architect a table has been prepared covering the expenditures for such service during the fiscal years 1905 to 1911, inclusive, as compared with the expenditures on account of new buildings for the same period which shows the average cost to be as follows:

	Per cent.
Ratio of cost of administration to work performed as relates to the office proper—items 1 and 4	8.42
Ratio of cost of administration to the total cost of the work—items 3 and 4	6.77
Ratio of cost of office administration as related to new buildings only	6.02

The percentage of cost, as related to new buildings, does not include the cost of field service, such as superintendents of construction, etc., for the reason that in comparing the cost of such service for Tarsney Act work the same charge is made against against buildings designed by private architects as is made against buildings designed in the Office of the Supervising Architect.

The amounts in item No. 7 are determined on the assumption which has been recognized as correct for a number of years in the Supervising Architect's Office, that the proportion of the administrative cost to be allotted as a charge against new construction work, is equal to 65 per cent of the total administrative cost.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

Statement showing expenditures for administrative expenses of the Office of the Supervising Architect for the period from July 1, 1897, to June 30, 1908, together with the percentage of cost of such expenses as compared with the total amount disbursed for each fiscal year of the period.

NOTE.—In order that the comparison of the cost of services rendered, as shown in the second of the tables, might be fair, the items taken into consideration were only those embraced in the numbers 18, 19, 21, and 22 of Assistant Secretary Hilles's report of March 23, 1910 (Statement No. 1).

Under the provisions of the Tarsney Act, the architects are required to furnish local supervision, but not ordinary field service, and, therefore, the cost of field service is not taken into consideration. In connection with the buildings constructed by the Supervising Architect's Office, services equivalent to the local supervision under the Tarsney Act are furnished by the supervising superintendents of construction and inspectors, and if the cost of this item, together with the administrative work performed in the Supervising Architect's Office, in connection with Tarsney Act buildings, is taken into consideration, it will further increase the percentage of cost of architectural services under the Tarsney Act buildings. On the other hand, the cost of the service rendered by the Supervising Architect would be increased if that office was charged with rent, light, and other costs which the Tarsney Act architect pays out of his commission, so that one item may be considered as offsetting the other.

The statement covering expenditures for construction of new buildings for the seven years ending June 30, 1911, shows that for the years 1907 and 1903 the ratio of cost of office administration is somewhat beyond the average. This is due to the following causes, briefly stated:

It is well known that there is no regular program for public-building work, as shown by the fact that in 1902, 100 new buildings were provided for, and that in 1903 only 10 were authorized. Over three years afterwards, in 1903, 161 buildings were authorized; in 1908, 209; and in 1910, 231. This uncertainty as to the amount of work to be accomplished necessarily leaves the office in a somewhat embarrassing position, it being necessary in off years, as was the case in 1905 and 1903, to reduce the force and subsequently to increase it in order to meet the requirements of public-building legislation.

In 1907 and 1908 the office force was in process of being built up, and but little real work was done in connection with new buildings, the activities of the office being confined to the acquisition of sites, work on extensions, repairs and maintenance, and the gathering of data upon which to base the preparation of plans.

It must be conceded, in view of the brief résumé above of the conditions as related to the public-building service, that no fair comparison can be made upon the business of a single fiscal year. It is only by taking a period of years embracing fluctuations, so to speak, in the amount of work authorized, together with the other conditions affecting production, that a fair average of the relation of the cost of administration to work performed can be secured.

AMENDMENT OF THE INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. CLAPP. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] to the resolution he has pending.

Mr. KENYON. I ask that the resolution may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. And I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a resolution coming over from a former day. The Chair lays the resolution before the Senate. It will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 372, submitted by Mr. KENYON on the 6th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3345) to amend the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and that the same be laid before the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, just a few words in order that Senators may fully understand the resolution which is here presented. I am not going to enter into a discussion of it at this time. If this matter provokes any particular discussion, I will ask unanimous consent that it may go over until some other time, retaining its place, however, because I do not want to delay the consideration of the Panama Canal bill, now before the Senate.

This is a resolution which proposes to discharge the Committee on Interstate Commerce from the further consideration of Senate bill 3345, to amend the Sherman Antitrust Act, which amendment is to strike from the Sherman Antitrust Act fines as to individuals, leaving the fines as to corporations, and making essential in case of conviction under the Sherman Antitrust Act, or pleas of guilty, or pleas of nolo contendere, which is a favorite plea, that jail sentences must be imposed. It is to assist in carrying out the principle that jail sentences are essential to stop combinations in restraint of trade.

I am not, however, going to enter into a discussion of the merits of the matter at this time. Senators may differ as to that, but I am urging that the measure come to the floor of the Senate for discussion and for action. It has been in the committee now for eight months. That ought to be sufficient time. I state this as no criticism upon the committee. It is one of the hardest working committees in the Senate, but I am anxious that the bill shall come here where it can be discussed and passed, and that it do not perish in the committee, and the Sherman Antitrust Act thus be strengthened, as I believe it will be strengthened by this amendment. Fines are farces under the Sherman Act. Jail sentences are the only adequate remedy to stop the formation of great trusts and combinations.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think it is only fair to the Senator from Iowa to state that at least, in my opinion, it would be impossible for the committee to agree upon reporting the bill at the present session. I think it should come before the Senate, and I heartily concur in the request of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand the adoption of the resolution merely brings the bill before the Senate, not to be acted upon at the present time.

Mr. KENYON. Not to be acted on at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it desired to have it lie on the table until it is called up?

Mr. KENYON. It will go to the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. KENYON. If the session extends, as is now apparent, through the delightful summer time and runs into the fall I shall hope to bring it up for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

S. 4838. An act to amend section 96 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911;

S. 5309. An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880 (21 Stat. L., p. 140); and

S. 7012. An act to permit the construction of a subway and the maintenance of a railroad under the post-office building at or near Park Place, in the city of New York.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before morning business closes I desire to make a suggestion. There are some bills upon the calendar which, I think, would provoke no opposition whatever, but they are of great importance and urgency. I think that some understanding ought to be had with regard to a time at which such bills could be taken up and disposed of. I refer to Senate bills. If we do not dispose of them very soon, there will be no opportunity whatever to have them considered in the other House. If no one has anything to suggest in that regard, I ask now unanimous consent for the present consideration——

Mr. BRISTOW. That can not be done. It would be a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not understand that it would be a violation of the agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will make this suggestion to the Senator: We have always done toward the close of a session precisely what the Senator from Iowa suggests. As we will dispose of the unfinished business this morning, I think if the Senator from Iowa would ask—I do not know that unanimous consent is necessary—that we should have an understanding that we would go to the calendar to-morrow in the usual way after the routine morning business is disposed of we could clear up all those bills.

Mr. CUMMINS. That course will be entirely satisfactory to me, but my suggestion was for the purpose of reaching an understanding if possible. I have no desire to interfere with the bill now under consideration. At least three bills have been already passed this morning, and there are some on the calendar which are of great public importance.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are many House bills, too, on the calendar that ought to be passed, as well as Senate bills.

Mr. CUMMINS. With the understanding that to-morrow, at the close of the morning business, we will go to the calendar for a sufficient time to dispose of these bills I shall make no effort to bring the measures that I had in mind before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator refers to bills to which there is no objection?

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume that if we were entering into a unanimous-consent agreement that would be necessary, but there are some bills that I want to bring up, no matter whether there is unanimous consent for their consideration or not.

Mr. SMOOT. I should think that it would be very much better, first, to get the Post Office appropriation bill out of the way.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, on this side of the Chamber we are unable to hear.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be much better to get the Post Office appropriation bill passed before taking up any bills on the calendar which are going to lead to lengthy debate. I think myself that there are a great many bills upon the calendar, both House and Senate bills, to which there will be no objection.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator is right about that. I am not going to insist upon any of the bills which would create debate coming up to defer the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, but I think if we had two hours to-morrow we could dispose of a great many of those bills.

Mr. JONES. I suggest that we have an evening session to dispose of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. That would be entirely satisfactory to me, possibly not to-night, because Senators are rather weary, as we have had two long evening sessions, but to-morrow night it could easily be done.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If we are going to have an evening session I would very much prefer to have it this evening rather than to-morrow. I do not see why we could not dispose of those bills to-night as well as to-morrow night, or even after the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. We may reach a final vote on the Panama Canal bill before 5 o'clock, and if that shall be the case we can take up the calendar immediately after the disposition of that bill this afternoon.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would suggest that we proceed immediately to the unfinished business——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. BRISTOW. And let us go on with the calendar as soon as we get through with the unfinished business. We may get through with it in two or three hours.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to disturb the pending bill, but I have some interest in other measures than the pending bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is other morning business, that order is closed.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday, the Chair lays before the Senate House bill 21969, known as the Panama Canal bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may the Secretary read the unanimous-consent agreement which was entered into last evening?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that on Friday, August 9, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 21969, the Panama Canal bill, so called, and that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on said day the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending to the bill, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill itself—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will ask that the Secretary be kind enough, in order that the RECORD may show to what certain points made by several Senators who have already spoken upon this bill applied, to read section 11 of the bill as it came from the other House, and then to read what the Senate committee proposes to substitute for a part of section 11, so that the two propositions may stand in juxtaposition in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Beginning on page 19, line 10, section 11 of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives reads:

SEC. 11. That section 5 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"From and after the 1st day of July, 1914, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company, or by stockholders or directors in common, or in any other manner) in any common carrier by water with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine questions of fact as to the competition or possibility of competition, after full hearing, on the application of any railroad company or other carrier. Such application may be filed for the purpose of determining whether any existing service is in violation of this section and pray for an order permitting the continuance of any vessel or vessels already in operation, or for the purpose of asking an order to install new service not in conflict with the provisions of this paragraph. The commission may on its own motion or the application of any shipper institute proceedings to inquire into the operation of any vessel in use by any railroad or other carrier which has not applied to the commission and had the question of competition or the possibility of competition determined as herein provided. In all such cases the order of said commission shall be final.

That section 6 of said act to regulate commerce, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"When property may be or is transported from point to point in the United States by rail and water through the Panama Canal or otherwise, the transportation being by a common carrier or carriers, and not entirely within the limits of a single State, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have jurisdiction of such transportation and of the carriers, both by rail and by water, which may or do engage in the same, in the following particulars, in addition to the jurisdiction given by the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 18, 1910:

"(a) To establish physical connection between the lines of the rail carrier and the dock of the water carrier by directing the rail carrier to make suitable connection between its line and a track or tracks which have been constructed from the dock to the limits of its right of way, or by directing either or both the rail and water carrier, individually or in connection with one another, to construct and connect with the lines of the rail carrier a spur track or tracks to the dock. This provision shall only apply where such connection is reasonably practicable, can be made with safety to the public, and where the amount of business to be handled is sufficient to justify the outlay.

"The commission shall have full authority to determine the terms and conditions upon which these connecting tracks, when constructed, shall be operated, and it may, either in the construction or the operation of such tracks, determine what sum shall be paid to or by either carrier. The provisions of this paragraph shall extend to cases where the dock is owned by other parties than the carrier involved.

"(b) To establish through routes and maximum joint rates between and over such rail and water lines, and to determine all the terms and conditions under which such lines shall be operated in the handling of the traffic embraced.

"(c) To establish maximum proportional rates by rail to and from the ports to which the traffic is brought, or from which it is taken by the water carrier, and to determine to what traffic and in connection with what vessels and upon what terms and conditions such rates shall apply. By proportional rates are meant those which differ from the corresponding local rates to and from the port and which apply only to traffic which has been brought to the port or is carried from the port by a common carrier by water.

"(d) If any rail carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce enters into arrangements with any water carrier operating from a port in the United States to a foreign country, through the Panama Canal or otherwise, for the handling of through business between interior points of the United States and such foreign country, the Interstate Commerce Commission may require such railway to enter into similar arrangements with any or all other lines of steamships operating from said port to the same foreign country."

The orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission relating to this section shall only be made upon formal complaint or in proceedings instituted by the commission of its own motion and after full hearing. The orders provided for in the two amendments to the act to regulate commerce enacted in this section shall be served in the same manner and enforced by the same penalties and proceedings as are the orders of the commission made under the provisions of section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 18, 1910, and they may be conditioned for the payment of any sum or the giving of security for the payment of any sum or the discharge of any obligation which may be required by the terms of said order.

As proposed to be amended by the Senate committee, section 11 reads:

SEC. 11. That no ship, owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by a railroad company, or in which any railroad company has any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly or indirectly, through any holding company, or by stockholders or directors in common, or in any other manner), shall be permitted to enter or pass through the Panama Canal if engaged in the coastwise trade between ports of the United States. That any ship of American registry, however owned or controlled, shall be permitted to operate through the canal in transoceanic trade to and from oriental or European countries; said vessel on its way to and from said foreign countries shall be permitted to do a coastwise trade between ports of the United States and intermediate foreign ports: Provided, That this shall not be permitted to any ship owned or controlled in whole or in part by any railroad company, except those engaged in said transoceanic trade, nor shall any coastwise trade be done by any such ship unless on a voyage to or from such transoceanic ports, and not to those of Canada, Mexico, or any Central or South American port: Provided further, That no such railroad owned or controlled ship shall pass through the canal unless at least 50 per cent of its cargo, in tonnage, is destined to or shipped from oriental or European ports.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the remaining portion of the section is practically identical with the provisions of the House bill, the only two changes being so inconsequential that I do not feel justified in asking the Secretary to read the remainder of the section.

Mr. President, when I asked the Secretary to read this section so that it might appear in the RECORD I had intended to proceed with a few remarks of my own, having entirely forgotten that when the Senate adjourned last night the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] had the floor. I now yield to him.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am very glad that at this point the chairman of the committee has placed before the Senate the comparative provisions of the Senate and the House bills with reference to this particular matter of railroad-owned ships, for the reason that when the Senate adjourned last evening I was attempting to show that, while this matter had been debated in the Senate upon the theory that it was a choice between two different methods of excluding railroad ships from the canal, as a matter of fact the issue was between the exclusion of such ships, as would be the effect of the House provision, and the permission to railroad owned and controlled ships to pass through the canal, as would be the effect under the Senate provision.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SANDERS. It seems to me that it would be well to have stated the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], because, really, that is the amendment before the Senate, as I understand. It will only take a moment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That has been stated at the desk several times; but I have no objection. However, that is a different matter entirely from what I am discussing at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 22, in the House provision, after the word "water," it is proposed to insert the words "operating through the Panama Canal," so as to read:

in any common carrier by water operating through the Panama Canal with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is difficult to understand why the Senate committee should commence the language of the section now under discussion by prohibiting railroad-owned ships from passing through the canal, when, as a matter of fact, the remainder of the section is an express permission to railroad-owned ships to pass through the canal, with the restriction that they shall be limited to 50 per cent coastwise cargo and that they shall be engaged in the transoceanic trade. If this section had provided simply that railroad-controlled ships should be allowed to pass through the canal on the same terms as other ships, provided 50 per cent of their cargo is transoceanic cargo and that they are engaged in the transoceanic trade, that would have expressed completely and clearly the effect of this section, instead of expressing what is deceptive and misleading in the first half of the section—an absolute prohibition of railroad-owned ships passing through the canal.

It is similar to the question which has been before the country, before the Senate, and before the courts for very many years, as to whether or not the railroads shall be allowed to own coal mines, whether they shall be the owners of the subjects of their transportation, whether they shall be allowed to own electric railroads; in other words, whether they shall be allowed to diverge from the peculiar business of operating steam railroads, for which they have obtained a franchise and under that franchise and with the power which their control of transportation gives them—being necessarily more or less natural monopolies, being monopolies to a certain extent in every case—whether they shall be allowed to take advantage of the power which that franchise gives them to combine, with the control of transportation by rail, transportation by water, operation of coal mines, and transportation by electric roads, thereby extending and broadening the monopoly. This presents the greatest social and economic problem which the country is now called upon to solve.

Mr. President, the question is frankly met by the advocates of the Senate provision. They have not contended in the debate upon this provision that the Senate amendment would prevent railroads from operating ships through the canal. On the other hand, they based their argument upon the defense of the policy of allowing railroads to operate ships through the canal. The argument of Senators who are defending this provision was a defense of the admitted monopoly of water transportation by the railroads of New England. The assertion is made that the people of New England were pleased with the monopoly which the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad has of transportation in that section of the country, a monopoly which not only includes steam railroads, but also includes electric railroads, and includes the entire coastwise shipping trade of the New England coast, according to reliable information which I have, although the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] claims that there are some particular subjects of transportation, such as coal, which are not within the grasp of this coastwise shipping control of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

Mr. President, that is the question. As to the merits of it the people of the Pacific coast have had object lessons; they have had the effect of such a policy upon their business for a generation by which to be guided in considering it. A very good illustration of the manner and means used by the railroads operating jointly with shipping lines to destroy competition is afforded in the case of the steamer Humboldt, out of which grew circumstances which went before the Supreme Court of the United States. That was a vessel which was owned by an independent company operating between Seattle, Wash., and Skagway, Alaska. It was competing with the Alaska syndicate, which controls the entire Alaskan-Seattle shipping business, with the exception of this lone vessel. The Alaska syndicate controls the railroads of Alaska. The manner in which they discriminated against the steamer Humboldt, the manner in which they attempted to put it out of business to suppress competition, was by refusing to make joint rates for the independent steamer upon business from Seattle to the interior of Alaska over the White Pass & Yukon Railroad upon as favorable terms as they granted to vessels owned by the syndicate. They charged a higher joint rate upon through business from Seattle to the Yukon Valley for goods that were shipped by the Humboldt than they did for freight which came over their own lines.

Another means which they used in their effort to drive the Humboldt out of business was by discriminating against it in the use of the docks, which the syndicate also controls at Skagway. Still a further means was the inferior service which the syndicate railroad rendered as to freight which was shipped by the independent vessel.

Now, upon the Pacific coast the docking privileges are controlled by the railroads. They have the three methods which I have just mentioned of discriminating in favor of their own ships, should they be allowed to operate them through the canal, as is provided in the Senate amendment. They have the opportunity to grant special privileges upon the docks. They have the opportunity to grant more favorable joint through rates. They have the opportunity to grant quicker and more favorable and better joint service to the ships of their own lines than to those of their competitors.

It was suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], in the able speech which he delivered upon this subject, that the remedy would be to allow foreign ships to enter into the coastwise trade and thereby break down the monopoly. Of course that opens an entirely new field of discussion and involves new interests, but leaving those new interests out of the question, suppose, for the sake of argument, the coastwise trade was open to foreign ships and the monopoly now held by American ships should be released. Independent lines of foreign ships could no more compete with railroad ships in the traffic between New York and San Francisco than could American ships. There would be no substantial difference in the result whether the ships were foreign or whether they were American—with the opportunity for favoritism in the three especial methods which I have mentioned—the railroads giving a preference to their own vessels would secure a monopoly of the business.

There is no way by which the advantages of the Panama Canal as a competing line of transportation, as a competing route across the continent, could be preserved to the people if the Senate committee amendment to section 11 should be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] asked the question of some Senator on yesterday who was debating this proposition what was the remedy for this condition, implying that there was no remedy, implying that we should helplessly submit to this suppression of competition through the canal. He frankly favored the unlimited ownership and control by railroads of ships going through the canal, as elsewhere on competing lines, and rather cynically, it seemed to me, asked the question, as if there were no answer, what was the remedy for the destruction of this competition by the railroads owning such ships passing over the competing water line.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. There was no cynicism whatever in my observation. I think I addressed the interrogatory to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] touching a certain point of this discussion—I have forgotten what it was, but it was given in good faith—desiring that he should make answer and point out the remedy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not dispute the good faith of the Senator from New Hampshire, but I say it was cynical, as I view it, because it seems to imply at least that the Senator from New Hampshire, who is versed in these questions, knew of no way in which this monopoly could be prevented, and the consequence was that we must submit to it—that it was useless to try to find a remedy for it.

Mr. President, if we are not to prevent the ownership by railroads of vessels on competing water lines, I would perhaps be willing to agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that there would be no way of destroying the monopoly. In the course of time, by strengthening the law—having efficient men administering it, enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, making larger appropriations for its service, so that their agents could be in sufficient numbers in all places where needed to see that the law is enforced—we might by those means preserve a reasonable service and get the benefit of cheap transportation by virtue of the large ships controlled by the railroads. But that is a matter of great doubt. It is a matter which would require a long, tedious experience, a long waiting on the part of the people, in addition to the many years in which they have already waited to get relief from the monopoly of transcontinental freight traffic from which they have been suffering.

But the very idea that the Senator from New Hampshire suggested—that there is no remedy for that monopoly—affords the strongest argument why we should strike at the root of the evil and absolutely prohibit the ownership of competing lines of ships by railroad.

I admit that in addition to that we will still have to strengthen the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission in order to see that the joint traffic arrangements, covered by the sections of this bill read by the Secretary this morning, between the ships and the railroads are reasonable—that the railroads receive the traffic of the independent lines and carry it to its destination in the interior upon reasonable terms.

The Senator from New Hampshire stated on yesterday, or rather asked one of his colleagues if he knew of anyone in New England who objected to the monopoly of transportation in New England by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] stated that he knew of no one who objected, leaving the impression upon the Senate and the appearance in the RECORD that the people of New England were unanimous in their submission to this gigantic monopoly of the transportation of that section of the country.

Mr. President, of course there are differences of opinion, as was stated, in New England upon this subject. I have a statement from a gentleman of high standing in New England who is thoroughly familiar with this question which is directly antagonistic to the information furnished by the Senators whom I have named as to the attitude of the people of New England with reference to the combination of all water and rail transportation in one ownership. In a letter here from Mr. Brandeis, dated in May, he says with reference to this matter:

> New England will indeed rejoice if the Senate adopts without amendment the provision in the Panama bill which prohibits railroads from owning any interest in any competing steamship or rail and steamship line. This provision would go far toward breaking the intolerable and almost incredible transportation monopoly to which we are subjected.
> The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. has not only a practical monopoly of the railroads of New England and of the trolleys in a large part of New England, but it has literally monopolized our coastwise traffic on the Atlantic. There is not to-day running south from any New England State any interstate steamship line which is not controlled by the New Haven, either by ownership or stock interest, except the freight line of the Grand Trunk connecting its New London terminal with New York City. The only boat line from New England to the West Indies and the Gulf is represented by a small boat chartered by the Cuba line, with about 3,000 tons capacity, sailing once a month, and even that line a company allied with the New Haven has recently been seeking to acquire. Our water business to the West Indies and the Gulf has to be done via New Haven lines to New York and transshipped there because of the New Haven's alliance with the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Co. The latter company also runs one boat a week from Boston to Charleston and Jacksonville.
> A comparatively few years ago we had four independent rail and water lines to New York via the Sound—the Fall River Line, the Providence Line, the Stonington Line, and the Norwich Line, and one all-water line—the Metropolitan Line. Not only have all these lines fallen under the domination of the New Haven, but other competing lines established meanwhile—the Joy Line and the Enterprise Line—were bought up or otherwise suppressed. No competitor was too large to be overcome and none too insignificant to be tolerated. Thus the New Haven acquired the lesser steamship lines from Connecticut and Rhode Island ports to New York—the Bridgeport Line, the New Haven Line, the Hartford Line, and the Block Island Line. It purchased the Maine Steamship Co., from Portland to New York; it purchased the line from Boston to Philadelphia.
> The passage by Congress of an act prohibiting railroads from owning competing steamship lines would emancipate New England.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LIPPITT. The discussion of this question was so exhaustive last night that I do not need to go into it very fully, but I should like to know whether that gentleman is a resident of Maine or of what part of New England.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He is a resident of Boston.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understand the statement he makes is that the New Haven controls all the lines of New England.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have just read what he says.

Mr. LIPPITT. He speaks of the New Haven road owning all the steamship lines. I understand the New Haven road owns no steamship of any kind running out of Boston and has no interest in any.

He says that in Providence the New Haven road has throttled every form of competition and there is no independent line. I stated to the Senate day before yesterday that I myself saw the New Haven steamers going out of Providence on Monday or Tuesday night, followed within a few hundred feet by the Lexington, of the Colonial Line, a ship of practically the same size, operating in competition with the New Haven and with which the New Haven had nothing to do.

It seems to me that when a gentleman says that New England is crying for relief, and when, in support of that contention, he makes the statement that there is no competing line at a time when people can see one and ship by it and are doing it every day, it is not very reliable testimony.

There is a competing line at New Haven, the Stearin Line; there is a line at New London; there is a line at Providence. There is an independent line that runs from Norwich to New York, and has for years, with which the New Haven has nothing to do. I think gentlemen who bring in testimony of that kind as to a fact of that kind, when the evidence is ample that competition does exist, can not represent New England sentiment. New England sentiment can not be founded on misstatements.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the Senator in that respect, that it can not be founded on misstatements, and I know the Senator from Rhode Island does not intend to make any misstatement. Yet we have been confronted here during this debate by statements made by the Senator from Rhode Island which are in direct conflict with the statements which have been presented to the Senate by officials whose business it was to know these things and to investigate them. So we are confronted by the difficulty of choosing between the statements of the Senator from Rhode Island and the other statements to which I have referred. I am not responsible for either of them. To what extent the Senator from Rhode Island is informed I do not know. I heard the Senator from Rhode Island yesterday, in answer to an inquiry here, make a statement that the Grand Trunk Railroad of Canada owned and operated no line in New England, and yet——

Mr. LIPPITT. I beg your pardon, if the Senator will allow me. He did not hear me make that statement. He heard me make the statement—I have not had time to verify it since, but I have it on very strong authority, and I think it is true—that the Grand Trunk Railroad itself did not have any mileage in New England in its own name. I did not say, and that was the distinction I was making, that the Grand Trunk Railroad did not own and control railroads in New England. They do. I distinctly stated that they were building a line to Providence, and were preparing to build another line to Boston, and that they own a line, and have for several years, from New London through central Vermont. There is the distinction I made. Of course the Senator does not mean to misrepresent my statement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all.

Mr. LIPPITT. The idea which I was trying to present was that the Grand Trunk Railroad as the Grand Trunk Railroad was a Canadian railroad operating in Canada and through its ownership of other lines in New England had a very strong influence there; but I think that the practical effect of that is that through those Canadian-owned lines the Grand Trunk is able to take freight from the northern part of New England in bond through Canada to United States Pacific ports. I know they do. They take cotton goods in bond through Canada and land it in Vancouver where they can put it on their ships.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is getting pretty far away from the subject—what the Grand Trunk can do in handling its business. I said nothing about what it does in operating its lines.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was simply trying to indicate to the Senator what I had in mind in making the distinction at all. The distinction is a plain one, and I think I made no misstatement when I said that the operation of the Grand Trunk in New England is through stock-owned railroads and not by the Grand Trunk. That is the point I was bringing out.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, in order that there may not be any misunderstanding, if he makes the same distinction with reference to the shipping lines he referred to that he has just made in the case of the Grand Trunk Railroad? Does he make the same distinction with reference to the lines of ships controlled by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad? The Senator stated, in the first instance, that the Grand Trunk Railroad operated no line in New England.

Mr. LIPPITT. No, sir.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What was the Senator's statement?

Mr. LIPPITT. The statement was that the Grand Trunk Railroad itself did not enter into New England.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That the Grand Trunk Railroad itself did not enter into New England—and now the Senator has explained that what he meant was that it came into New England through other lines which it controlled.

Mr. LIPPITT. That is true.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, I ask the Senator if he makes the same distinction in the case of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, when he says they do not operate all coast steamship lines in New England, and means to except from his statement the lines of steamships in which the stock is owned by them?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I have stated that over and over again. Certainly the New Haven road controls many railroads through leases and through stock ownership, and steamship lines, through stock ownership, in various parts of New England. The distinction in the case of the New Haven road is not important, because both the New Haven road itself and all its subsidiaries are subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Grand Trunk Railroad of Canada is not subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission. As the Senator knows, the commission can have nothing to do with it in any way, name, or form. They can control its subsidiaries in the United States, but the Grand Trunk Railroad, as I understand it, is Canadian, built by the Canadian Government, and fostered and subsidized by the Canadian Government. The distinction is perfectly plain.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The distinction is plainly made by the Senator. As I understand him, he contends that there is no monopoly of the coastwise lines of vessels in New England by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, either by direct ownership or indirect ownership.

Mr. LIPPITT. Certainly I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If that is his position, he is in direct conflict with the information which I have, and apparently in conflict with the information of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, whose testimony he read yesterday and which he quoted to justify the joint ownership of the lines of ships by the railroad company.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will point out the specific instances in which I am in conflict I will be glad to discuss them, but——

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will read the RECORD he will find the statement which I have read this morning—of various lines of vessels controlled by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, as stated by Mr. Brandeis, of Boston, in whose opinion I have confidence, and will see there a specific instance.

Mr. LIPPITT. But I did not quote Mr. Brandeis and I never heard of Mr. Brandeis's testimony.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It has been read this morning.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator said a minute ago I was in conflict with the testimony of the Interstate Commerce Commission; I presume that of Mr. Prouty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. Prouty.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not know how I can be in conflict with a man when he says that it would be a very unfortunate thing—I am not quoting the exact language—to divorce steamships and railroads in New England, and when for an hour I argued last night the very same proposition, that it would be unfortunate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very much surprised that the Senator does not see, after having pointed out——

Mr. LIPPITT. He says the same thing I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. You say it would be a misfortune to divorce them?

Mr. LIPPITT. Yes, sir; and he says so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then how could they be divorced unless they had been previously joined together?

Mr. LIPPITT. I never said that they were not joined together. I never for a minute said any such thing. What does the Senator mean by making such a statement as that when I have said over and over again that they own some lines, directly or indirectly? It is common knowledge; nobody will deny it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I certainly am unfortunate, Mr. President, in my understanding of the Senator. Several times this morning I understood him to deny it.

Mr. LIPPITT. There are many lines they do not own, if that is what the Senator means.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Washington permit a single observation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I propounded the question to the Senator from Rhode Island yesterday as to whether in his knowledge there was complaint in New England as to the transportation situation. Of course, I did not mean to intimate that there was not complaint against the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. There are complaints against every railroad, I suppose, on the face of the earth. There are always some people who are greatly disturbed, and they are generally people who have little business with the roads. What I meant to imply was that so far as I know—and I represent a manufacturing State that has a large transportation business—business men were not complaining as to the facilities or as to the cost of transportation, and that is precisely what I understand the situation to be. Of course, Mr. Brandeis complains. He is an agitator. He is not a business man. He is a man who is in the limelight always when the question of railroads or steamships or monopolies is suggested, and he is well known in that connection.

Mr. LIPPITT. I know the Senator from Washington has no desire to misstate what I said. I am sure that he——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not undertaking to state what the Senator said. I did undertake to state it, and then the Senator corrected me. If there is any correction, the RECORD will show who is inconsistent and who is consistent.

Mr. LIPPITT. I think there must be some little misunderstanding of words between us. The point is that I said there were competing lines that the New Haven road did not own and was not interested in, directly or indirectly, and the Senator perhaps thought that I meant that they did not own those that they were connected with. I can not see it in any other way. At all events, the situation is that there are New Haven lines and there are competing lines owned by other people.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to have printed in the RECORD at this point—I think it is a good opportunity—the truth with regard to the railroad mileage in New England that is not controlled by the New Haven road.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think I will yield to have that interpolated in the brief remarks that I am making. I would prefer that the Senator put it in at the conclusion of my remarks. I yielded to him with the expectation that he wanted to ask a question or correct some statement that I had made.

Mr. McLEAN. It is just one sentence. It will not take very much time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, in reference to the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire as to the reliability of the statements of Mr. Brandeis on the question of public opinion in New England in regard to this, I want to quote briefly from a later statement from Mr. Brandeis. I know that the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, I think there is a little misunderstanding. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] did not intend it to appear as a part of the Senator's speech, but at this time simply wanted permission to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that. I have no objection to any statement that the Senator desires to make with reference to anything I have said. I understood that he was going to take up a different subject.

Mr. CLAPP. No; he did not expect it would appear as a part of the Senator's remarks, I think.

Mr. McLEAN. Not at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would not have any objection to that even. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. McLEAN. It is taken from the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission in regard to the railroad mileage in New England:

The Bangor & Aroostook, 599 miles; Grand Trunk in the United States, 584 miles; Canadian Pacific, 198 miles; Boston & Albany, 392 miles.

These are railroad lines in the United States, owned by the roads which I have named, and substantially all in New England.

With regard to the competing navigation lines, as far as I have been able to get information, and I think it is correct, there are competing navigation lines from New York to New Rochelle, Manaroneck, Greenwich, Stamford, South Norwalk, New Haven, New London, Norwich, Providence, and Boston, which include all the ports of any consequence along the coast.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he has investigated the question whether they are really competing lines or whether they are controlled indirectly by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad?

Mr. McLEAN. They are lines in which the New York & New Haven Railroad has absolutely no control or ownership whatever.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Senator investigated that?

Mr. McLEAN. I have consulted with the officers of the railroad corporations in regard to the matter and other sources which are considered to be absolutely reliable. I took an interest in this matter from the statement made by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] that every foot of railroad in the United States east of the city of New York is now controlled by one corporation. That was the statement of the junior Senator from New York. I have myself taken no personal interest in this matter, but it seemed to me that that statement could not be correct, and I took occasion to correspond with the officers of the railroad company, and I have no doubt their report is correct.

Mr. POINDEXTER. All I have to say about that is, if the Senator will permit me, while I have a great deal of confidence in the personal character of most railroad officials, the Senator from Connecticut has a great deal more confidence in the reliability of their statements in regard to the business of their railroads than I have if he is basing his conclusions upon the railroad officials' statement in this connection.

Mr. McLEAN. I have no doubt that this statement is absolutely correct.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a matter of degree of confidence in the railroad officials giving the real truth in regard to their traffic connections.

Mr. McLEAN. We have a great many honest, reliable men interested in our corporate affairs in New England. We have passed by the period when we look upon our corporations as a danger to our industries. We look upon the railroad in Connecticut not as a combination of freebooters, whose purpose and determination is to injure the interests of the Commonwealth, but we look upon the railroad as a great highway, paid for by the money of the people and constructed for the service of the people to facilitate a division of labor and to reduce the greatest tax we have to bear—the transportation tax. We have had years of experience in this matter in New England. We desire to treat the corporations fairly and we intend to insist that we have fair treatment in return.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator, while he is on his feet, if he knows anything about the Fall River Line, the Providence Line, the Stonington Line, the Norwich Line, and the Metropolitan Line of ships?

Mr. McLEAN. I suppose they are owned by the New Haven road.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator know about the Joy Line or the Enterprise Line?

Mr. McLEAN. They are owned by the New Haven road, as I understand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the Bridgeport Line?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not think there is any Enterprise Line now. It went out of existence.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As to the Bridgeport Line, the New Haven Line, the Block Island Line, and the Maine Steamship Co., I will ask the Senator if he is informed about those?

Mr. McLEAN. I think they are controlled by the New Haven road.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator tell me the purpose of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. acquiring the ownership of all the lines I have just mentioned if it was not to establish a monopoly to control the business?

Mr. McLEAN. In reply to that, I will call attention to the manner in which this monopoly has treated the city of Bridgeport, about which much was said yesterday afternoon. I think the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] said that the railroad owned every bit of water front there, and that the city of Bridgeport is subject to the entire control of this extortionate monopoly. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fares which are charged to New York from Bridgeport—2 cents a mile by rail and a cent a mile by water, $1.20 by rail and 60 cents by water. The competing navigation lines are there, to be sure; I do not know how serious the competition is; but the fact is that the water lines owned by the railroad do not earn more than 3½ per cent upon the investment. The tax by water is, of course, cheaper from places nearer Bridgeport than it probably would be from Boston and Providence. I cite that as an instance showing that the railroad companies in New England, at least so far as the New Haven road is concerned, have long ago ceased, I think, to look upon the policy of depredation, of mistreating the interests of New England, as in any possible way conducing to the prosperity of the railroad. I think the policy has been entirely changed there. I certainly hope so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The policy has been changed in that regard, I understand?

Mr. McLEAN. I think so; very much in the last few years. We have had some experiences in Connecticut and in New England generally of railroad competition and monopoly both.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Previous to 10 years ago?

Mr. McLEAN. That is, it has seemed to be such to the people, and I have no doubt there have been good grounds for it; but in recent years I think the whole policy of the railroads has changed with regard to their treatment of the people. I repeat, I hope so and think so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is, the railroads have been more reasonable recently?

Mr. McLEAN. I think they realize that it is not for the benefit of the roads from any point of view to do anything except encourage the growth of the communities through which they run.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if this misconduct of the railroads, to which he refers, from which the people of New England have suffered included the political control of New England by the railroads, or attempts on the part of the railroads to take part in politics, to control the legislatures, and to make and unmake the laws of the States of New England? I should like to ask the Senator if the troubles of New England from railroad depredations, as he says, or extortions, or other misconduct, consisted of what I have just referred to?

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator will allow me to answer that question in my own way, I will say the corporation is a Connecticut invention, and, like all inventions of value——

Mr. POINDEXTER. They come from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. All those that are useful do. The corporation—that is, the limited-liability corporation—was invented in Connecticut by the general assembly, I think, in 1818. Up to that time the world had never known an association of men organized under a joint-stock agreement where there was no partnership liability. Like other machines we have made in Connecticut, we may have had some trouble with them, but we have got used to them and we intend to run them for the benefit of the people. We have concluded that it is an unwise governmental policy to limit American opportunity to any special sources of capital.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does not the Senator believe that the ownership of steamship lines by railroads accomplishes that very purpose—that it does limit American opportunity?

Mr. McLEAN. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So far as operating ships is concerned, to a special source of capital?

Mr. McLEAN. No, Mr. President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator believe that independent lines can compete with railroad lines in business which is partly by rail and partly by water—nearly all of which is characterized by those conditions?

Mr. McLEAN. No; we learned long ago, Mr. President, that a four-track road well managed is much better for the public than four single, separate corporations with single-track roads.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am ready, possibly, under certain conditions, to agree with the Senator on that; but that has nothing whatever to do with the subject we were discussing.

Mr. McLEAN. It seems to me that the principle involved here is one of great importance, and while I had no intention of presuming to present my views at this time, I want to call the Senator's attention to my view, and I think it is the New England view and the view we have followed: You can not reduce the transportation tax to the consumer and to the shipper until you first make it possible that it shall be reduced to the carrier. I think the Senator from Washington will realize that if all the railroad companies in the United States to-day, becoming tired of the burdens which they are bearing—some of them self-imposed, no doubt—but if they should become tired of the burdens they are carrying to-day and should offer to convey these vast properties to the United States at cost and the Government should take the properties and offer to transport freight and passengers free, it would not add one penny to the national income or reduce by one penny the actual cost of transportation. I think the Senator will agree to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not agree. The Senator from Connecticut said I would agree with him, but I think I do not agree with the Senator on that proposition, although I would regard it as a great calamity for the Government to have——

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator does not get my point——

Mr. POINDEXTER (continuing). To take over the railroads and to operate them, especially if it had to assume that great burden suddenly, as it would have to do under the conditions mentioned by the Senator; but I do believe that if the Government should take the railroads, operate them, and furnish free transportation and free passage it would result in an economic saving, because I think that the expenditure of the Government in operating the railroads and in carrying the freights of the country would be far less than the tax which the people of this country pay annually to the railroads now to the amount of $2,800,000,000, approximately, equal to the entire cost of their Federal, State, and municipal governments.

Mr. McLEAN. I think, Mr. President, that it would double the cost of transportation. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like to follow my point one step further. I believe in the policy of a fair field and no favors. I do not think it would take a very long pencil or a very large slate to demonstrate that but for that policy which so far has been pursued by our Government we would have less than half the railroad mileage we have in this country to-day and transportation rates would be twice what they are to-day. I am surprised that the Senator from Washington should reach a position where he wants to limit the free exercise of the ability of the strongest and ablest men we have, together with their money, in an effort to reduce again and again the cost of transportation by constantly improving the floating machinery that will reduce the cost of the unit of traffic.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is a difference of opinion between the Senator and myself as to whether or not it would have that result. The Senator believes that monopoly of transportation by the railroads would result in reducing the cost of transportation. I do not believe any such thing. I have seen too much extortion. The people of my section of the country have suffered too long from unjust taxation by railroads and extortionate railroad rates ever to believe that the power to levy such taxes as the railroads see fit, if competition were absolutely suppressed, would result in lowering rates to the people. Furthermore, the question of discrimination and favoritism between individuals and between communities is more serious than that of high rates.

Mr. McLEAN. It is a question of Government ownership or Government control, and I think most of us realize it is coming to one or the other. The wars of the future are bound to be commercial wars, Mr. President, and it is the survival of the fittest. If we win, it will be due to the inventor and to his ally, the venturesome capitalist and the man with brains to direct that capital.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is very true.

Mr. McLEAN. And, if the Senator will pardon me, they will not win the fight because they love their country or because they love you, but they will win it because they love money, and when this Government——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. Is the Senator willing to surrender——

Mr. McLEAN. Allow me to finish——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAILEY in the chair). The rules of the Senate forbid two Senators speaking at the same time.

Mr. McLEAN. This is the first time I have spoken in regard to this matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator was asking me a question, as I understood, or, assuming that I was agreeing with certain propositions. I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not the office of the Chair to say that one Senator shall not yield to an interruption, but, having yielded, the Senator to whom he yielded is entitled to finish his sentence. However, the Senator occupying the floor is entitled to resume whenever he chooses.

Mr. McLEAN. I think the Senator from Washington is very kind to me, Mr. President. I could, of course, elaborate my point of view with regard to this matter at some length. It seems to me very clear that we are not progressing, but that we are going backward. When we lay down a rule in this country that we can not take advantage of our own brains and our own capital it seems to me that we are not progressing in the right direction. It is not the policy that has brought us thus far on the road to success. To my mind the position taken by the Senator from Washington is entirely incorrect.

If the Senator will pardon me for a moment further, I should like to inquire if he does not think that free transportation through the canal, if we could have absolutely free transportation through the canal, would be of great benefit to the mid-continental section of this country? If he does think so, why does he assume that the railroads will not——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would rather the Senator would not answer his own question for me. I do not know that I would answer it in the same way that he would.

Mr. McLEAN. Well, I should like to have the Senator answer it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not say that I would agree with the Senator on that proposition.

Mr. McLEAN. I wish the Senator would answer the question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would say, in answer to the question that the Senator's object of affording free opportunity to capital, free opportunity to brains, free opportunity to ambition, and free opportunity to enterprise is the same object that I have; but the monopolization of the transportation of the country, the discrimination, the favoritism which the railroad company necessarily extends to its own line, instead of affording free opportunity to the people of this country, everlastingly throttles it and prevents the reaping of the fruits of enterprise and of investment which the people of the country otherwise would have in this great occupation. And so the monopoly of transportation would be preserved in private hands, with its consequent horrors of discriminations, tyranny, and extortions, instead of competition bringing to every man and community the same service, proportionate rates, and decent treatment in the operation of a great public utility.

Mr. McLEAN. I am not questioning the history of the situation at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not history alone, but present conditions also.

Mr. McLEAN. I am asking what will probably happen unless the Government has the power and the intelligence to lay down a rule whereby it can take advantage of its own brains and its own capital? I wish the Senator would answer my question, whether he thinks cheap transportation through the Panama Canal will not be of great benefit to the mid-continental section of this country and to the whole country?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly. Cheap transportation through the canal will be——

Mr. McLEAN. It will be a benefit to Kansas; it will be a benefit to Washington, to the Dakotas, and to all that great northwestern section of the country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If it is real cheap transportation, if it is not fake and sham cheap transportation, which is so burdened at the terminals by discrimination, so burdened by a failure to make proper connections, and so burdened by failure to receive and exercise equal advantages at the docks of the seaports so that instead of being cheap transportation it would be high transportation—if all those matters are eliminated, of course, I believe that cheap transportation would be an advantage, and it is for the purpose of obtaining cheap transportation that the canal is being dug.

Mr. McLEAN. We are not going to confess that we can not eliminate that; we are not going to confess that we can not regulate the ownership and use of our water fronts so that they shall be at the disposal of competing navigation lines.

Now, I want to ask the Senator, if it be true that he believes the cheaper we get transportation through the canal the better, why is it that he assumes that the railroads will not agree with him? Every pound of freight that goes through that canal has to be delivered at the seaboard, and when it arrives at the other end of its destination it has to be distributed. This is the first time I have heard that cheap transportation through the Panama Canal can have any other result than to be a positive benefit to the whole country. Why does the Senator assume that the railroads will not agree with him?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The answer to that is so obvious that I am surprised that the Senator should have asked the question. In the first place, if the Senator believes that the railroads are eager for the Panama Canal to be dug and that cheap transportation through it between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts should ensue, how does the Senator explain the fact that for the last 50 years, or for the last 25 years, we will say, the railroads of this country have been opposing in every way they could, astutely and secretly many times, the construction of the canal?

Mr. McLEAN. It is due to the fact that the railroad managers in the past have been very blind to their real interest.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh. It is not what the railroad officials really want, but what the Senator asserts or thinks they ought to want.

Mr. McLEAN. No; I do not believe that any policy which is injurious to the industrial interests of States of this Nation will benefit the railroads that run through those States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have often, if the Senator will permit me, had the same thought as the Senator has expressed, that the railroads were shortsighted in antagonizing the people and shortsighted in leaving the freight rates as they were. Their policy of rate making is that the railroad shall receive what the traffic can bear, but they have overworked the theory. It is not so much the ideal condition that we are dealing with or what the railroad companies ought to do in an enlightened self-interest. But the condition which confronts us is to the contrary, and is a shortsighted policy, the extreme of selfishness. It is the attempt on the part of the railroad companies to haul as far as they can and get as much as they can for the time being, and let the future take care of itself. That is their policy. I have heard experts of the railroads swear in court under oath that they had no policy or system of levying rates other than to inquire into the business and find out how much the traffic could stand, and levy the amount which would give to them the greatest possible returns. Their whole system of rates from the East to interior points on the Pacific coast is based on a theory of thousands of miles of totally unnecessary hauls, up and down mountain ranges, through the interior point to the seaport, and from the seaport back to the same interior point.

Mr. McLEAN. If we admit they will take the short-sighted policy. Then it seems to me that unless human nature changes entirely, it will be only a short time before this monopoly of the coastwise trade will be complete. The world is, for purposes of intercommunication gentlemen's agreements, no larger than was the State of Connecticut a hundred years ago. How can the Senator assume that freed from the railroad interest it will not do precisely what every corporation has done? If he is correct in his opinion with regard to them, how can he expect to benefit until that competition has become ruinous? What does he expect they will do—come to some agreement? Then you will have a monopoly without any supervision over it. What must we do then?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We propose, in the first place, to limit the monopoly, so far as possible, by limiting the special privileges and special opportunities, such as would be the result in the case of a railroad line of ships competing with an independent line of ships; and then, in addition to that, when big combinations come, as they must come, notwithstanding the elimination of special privileges, we propose to regulate them reasonably by the Government, so that in case of public utilities they shall be operated primarily in the interest of the public, rather than to pecuniarily reward their promoters.

Mr. McLEAN. Why not begin now?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We are beginning now. I have been a strong advocate of that policy.

Mr. McLEAN. If it is the question of ownership that regulates, why not begin now? If it is a choice of evils, I prefer the lesser.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We have begun, and we can not begin again, because we are in process of regulating that, but I want to say——

Mr. McLEAN. I will repeat that we have had considerable experience with corporations in New England, good and bad ones, and we long ago came to the conclusion that it was possible for the governments, which control these corporations, to establish a rule whereby we could get the benefit of the sources of capital and the brains best adapted and in the best position to produce the best service for the people and to reduce and again reduce the transportation tax; and if conditions are not so in the Northwest I sincerely hope that the Senator from Washington will not feel like inflicting upon New England what I know will be in a measure confiscatory, and will be a great disturbance to our commerce there. It will in no sense work anything but a harm. Conditions may not be perfect, but they are much better than they used to be, and we hope for constant improvement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think I will have to decline to yield further if the Senator from Connecticut is now going to take up the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. McLEAN. I agree with the Senator from Washington. I apologize to him and to the Senate. It is so easy for Members of this body to say, and say well, all that needs to be said upon every subject here and elsewhere, that I concluded very early in my career as a Member of this body that I might safely continue indefinitely my membership of silence; and I apologize to the Senator from Washington and I apologize to the people who have to bear the burden of printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The question I wanted to ask was whether my colleague had obtained permission to print in the RECORD the statistics he proposed to have printed?

Mr. McLEAN. I beg pardon?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was whether my colleague had obtained permission to print in the RECORD the figures which he proposes to put into the RECORD?

Mr. McLEAN. I think that everything I desired to have put into the RECORD was put in with the consent of the Senator from Washington. I had nothing but those few items.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In order that there may be no question about it the present occupant of the chair, who was not occupying the chair at that time, will now state that the privilege will be granted, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, all that has developed in this colloquy which unexpectedly took place between the Senator from Connecticut and myself is his frank admission that he is in favor of the unlimited ownership by railroads of ships doing business through the Panama Canal. So it clears up the question here. In other words, the Senator, to all intents and purposes, throws open the canal to the unrestricted use of the railroads. I wish I could have the satisfied conviction of the Senator from Connecticut that the railroads, even some time in the future, are going to lay aside their policy of selfishness and the policy of taking from the people the greatest possible returns they can get for their service and adopt in place of it an enlightened policy from which they themselves, as well as all the remainder of the interests and all the people of the country, should profit from the general prosperity and the general well-being.

Our experience has taught us another lesson: If the railroads are ever going to adopt a policy of that kind—a fair and liberal and legal attitude toward the people of this country—they will have to be compelled to do so by governmental authority; and we propose to bring to the assistance of governmental authority, so far as we are able to do so, the operation of natural law, the play of free competition to the extent that it can operate where there are no special privileges.

My judgment is that the question of monopoly in this country would be very largely solved—whether the Sherman law were repealed and taken from the statute books or whether it was amended or not amended—if it were possible for the Government to abolish special privilege. The great monopolies of this country have attained their size and force and have been able to perpetrate their extortions upon the people more largely through the favoritism of transportation than in any other way—through special rates, through the ownership of railroads, through the control of means of transportation. So on this particular question the benefits which the Senator says will come from the Panama Canal can be rendered more likely, can be rendered more secure to the people, by affording a reasonable opportunity for the ships of all the citizens of this country who desire to engage in that business to pass through that canal upon equal opportunities of securing business with any others. This can not be so if railroad ships ply through the canal.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a question or for a correction, but not for a speech.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator says that railroad ships can render better service than the ships that are not controlled by the railroads. I will ask him if he has not used that expression?

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is that?

Mr. McLEAN. If you have not already used the expression in the debate upon this question that the railroad ships can render better service, and because of that they can win in competition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not used that expression, and I think the Senator has it so much in his mind as a part of his creed upon the subject that he imagines I have said it.

Mr. McLEAN. I wrote it down as you said it, I thought.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But I never used that expression. On the contrary, I think when the railroads will have destroyed competition through the canal instead of rendering better service they will render worse service.

Mr. McLEAN. Did not the Senator say that if the railroads were permited to own the ships they would for the time being render better service?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. McLEAN. And so drive all other ships from the canal.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is entirely mistaken. I said if the transcontinental railroads at the same time owned a line of ships plying between the Atlantic and Pacific, they would favor their own line of ships in three ways. First, by granting them special and favored trade. Second, by granting them special advantages of docks which are controlled and monopolized by the railroads in all the Pacific cities, with the exception of some new docks which are being put in by the city of Los Angeles. In every place they would discriminate in favor of their own line. Even if these two methods which I have described should be prohibited, they would evade the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission in a way which would make it difficult if not impossible to prevent it, namely, by rendering inferior service and slower service upon joint business to the independent lines and good service in connection with their own lines, so that the independent lines would be compelled to go out of business as they have been compelled to go out of business under these conditions heretofore existing on the Pacific coast, in San Francisco and in Seattle.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Did he not use this expression—that foreign ships could not stand up and compete with the railroad-owned American ships?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did use that expression, coupled with the further statement that a foreign ship was an independent. I said that an independent line of foreign ships could not compete with the railroad line for the reason that the railroads would practice the same discrimination against the foreign line. I think they would practice the same discrimination against the foreign lines that they would practice against a domestic line.

Mr. McLEAN. Certainly; but why is it that the Senator thinks the foreign-built ship, which we have been talking about here for some time as being constructed for something like two-thirds of the cost of an American ship, could not stand up against the railroad-owned ships in competition through the Panama Canal?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For various reasons which I have mentioned. In the first place, it is coastwise trade subject to our coastwise regulations as to the employment of seamen and as to operation. They would be subject to practically the cost of operation that our own ships are.

Mr. McLEAN. Oh!

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me complete my answer to at least one of the many questions which the Senator has asked me. The foreign vessel attempting to compete with a line of ships owned by a railroad doing business between New York and San Francisco, when it takes a cargo on at New York consigned to various points on the Pacific coast, to be distributed from San Francisco to Denver, to Reno, to Sacramento, each destination has to be reached from the line of the Southern Pacific Railroad and its connections. The Southern Pacific Railroad, operating at the same time a line of ships between New York and San Francisco, in a very short time will, by the same means I have described, put out of business its competing line, whether it is owned by foreigners flying the American flag or whether it is under American registry, by discriminations in service and by unequal joint rates and in docking privileges.

Mr. McLEAN. If that be true, why should not the United States continue this line in operation? If it can compete with all the world and reduce the cost of the unit of traffic, why should it not continue?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is an entirely new proposition which the Senator had not referred to before. I understand him now to be referring to these Government-line ships from New York to Colon.

Mr. McLEAN. Why should we not continue it by putting it under the supervision of a commission which will control the railroad water lines after they have reduced the cost of transportation to compete, not against each other, but against the rates that the Government lays down?

Mr. POINDEXTER. You do not need a Government commission over a Government ship if the Government owns the line of ships.

Mr. McLEAN. You misunderstand me. The Interstate Commerce Commission should watch this development of the navigation business and encourage it in every possible way, and, then, as a result, compel competition against a reasonable rule with regard to rates laid down by the Government.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In answering that question I will say that it goes back to the same subject that was discussed when the interstate-commerce bill was before the Senate; that is, monopoly regulated by a commission, or competition and regulation. I would be glad to see the Government line extended through the canal to the Pacific coast.

I am heartily in favor of extending the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have a commission now. One of the results of the studies and the knowledge of that commission is that the commission has come to the conclusion that the railroads ought not to be allowed to operate ships through the canal. If you are going to profit by the experience and by the expert knowledge of the commission, that is the course we should adopt.

Mr. McLEAN. I will quote what Commissioner Prouty said of the situation in New England, and especially to Connecticut, as to railroad-owned water lines:

> So, also, I think, if it is possible, the New Haven Railroad ought to be allowed to continue to operate the Sound steamers. I believe it would be unfortunate to compel that road to divorce itself from the New England Navigation Co.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That question was gone over between the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT].

Mr. McLEAN. I understand that the Interstate Commerce Commission has indicated its unwillingness to take on any more work, and I am not surprised at it. There are many reasons why the present Interstate Commerce Commission should advance that suggestion. I am not ready to admit, however, that there are not brains in this country quite able, under a fair compensation, to take hold of this matter and deal with it, and I believe with the Senator from Washington that we must deal with it sooner or later.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator's assumption that the railroad companies want to see traffic go through the canal, or that they want to see cheap rates through the canal, is so much in conflict with what we absolutely know of the desires of the railroads that it is not necessary to discuss it. The railroad companies do not want to see cheap traffic through the canal. They do not want to see any traffic through the canal. They want to retain the traffic as much as possible to be transported by railways themselves across the country.

Mr. McLEAN. I did not assume anything. I merely stated my view as to the effect of cheap transportation through the canal. They, of course, do not want to transport it for less than it costs. That does not do anybody any good.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will decline to yield except for a correction or for a statement.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield for the same purpose, not for an argument, but for a question.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator says that the railroads do not want cheap transportation through the canal. Does he know the opinion of all the railroads or simply the transcontinental roads? The railroads on the New England coast, on the Atlantic coast, have every reason to desire cheap transportation. Some railroads may not want it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The railroads I had specially in mind were the railroads terminating on the Pacific coast, the great transcontinental railroads. I can imagine that, under some possible conditions, a railroad which had no Pacific coast connection might want cheap traffic through the canal, and I understand the argument of the Senator to be that that would be to the advantage of the Pacific coast.

The trouble about that is that those railroads would be subject to the same absolute control of the transportation by the Pacific coast railroads which control the terminals and distributing lines on the Pacific coast, and could not compete with them, they could not get the business, they could not run their line against lines operated by the Pacific coast railroads unless they formed a combination with them, unless they went in with them and maintained the same rates. That would be the result, and that has always been the result, and the traffic would still move to the West over the railroads at the same rates at present prevailing.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not think it is necessary to continue the discussion; but I simply want to suggest that when the Senator said all railroads he was going too far.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, referring again to the New England conditions, in which I am not interested to the extent Senators from New England are, of course, they illustrate the same problems involved in the canal itself. I have an additional statement here from Mr. Brandeis, of whom I was speaking, and in passing I would say that I have an entirely different opinion of Mr. Brandeis from the characterization of him by the Senator from New Hampshire, I realize that they regard these questions from different points of view. But Mr. Brandeis is a man of ability, intelligence, and character, a successful practicing lawyer, and a man who does not speak without consideration, especially as to facts. I regard his statement of conditions and statement of facts as substantial, and entitled to as much credence as those of any man with whom I am acquainted. His statements are in entire variance with every one of the Senators from New England who has spoken here. He refers to the attitude of New England upon the New York, New Haven, and Hartford monopoly, both as to existence of the monopoly, in the first place, and as to the desire of the people in regard to it in the second place. He says:

In the three years since the dismissal of the Government proceedings—

Proceedings were instituted by the present administration against this monopoly for its dissolution and were subsequently dismissed by the Attorney General—

our people have seen some of the fruits of monopoly and are learning from sad experience. The service on the Boston & Maine had so worsened—

That seems to be a New England word.

Mr. GALLINGER. We never heard it in our part of New England.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not familiar with it, but I am satisfied it is a good word.

That Gov. Foss has referred to it as "intolerable," as "deteriorating," and as a "menace to the prosperity of Massachusetts."

Those words are in quotation marks.

On other parts of the New Haven system there are also many complaints of service—

The Senator from Connecticut refers to the improvement of the service obtained from this monopoly of transportation by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. Mr. Brandeis says:

On other parts of the New Haven system there are also many complaints of service, and there have been many increases of rates and charges, both freight and passenger.

Between 1907 and 1909 our "influential people," and a large part of the community, misled by the delusion of the advantages of the monopoly and Wall Street's glittering promises, were eager for concentration of power in the New Haven. Since then a great revolution of feeling has come, and the community is trying eagerly to find a way of breaking the New Haven monopoly, both by the introduction into Massachusetts of an extension of the Grand Trunk Railroad, and by severing from the New Haven system the Boston & Maine, which had been so recently acquired.

You will see from my inclosed address that I entirely agree with your protest against steam roads owning trolleys. That was distinctly the Massachusetts policy. Unfortunately the New Haven's power with us has been so great that its ownership of certain trolleys in the western part of the State has been legalized, and its control of others is likely to be.

Fourth. In my letter to you of the 25th, insert after the words "West Indies Company," line 5, page 2: "The latter company also runs one boat a week from Boston to Charleston and Jacksonville."

Fifth. Complaints of our railroad service under the monopoly have been so general of late that the Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered an investigation, and Chairman Prouty is to come to Massachusetts to conduct the hearings soon.

Mr. McLEAN. I have no doubt, if the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield unless for a question or for a correction of some statement.

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator assumes that I have said that I had not——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am going to conclude in a moment. However, I will yield to the Senator if he wants to correct a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will proceed.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator seems to think that I stated we have a special monopoly under our New England railroads. My point, and my only point, is that we have come to the conclusion in New England that it is better to have one corporation under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce and Public Utilities Commissions than to submit to the competition which we had for years. There are many imperfections at present no doubt, and there are causes of complaint no doubt about that, but we believe that we are on a safer and better way to ultimately secure the best service from our public-service corporations than by trying by law to restore competition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the people of the Pacific Coast States have looked forward to the completion of this canal as affording them not only cheaper means of shipment to and from the East, but a quicker means. Steamers plying between Los Angeles and San Francisco and New York will carry cargoes from those ports much more speedily than the freight trains will carry them. In 14 to 18 days a cargo of freight from Los Angeles or from San Francisco can be delivered in Atlantic ports, when it now takes from 20 to 40 days, according to conditions and contingencies, by rail. It is of the utmost importance to the people of our coast and in my opinion to the people of the entire United States. Nothing should be done which by any possibility would place the control of transportation through the canal in the hands of the railroads, and the only way of preventing it is by prohibiting the railroads from owning the stock in ship lines or from controlling directly or indirectly the ships which will ply through that canal.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has been so courteous I will venture to intrude upon his time sufficiently long to ask him a simple question. I notice what Mr. Brandeis said about the New York, New Haven & Hartford and the Boston & Maine Railroads, which are now under one management. Does the Senator understand that there ever was competition between those two roads?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not informed particularly as to the Boston & Maine's relations previously with the New York, New Haven & Hartford.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a simple continuation of the line north, that is all, and they were combined because it was thought it would be an advisable thing to do; and certainly it has not resulted in any oppression to the people. I ask the Senator this question: I suppose that in the magnificent city of Spokane there is railroad competition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a great railroad center, in my judgment the greatest on the Pacific coast; but, notwithstanding that fact, during the greater part of the time since the city has been in existence there has been no substantial railroad competition. There has been an agreement between the various lines.

Mr. GALLINGER. But there is more than one line, of course.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Half a dozen transcontinental lines come in there.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator tell me what the rate of fare is for passengers through that part of the country?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Two and one-half and three cents.

Mr. GALLINGER. Through this monopoly that has been denounced so vigorously, 2 cents a mile is the rate into New England.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no comparison whatever, no similarity at least, between the conditions in New England and the conditions in Spokane and the surrounding country. New England is one of the most thickly populated sections, while the section of the country surrounding Spokane is one of the most thinly settled, although the most rapidly growing of any section in the Union. The city of Spokane itself is only 30 years of age, and it has a population of some 110,000 or 115,000 people.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was in Seattle a few years ago and was rather surprised to have a friend of mine say that they had a population of 65,000 people. I understand that they have over a quarter of a million now. I think the rates of fare will compare very favorably in New England under this monopoly that is talked about with the rates of fare anywhere else in the country. Our fares are reasonable as compared with the fares in any other part of the country.

I wish to make this suggestion. It has been said here that this so-called combination between the railroads and the steamships on the New England coast stifle competition so far as rates are concerned. Now, that is not correct. The rates on the water are very much lower than they are on the land. If the Senator should honor us with another visit to New England—I think he comes there occasionally—and if he will go to the office of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad and ascertain what a ticket will cost him to Boston and then come down on the Fall River Line, those magnificent floating palaces that the New York, New Haven & Hartford operate across the Sound, he will find that water transportation is considerably less than rail transportation; at least that is my experience. So there is not a hard-and-fast combination so far as rates are concerned. That is the truth of the situation.

I thank the Senator for his courtesy. He has been very courteous in yielding to interruptions.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to have the information about local conditions in New England which the Senator has given. However, I understand that although the Senator is claiming that there is some competition in New England, the Senator advocates the combination to an unlimited extent; that he is in favor of transportation monopoly as being economically and politically an advantage, and that is the issue really.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am opposed to that. The question here, however, Mr. President, is not confined to or does not concern, in fact, the combination between different lines of railroad. The question here is whether railroads are to be permitted to go outside of the railroad business, a business which requires a franchise, and to invade the entirely different business of shipping, to be allowed the control of transportation lines by water, which is subject to different laws, subject to entirely different conditions, for which a franchise is not required.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I appreciate the point the Senator makes, and I would not have alluded to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad had not Mr. Brandeis called attention to the oppressions of that railroad. It was not long ago that billing a carload of lumber, we will say, from Lebanon, N. H., a distance of 140 miles, to Boston we had three or four railroads. They have been consolidated.

Then from Boston to New York the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. is practically a continuation of the same line, and that is a consolidation; but it has not destroyed competition, because really no competition existed. I recognize the point the Senator makes, that the real question is the combination of railroads and steamships, and, of course, that is an entirely different question from anything connected with the railroad situation per se.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, at the seaports where water competition with the railroads is by the route around the Horn, or has been suppressed altogether, the rates are exorbitant. At interior points near the coast, where there is no water competition, people of the Pacific coast have been subjected to the highest freight rates in the world, considering the circumstances and the service rendered.

I ask permission, without reading them, to incorporate in the RECORD a statement on the subject and brief tables of a few of these rates as recently charged by the Southern Pacific and other roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In 1887 Gov. Pattison, at the close of the long, patient, judicial inquiry by the Pacific Railroad Commission, of which he was chairman, delivered his opinion that the inflated part of the Central Pacific's capital amounted to a tax of $3,000,000 a year upon the shippers of the country.

* * * * * * *

In the 18 years from the completing of the Central Pacific to the commission's report in 1887 the four men of Sacramento had taken from the shippers of the country on this account alone $54,000,000 through the forms of illegitimate toll referred to by Gov. Pattison and above any fair compensation for any service performed.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. STONE. A moment ago the Senator, replying to some observation of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], said that the latter Senator was under the impression that existing railroad transportation conditions in New England are desirable and advantageous from an economic and political standpoint. So far as the economic features are concerned, I can well understand that that opens up a subject which might well be thought of and considered here. But the striking thing in the statement of the Senator from Washington was that these conditions were a political advantage, and I was wondering if the Senator could inform the Senate or inform me at least in what way they were of political advantage and in that way of advantage to whom?

Mr. POINDEXTER. My own opinion, Mr. President, is that it is not of any political advantage to the people. I used the word "political" there in a very broad sense, however, as applied to the social conditions of the people as affected by the laws of the State and the public regulation of these corporations. But, giving the word "political" the narrower sense in which the Senator from Missouri understood it, that opens up a great field of inquiry. If the Senator will read the history of the Southern Pacific Railroad, which has been published, and if he will inform himself of the history of some of the other transcontinental railroads, especially in the earlier days, he will see there the political advantages of the monopoly of the transportation of a section of the country and to whom that political advantage accrued. The government of the State of California for a generation was controlled by the Southern Pacific monopoly, and it was only two years ago in a campaign in which "kicking the Southern Pacific out of politics" was the principal issue—a phrase perhaps not so elegant as it was forcible and effective—that the Southern Pacific Railroad was deprived of its absolute monopoly, not only of transportation, but of the politics of California. It made governors; it controlled Senators; it controlled legislatures. The same thing has been true in the State of Washington.

I did not intend to open that phase of the question, and I am not going to discuss it; it is a disagreeable subject. Their control extended beyond the legislative and executive branches of the Government, and upon occasions invaded even the sanctity of the courts. The history of the State is blackened by episodes in which the sinister power of railroad monopoly has controlled the decision of cases in which it was interested, even writing and revising the opinion in one instance, at least, before it was promulgated.

We have seen too much of those conditions, Mr. President. We have suffered too long from paying the highest rates in the world not to fear that we will continue under the same conditions if the railroads are allowed to put their lines in effect through the Panama Canal. If a railroad operates a line of ships through the Panama Canal it will be no less than adding another railroad line, or the equivalent of many transcontinental railroads, to the great combination which now exists. It will result in no substantial benefit to the people of those States. Since the time when the pioneers settled in the Sacramento Valley and the Willamette Valley, on the shores of Puget Sound, and in the Spokane country they have been looking forward to a closer union with their brethren on the Atlantic Coast. The means of transportation in those great days when they planted the American Constitution in that new country were crude and insufficient. They have been gradually improving.

We have suffered, perhaps, from many of these things which I have just described because they were incident to the development of a rough country under rough conditions. The conditions have already improved. We are looking forward to further improvement upon the completion of the Panama Canal. The people of that coast expect to be bound closer in time, in social relations, in political connection, in everything that goes to make one nation by the opening up of this great waterway, allowing the free passage of ships without interruption from one ocean to the other across the American continent. I trust that the Senate will not do anything by law and not omit to do anything by law which on the one hand would permit and on the other hand would prevent the neutralization and destruction of the benefits which ought to flow from this waterway.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is there in sight any men or combination of men ready to furnish the water transportation through the canal if you eliminate those engaged in railroad enterprises from the possibilities?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are not in sight at the present time. There are few lines of ships engaged in the coastwise traffic which are not controlled by the railroads. The very policy which those of us who are advocating this House provision are seeking to prevent has resulted in that condition. There are some lines, particularly those plying at some of our southern ports, which are now flying the British flag which, if the Senate provision allowing American registry to foreign-built ships, owned by American citizens, should be adopted, would be flying the American flag, and would be permitted to engage in the coastwise traffic, ships which were built abroad by American money, owned now by Americans, engaged in purely an American business, having their actual home ports in the United States, but now nominally registered and having their homes in a foreign country. If the provisions which have been enacted by the Senate go into effect those ships will be able to engage in this trade. They are many of the finest ships plying in American waters. They undoubtedly would go through the canal and furnish connection between the two coasts.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him now?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will wait. I wanted to develop a little further the idea that I suggested; but I will not now take up the time of the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A short time ago a certain gentleman, in view of the early prospect of the opening of the Panama Canal, undertook to organize a company under the present law and establish and finance a line of ships. The same influences to which I have just referred, which have resulted in the domination of existing lines of coastwise ships by the railroads, interfered with the financing of that project and prevented him from perfecting it, and it is not now in existence.

We ought to estimate the conditions which are going to follow the opening of the canal, not upon the state of the law which exists now, but upon the conditions which will result when this bill shall have been passed. What will be the likely development under the removal of the restrictions as to American registry which this bill provides? What will be the result of this very proposition which we are now arguing, which will prevent railroad companies from owning all the lines of ships which the Senator intimates are now controlled by the railroads? That is what we should consider, and not what is the condition when they are permitted to own and monopolize them as at present. The very lines of steamships which the Senator has in mind, no doubt, as being at the present time controlled by the railroads, will have to be surrendered by the railroads when this law goes into effect upon a certain date some 18 months after it is passed. They will then be available to be used in this traffic. The fact that the traffic will be opened to them, that there will be that business for them to do, will afford a market for those ships, and will meet the objection which has been made here, that it is practically a confiscation of valuable property of the railroads to deprive them of a right to own these vessels. They will be able to dispose of them to other people; there will be many enterprising men, who, when the opportunity is afforded, will want to go into this trade. The railroads will be disposing of their ships, and when the railroads realize that they have no right themselves to acquire other ships to operate through the canal, they will have no motive, with their tremendous power in the financial centers of the country, to interfere with the financing of a project to put on an independent line of ships through this canal, as they have done heretofore in the instance to which I have referred.

Mr. President, we have prepared on the Pacific coast to celebrate this event. We do not want to see the result a mockery instead of a benefit; we do not want to see the festival arranged with so much pride and joy, the occasion for which we are preparing an exposition designed to celebrate an important event in the development of our country, one which we had hoped would tend in an equal degree with the invention of railroads themselves, the telegraph, and all the means of communication, to bring still closer together the widely separated parts of the United States—we do not want to see the occasion which we are preparing to celebrate in this great exposition become a mere delusion. We are preparing to celebrate something which, on its face, is a thing of value, but which in reality, if railroads can control the canal, will turn to ashes in our hands.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut for a question.

Mr. McLEAN. I sincerely hope that the object of the celebration which the Senator is anticipating will be realized; but I want to ask him if he thinks it is not possible to have that celebration and all the benefits that can come to the western coast by the use of the canal without confiscating from ten to twenty million dollars' worth of property in doing so and discomfiting a whole section of the country in its transportation facilities? Does he not think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] will accomplish all the purposes necessary for the success of his celebration without bringing to New England precisely the contrary situation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no trouble, Mr. President, about having a celebration; we could have a celebration without the completion of the Panama Canal. There has never been on the Pacific coast any lack of occasions to celebrate or of means of pleasure; there are ample opportunities for that. What I was referring to was that the exposition, which has been planned with so much ambition, with such high hopes for its results upon the country, would be devoted to a delusion.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator has not answered my question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think I have answered it.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask him does he not think he could have the celebration under the operation of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We could have it, not because of, but notwithstanding, the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Under the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia I admit that the Panama Canal and the immediate conditions which are to obtain there would not be affected, but the benefits which would flow from it to the Pacific coast would be greatly limited. The same lines of railroad ships at present operating on both coasts would continue to operate. That is a separate and distinct question. We have discussed that. I am in favor of the House provision as it stands, not because of desiring in any way to interfere with the traffic conditions in New England in particular, but because, of course, if you make a fundamental rule of transportation it should be general and not particular in its application; it ought to apply to the whole country, to the Great Lakes, to New England, to the Atlantic seaboard, to the Pacific seaboard, to the canal, and to the rivers of the country. There ought not to be one rule here and another rule there.

Furthermore, the Senator from Connecticut is mistaken if he assumes that New England is united upon this proposition. New England is not united upon this question any more than it is united upon some other public questions upon which many of its Senators here have been agreed. The people of New England can settle that, undoubtedly; but upon the evidence I have introduced I am not impressed with the idea because the Senators from New England who have spoken are all in favor of perpetuating what appears to be a traffic and transportation monopoly in that section that the people of New England are agreed upon the question.

Mr. McLEAN. Of course I have no objection to the experiment which the Senator wishes to try with regard to the Panama Canal, if I can not help myself; that is, limiting the use of the Panama Canal to nonrailroad-owned ships. I would welcome it as a choice of evils only.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am delighted to know that. I inferred that the Senator would not yield his objection to the exclusion of railroad ships from the canal.

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator must try that experiment, I accept it as a choice of evils. Although I think it is economically unsound, I would much prefer submitting to it, because it affects no vested rights; it does not touch any of the conditions as they exist.

I should like to have the Senator suggest whether he thinks that divorcement of the Fall River Line, running from Boston to New York, its sale by auction, and the assumption of its control by strangers, would reduce the cost of transportation when, as it is managed to-day, it returns only 3½ per cent to its owners?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not so much interested in changing present conditions as I am in establishing a rule to operate from the present time. I do not apprehend any great disaster to any business interest in New England from the necessity of adjusting itself to this rule. It has not been the case heretofore that that would result; and I do not apprehend that the people of New England would suffer an advance of rates. Railroad rates are subject to control by law. The railroads can not put their rates up, they are not allowed to put them up without the permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and there is not any bugaboo of that kind that if this monopoly is not allowed to continue, the people will suffer from the increasing of rates. The railroads will not be able to repeat the result of the dissolution of the Standard Oil Co. when the stock of the company increased in value $100,000,000 after the trust was supposed to be destroyed, or the American Tobacco Co., where the price of tobacco increased when the trust was supposed to have been divided into all of its constituent parts, although the stock still remained in the hands of the same individuals who control it as they controlled before. No such condition as that can result; because the railroad is a public utility, and the whole foundation of this legislation is not upon the basis of trust regulation; it is not upon the basis of the power of the Government to interfere with individual operations, but it is the regulation of a public-service corporation; it is the regulation of an agency which is doing Government work.

Railroads are not engaged in a private business. Of course, that is a mere truism, although it is but recently that even the public men of this country have assumed that attitude toward them. We have been in the habit, until recently, of regarding the railroad business as a private business and to resent any attempt to regulate it as interfering with vested property and with private rights, forgetting that the railroad occupies the same position toward the public that the wagon road does, or that the street does, or that any other highway does. That is the basis upon which this law is proposed, and not that it shall interfere with private rights. We do not have to resort to the general-welfare clause of the Constitution; but we are entitled to regulate them under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, and under the proposition that it is a governmental agency; that the railroads are mere agents of the Government; that they are created so by special franchise; that the Government is interested in the performance of Government work; and that in the interest of the people monopoly of the transportation between the two coasts of the country, which now exists by understanding between the various lines, shall not be perpetuated by these lines after the canal is constructed, united or singly operating their own ships through the canal, thereby preventing independent business from flowing through the canal.

I realize that the railroads themselves would perhaps carry a certain class of business through the canal. The traffic of this country between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts has increased so greatly that in many instances, notwithstanding the youthfulness of the Pacific coast, the railroads have been unable to handle it. A few years ago the traffic of that section was piled at the terminals of the railroads waiting for transportation; the railroads were unable to handle it on account of its amount. Under these circumstances I repeat that there is a certain class of business which the railroads themselves would carry through the canal, but it would not afford competition, and that class of business which the railroads desire and are able to handle would still go by rail. So the railroads would continue the supreme masters of transportation, subject to the comparatively feeble efforts of the Government in the years and generations that it takes to enforce theoretical Government control and bring about reasonable and uniform rates, good and equal service, to abolish special privilege and favoritism, in the operation of this public service, among the people of the country.

Mr. President, that it about all that I care to say. I believe that I have made a correct statement of the position of practically all the people—at least of the great masses of the people—on the Pacific coast on this question.

In conclusion, I desire only to repeat that the Senate amendment, viewed as excluding railroad ships from the canal, is a sham, is a delusion, and will leave them practically unrestricted to operate through the canal with the same freedom that they would have if no regulations whatever on the subject were adopted.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I conjecture that the views which I shall advance will not be approved by a majority of the Senate, but I have so decided an opinion that the legislation proposed in section 11 will not inure to the benefit of the people that I can not forbear to express myself on the subject.

The really effective method of solving this transportation problem is by direct and thorough regulation, allowing any agency for transportation by whomsoever owned to use the Panama Canal, and feel sure that, whatever may be our action to-day, before many years such a plan will be adopted.

Mr. President, we often fall short of understanding the era of evolution in which we live. This is a time of magnificent growth, of great improvement in methods, of large-scale operations which we ought not to destroy or retard, but which we should control in accordance with the public interest. The great difficulty to-day in water transportation, whether on rivers or canals or on the ocean, is a lack of proper cooperation between water carriers and railroads, a refusal to harmonize in the use of the terminals and to divide traffic, thus giving to railroads that portion which naturally belongs to them and to the water that which belongs to it. In much of the public thought on this question there is grievous error.

The people recognize, and very naturally, the exactions and the oppression of railroad companies and large transportation enterprises. Wherever monopoly has been sought or oppression has been practiced, there should be the most severe punishment and all proper regulations should be adopted to prevent any such practice in the future; but we make a great mistake if we allow these excrescences on our commercial life to eclipse our vision of the far greater benefits which may be achieved by a rational management of these different commercial forces and transportation facilities under a comprehensive policy of harmony and of cooperation.

I believe, Mr. President, that under proper regulation it is best for railways to own ships. What are the reasons? In the first place, these great organizations are in the business of transportation; they carry a very large amount of freight; they have their terminals, their freight stations, their sidetracks, all of which subserve the convenience of the public and furnish efficient means not only for the carriage but for the receipt and shipment of freight. On the other hand, water-borne traffic has its advantages under well-defined conditions.

Why ought the railways to be allowed to own ships? There may be said to be three special reasons: First, to carry certain classes of freight more cheaply. This includes coarse or heavy freight, which, even in competition with parallel lines, can be carried at a cheaper cost upon boats. Any well-regulated railway system, if organized on a large scale and if its lines communicate with waterways, might utilize this method of carrying trade.

If this were the sole reason, boat lines independent of railways would naturally take care of the traffic. But there are other reasons. The second is to extend or supplement their lines in cases where traffic would naturally reach its destination partly by a water route. We have an illustration of this condition in case of a shipment of freight from the Atlantic seaboard, from New York or Boston to Chicago and Duluth. A very considerable portion of such freight, however, is carried as far as Buffalo or Erie or Cleveland or some point on the Lakes by rail and then carried the remainder of the way by water, because it is cheaper and, in some respects, more convenient.

There is a third reason, which is the most important of the three, and that is to afford relief in times of congestion. The one vital fact about our transportation which causes so much embarrassment to shippers, and to the railways as well, is the very unequal quantity of freight carried at different seasons of the year and the unequal quantity carried in different years. We have our fat and lean years in traffic. The general tendency is toward an increase in the demands upon our transportation agencies, and it is very important for them to keep pace with those increasing demands. Naturally provision will be made for the average demand; that is, if a railway can be built for $100,000,000 which satisfies the demand for the carrying of freight in ordinary seasons, and that same system, in order to supply maximum demands, would cost $150,000,000, the lesser expense is incurred. Provision will be made only for that traffic which is reliable, which remains constant from month to month and year to year; and in times of unusual traffic the railway or other agency is inadequate to carry the freight.

This seasonal or temporary congestion of traffic constitutes the most important reason for the ownership of ships by railways. I have often used the argument that we should improve our waterways, because it enables boats to carry freight usually carried by railways, at least in times of unusual demand. The answer often made—and it is a very natural answer—is that boats will not be built merely to provide for emergencies; that those who invest in shipping property will not invest unless there is a reasonably steady demand every month of the year, so that whatever line is established may be constantly engaged in the business the year around and year after year.

But in the case of a railway company which carries freight the year round and which provides for transporting the bulk of its traffic by rail, ships can be utilized in times of unusual demand or congestion, and then, in times of slack traffic, they can be used in other ways. That is the advantage possessed by great shipping companies, such as exist at Hamburg, at London, and at Liverpool. They may have no regular route on which absolute reliance is placed for the constant utilization of their boats. When there is an unusual demand from Liverpool to New York, they are used on that line, and when the amount of traffic falls off, those boats can be used to carry freight to the Orient, to South Africa, to South America, and thus they have an inestimable advantage in the shipping trade.

Mr. President, I hazard the prediction that, if railroad-owned ships are prohibited from using the canal, the provision made for shipping will be inadequate and disappointing, because you are confronted with a condition pertaining to the shipping trade which you can not overcome.

A great deal has been said here in regard to the advantage possessed by the railroads. They have had a certain advantage; they have used it in a manner worthy of condemnation, and they are likely to use it in that same manner in the future; but is our Government so impotent, is Congress so lacking in constructive ability that we can not frame laws to meet that situation? It has just been said that the railroad has an advantage, because it may discriminate against independent boats in the matter of forwarding freight to the interior on its lines. We can provide against that class of discrimination by penalties that are absolutely adequate for its prevention. No fair-minded railroad man would oppose any statute that would forbid such unfair practice.

The same is true of the point raised that railroads will show favors in handling freight on the dock. It needs no argument to show that a railway company, being the agency of the public and under the strictest regulations, would not be allowed to show any favor in handling on the docks; that entirely equal treatment would be required whether the goods are received from one of its own boats or from the boats of a private owner.

Again, it is said that they can show discrimination in the promptness of handling and in making connections. I am not willing to admit that the armory of the law is so poor in weapons or that our administrative capacity is so deficient that we can not cause to disappear all such grounds of complaint. There will no doubt be placed on this line through the Panama Canal divers ships owned by private parties. But let us see what might happen. Are we going to do away with advantages to favored shippers by forbidding the transit of railroad-owned boats. Ships allowed to use the canal will pursue the same method which has been pursued by railroads in the past, upon whose course such severe penalties have been visited. These ships are not going to seek the traffic of the small shipper. They will not be actuated by any motive of philanthropy. They will seek the trade of large shippers and will grant rebates, and thereby make it possible to carry the freight of one shipper at a low rate and that of his competitor at a very high rate, for the prevention of which you now have not a syllable of law.

Two things are essential. Two things are sure to come. One is that the supervision and control of the Interstate Commerce Commission will be so enlarged that it will include boats owned by railroads. Otherwise they may be made an instrument to defeat competition. It is plain to see what is the opportunity before them. The main investment may be in the railway. The boat line which they possess or the corporation engaged in shipping which they control through stock ownership may be a mere incident, and they will so control those boats or that company in which they have stock ownership as to drive out of the business those ships which compete. There is the evil. It is of this that everyone complains, and very naturally and very properly.

But with proper regulations and administrative control this can be prevented. To complete what I began to say, not only should this supervision and control be extended to railroad-owned ships, but it should be extended to all boats that run on regular schedules. Outside of these classes there is a large class of what are called tramp ships, bidding always for freight, whose operations promote competition in transportation. We could hardly expect that those should be placed under any governmental supervision, and it is probably the better policy that they should not be. I make bold to say that there is another regulation which is sure to come in our laws relating to transportation, and that is a fixing of minimum rates as well as of maximum rates.

We very much exaggerate the benefit that shippers have, or at any rate which the general public has, from a disastrously low rate in the carrying of traffic. Suppose the rate between two points is $5 a ton. Under the stress of insufficient traffic, or for some other reason, a boat, or we may conceive a railroad, carries over that distance temporarily for $2.50 and then restores the old rate. How does the general public benefit? The consignee to whom the freight is sent regards that as a favorable result for himself, and if that rate is merely temporary, he charges the public with the ordinary rate of $5 and secures to himself the difference. The same rule also applies in regard to shipments by boat. An abnormally low rate, one which is enforced for a short time only, is not of general benefit. I am perfectly aware of the feeling which is natural to all of us that we should place no limit on any disposition to lower rates, but in perfectly adjusted schedules of transportation rates it is just as necessary as a prohibition that railway rates shall not go above a certain maximum.

But there is another result of abnormally low rates. They enable those who are able to maintain them even at a loss for a considerable period to drive others engaged in the business from the field, leaving a monopoly to those who survive.

Under the recommendation of the National Waterways Commission two years ago I introduced in 1910 an amendment to the interstate-commerce act providing that if a railway lowers a rate in competition with a boat line it shall not again raise that rate unless it can be shown that the lower rate was fixed for reasons other than the elimination of competition. The object of that was to prevent what had frequently been done on the Mississippi River and in other places. Whenever a railroad company put down a rate for carrying traffic to a point admittedly below cost of carriage and maintained that rate until competing boat lines were driven out of the business, they then restored the old rate or, in some cases, even a higher rate. There is no reason why the same rule should not apply to a boat line running on regular schedule, especially if it is controlled by a railroad.

Mr. President, we need all the ships we can obtain. There are discouragements and disadvantages enough, and I am not afraid of this bugaboo that the ownership of boats by railway companies will prevent independent owners from engaging in the business. Shipments along any line, by ocean or on land, are multiplied by the facilities afforded. This canal no doubt is going to be an immeasurable benefit to the Pacific coast. The railways will be compelled to readjust their relations with the public if shipping is at hand to do the business. I do not mean that the canal spells ruin to the railroads by any means. There will be a repetition of what has repeatedly happened. The carriage of freight by new agencies and at cheaper rates, especially by boats, which builds up communities, increases further the variety of traffic, increases passenger traffic, and so, after a few years, the new line goes on doing a very large business and the old line enjoys doing a more profitable business than ever before.

In conclusion I can not omit to express my opinion that this legislation is not for the best interest of the shippers of the country.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Maine in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I have been much interested in the remarks of the Senator. If I understand the Senator's position as to railroads, as well as steamship lines, it is that competition is not particularly desirable; that we have reached a point in this country where we must recognize combinations, under proper governmental regulation; that the proper governmental regulation that the Senator believes would work out the problem is the power of the commission to fix a minimum rate as well as a maximum rate in railroad matters, and that the same should be applicable to the steamship situation, and that this would save the objection that is urged to the matter.

I think we are reaching the parting of the ways as to whether we are to stand for competition as a part of our national industrial policy or whether we are to accept combinations as inevitable and place them strictly under the regulation of the Government. I was not assenting in my own mind to the Senator's position.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly not.

Mr. KENYON. I am for competition; but I was interested in the situation.

Mr. BURTON. A railroad is a natural monopoly. If it reaches towns where there is no competition, it has the exclusive power to deliver freight, and there is no way in which you can solve the problem except by Government regulation.

If there is one railroad between two towns, it is a waste of capital to build another, when by doubling the number of tracks one railroad can carry all the freight.

Mr. KENYON. That same idea carried into our industrial situation would be the same, would it not?

Mr. BURTON. As to the industrial situation, I want to say that we exaggerate very much the effect of competition as a regulative or helpful force, but that is an entirely different proposition. Industrial enterprises do not so readily yield to governmental regulation.

Mr. KENYON. I thought the Senator was very courageous, and I think we may have to face that problem. I am in favor of the old-fashioned competition if we can get it. The Senator's theory, it seems to me, would make unnecessary the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so. In the fight against monopoly we should provide against all of the methods that have been resorted to to oppress competitors. The law certainly has a field so far as it relates to industrial operations, perhaps also as regards railroads, though certainly to a much more limited extent.

We have been making ineffective efforts, through these many years, in different forms of enterprise to gain something by competition where competition has no place. City councils are very willing to allow a competing telephone line to obtain a franchise. What is the result? Inferior service. You compel people to have both phones. The telephone companies fight until after a time they come together. Each installs expensive wiring in large buildings and locates conduits along the streets. Thus there is waste in the investment, and as I said it does not help anybody, because sooner or later they will come together under the same management.

Mr. KENYON. And raise the rate?

Mr. BURTON. Naturally they will raise the rate because they have to pay interest on the wasted investment, on the duplication; and any commission passing on the rates of the combine would have to take that into account.

I do not want to be understood at all as ignoring the evils of this situation. I would not for a moment advocate allowing any and all ships, whatever their ownership may be, to go through that canal unless the Government controls the situation by adequate regulation, regulation that shall be just to all the people. And it is along that line that I am satisfied we will eventually solve this problem.

Mr. KENYON. How will that regulation be brought about?

Mr. BURTON. I would suppose by enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I will send to the desk a proposed amendment——

Mr. KENYON. Would there be power now under the interstate-commerce act without further action?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so. I would first place all railroad-owned ships under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We are sure to come to that at some time; and also boats running on regular schedule. I will ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Strike out, in section 11, from and including line 15, on page 19, down to and including line 16, on page 21, and insert the following:

That every water carrier engaged in interstate commerce which is owned, controlled, leased, or operated by a railroad company, or in which a railroad company, either by ownership of stock or otherwise, is interested, and any independent water carrier engaged in interstate commerce which operates over a specific route with regular schedules, shall be deemed a common carrier within the meaning of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and so far as practicable shall be subject to all the provisions of said act.

Restore the word "said" in line 17, page 21.

Mr. BURTON. Of course, I should add just a word, that in the regulation of these independent lines at least there should be a large degree of flexibility in the fixing of rates.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. TOWNSEND obtained the floor.

Mr. WORKS. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. In the course of some remarks made by me a few days ago I submitted a circular sent out by the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Cal., asking for an expression of sentiment on the part of its members. I have here a letter from the president of the board of directors of that association that shows the responses that were made, and I ask, as it is very brief, to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Los Angeles, Cal., July 31, 1912.

Hon. JOSEPH R. KNOWLAND,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It may be interesting to you to know the result of the request for the approval or disapproval of the membership of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce of the action of its board of directors in favor of freedom from tolls for American ships passing through the Panama Canal and in opposition to the operation through the canal of ships owned in whole or in part by railway corporations engaged in the coastwise trade.

On July 18 we sent out a circular, copy of which is inclosed, asking the approval or disapproval of our individual membership. Up to this date we have received 1,074 replies. Of these, 1,036 are in approval of the position taken by the chamber and 38 in disapproval.

Very truly, yours,

H. Z. OSBORNE, President.

Mr. WORKS. It is very evident that the influence of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. does not extend to the business men of Los Angeles.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I realize that we have limited time for debate, as we have agreed to vote at 5 o'clock this afternoon, and that the chairman of the committee, who has demonstrated great tact and patience in handling this bill, has occupied very little time in this debate, and he certainly should be given a full opportunity to be heard. I also realize that it would be most discourteous for me or for anyone else at this time to occupy the attention of the Senate at any considerable length. I am going to confine what few remarks I wish to submit to section 11 of the bill.

It is perhaps well to bear in mind what the title of the bill is. It is as follows: "To provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone."

Mr. President, we have drifted during this long discussion far away from the expressed object of the bill. I understand and appreciate the desire which Senators have, and which I share, of remedying any wrongs which may exist in matters of transportation. I have devoted a considerable portion of my life in Congress to this particular subject, and I think that no man has a greater sympathy for all proper efforts to compel the transportation companies, both rail and water, to render the best service possible to the people which they were chartered to serve than I have.

I have been and am in favor of eliminating railroad-owned boats from the use of the canal. If I could have my way about it I would not simply confine that limitation to boats which compete with the rail carrier, but I would make the prohibition apply to all railroad-owned boats engaged in interstate commerce.

I realize that there are two sides to this question. I understand that men can hold an opposite opinion from the one I entertain and hold it honestly. But there seems to be a well-settled, intelligent opinion throughout the United States that railroads ought to be confined to the purposes for which they were chartered; that they should be confined to the proposition of conducting railroad business proper. We have not always followed that rule, and not all railroads have been limited in their charter rights to that particular thing; but as a general proposition we have endeavored to enforce that principle, and for myself I think it is a wise one.

The railroad is by nature a monopoly. The interests which it serves and the conditions which surround it, both industrial and political, make it a great power in the United States, generally, a power for good, but sometimes a power for bad, and it is impossible for me to comprehend a great monopoly that is not surrounded by possibilities for evil.

Not only because of the general principle would I exclude railroad boats, but because of the peculiar circumstances which surround this particular case, and now I am speaking of the Panama Canal. I may be wrong and I dislike very much to voice a sensational matter which I can not prove, but I am convinced in my own mind that the Panama Canal proposition has been one which has been opposed by the railroads of this country from the time of the conception of the canal. I am satisfied that if we were to give out to the world the statement that the Congress was in favor of allowing railroad-owned boats to operate through the canal we would by so doing effectually discourage private enterprise from constructing new boats, from embarking in commerce through the canal.

We have a new proposition here, so far as any existing conditions are concerned. There are no vested interests now operating through the canal. Whatever is to be done remains for the future, or however it is to be operated remains for the future to determine, because no boats, of course, are passing through there now.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] said last evening that if we are to divorce the railroads of the country from the boat lines which they own other than those which propose to go through the canal, we would be doing nothing more in principle than is proposed to be done to the Southern Pacific Railroad, for he insists that this railroad would be compelled to part with all interest in the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. That is not true, as I understand it. The law will not compel the Southern Pacific to part with the Pacific Mail. It will simply say to the Pacific Mail it can not operate through the canal and the Southern Pacific can continue to own this boat line.

Mr. President, I said in the beginning that I think the provisions of the bill should be confined to the Panama Canal. I do not favor the Senate amendment and did not vote for it in the committee. I am favorable to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the House bill. I do not believe we are prepared to legislate on this great general proposition of railroad-owned boats.

I do not agree with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] that the Committee on Interoceanic Canals have had sufficient information on this subject to enable them to act intelligently upon it. There are great interests involved, and the only object of any kind of legislation should be to serve the people. Unless it can be shown that the divorcement of these railroads from their boat lines is going to result in a better service to the people we ought not to undertake it, and I submit that the great weight of evidence does not support the plan to compel railroads to dispose of their boats.

There has been much dispute as to what the Interstate Commerce Commission has said about this plan, and the dispute arises from the fact I take it that Senators have read disassociated portions of the testimony of Commissioners Prouty and Lane. I think I am stating their position correctly when I say that both these commissioners, while in favor of the general idea that railroads ought not to own boat lines, and that is the general proposition which was set out in the letter of last March to the President, the one that has been laid down through all the testimony of these two commissioners, but both the commissioners insisted that they could not advise the Congress to pass section 11 as it was presented to Congress, for the reason that they did not thoroughly understand it and its possible effects. They agreed that the service of these existing lines on the Sound, in the Southeast, and on the Great Lakes is satisfactory at the present time, is satisfactory to the shippers, and satisfactory to the people, and that any change in that condition would result in detriment to the shipping interests.

Furthermore, Commissioner Prouty says that he thought if the duties prescribed in section 11 were to be placed upon the commission it would be practically more than the commission could perform. He states in answer to the chairman's question, on page 876 of the record, what I shall read. The chairman asked him:

> Suppose the additional duties conferred by section 11 of this bill were conferred upon you, do you think you would have time to attend to them?
> Mr. PROUTY. I think, Senator, that the commission is at the present time overworked; and I do not think any additional duties ought to be imposed upon the commission unless necessary.

I submit that the provision of section 11, to which I am objecting, will impose great extra work upon the commission.

I repeat, the commissioner says that the people in New England and on the Great Lakes were not complaining, but were well served at the present time. In corroboration of that, allow me to quote from what he said on page 882 of the record. He says in the conclusion of a long statement:

> So, also, I think, if it is possible, that the New Haven Railroad ought to be allowed to continue to operate the Sound steamers. I believe it would be unfortunate to compel that road to divorce itself from the New England Navigation Co.

Again, in answer to the chairman's question on the same subject, he said:

> Now, Senator, my judgment rather is—and perhaps I have not a sufficient knowledge upon which to base a judgment—that it would deteriorate the service to divorce the Sound steamers from the New Haven road, because that traffic originates at the interior points; it is delivered at an interior point, so to speak, in New York; if it goes west, it goes by some railroad.

On page 883 of the record he testified as follows:

> Mr. PROUTY. I think the best answer to all that is the belief which I know exists on the part of the shippers in New England that they get better service from the New Haven road than if those boats were owned by somebody else. Mr. Mellen is unpopular in New England; those shippers hate him, and do not give him credit for a decent thing when he does it—which is not very often. [Laughter.] Still they will tell you, I believe, if you get them down here, that they want the New Haven road to continue to operate those boats.

That is the statement of Commissioner Prouty in reference to the New England boat lines. I wish to refer to what he said about the Great Lakes. On page 876 is the following:

> Mr. PROUTY. I would not regard the provision which prohibits a railroad from owning competing steamships as the most important provision, if it were made an amendment to the act to regulate commerce. I have always said that, if possible, some distinction ought to be made between a condition which already exists and a condition which is simply to be prohibited for the future. Now, whether that can be done or not I do not know. I think, too, that there is a very wide distinction between allowing a railroad to own a steamboat which merely forms a continuation of its line and allowing it to own a steamboat which is a competitor of the railroad all the way through.

I think we all agree on that proposition.

On page 888 Commissioner Prouty states his views as to conditions on the Great Lakes, and he is satisfied with present conditions. He said:

> Senator TOWNSEND. Yes. And I am especially interested in that last part, which seeks to prohibit railroads from owning boat lines not connected with the Panama Canal, especially applying to the Great Lakes, for instance, I am interested up there. I have been unable to see where any advantage could come to the shippers, to the people who patronize the boats on the Great Lakes, from separating the ownership of the boat lines and that of the railroads as they exist at the present time; and I was wondering if you know of any advantage?
> Mr. PROUTY. Well, the business interests of Chicago will tell you that if they could compel the railroads leading from Buffalo to New York and other points in Atlantic seaboard territory to make the same arrangement with their line which is now made with the railroad-boat line, they would put on an independent boat line between Chicago and Buffalo, which would transact business at a lower rate than is done to-day. But I feel myself that that rate is low enough to-day. It is as low as it can permanently be. But I think that the result to-day—this summer—would be very good if there were any way to compel a connection by a boat line between Chicago and Buffalo with the rail lines from Buffalo to New York on package freight. That boat line would be owned by business men of Chicago, men like Marshall Field & Co.; and of course it would run full and could afford to make a lower rate. The effect of that might be a general reduction in rates; to reduce the lake-and-rail rate from New York to Chicago makes the reduction of the all-rail rate likely. It certainly means a reduction of the water-and-rail rate to St. Louis; it means a reduction in all that territory west of Chicago from the East. But still I should deprecate that thing, if it should be done, because I think those rates are low enough, and railroads ought not to be forced to take rates which are too low.

But what I am getting at is that we have heard no complaint—at least I have not. I have not heard one word of complaint from the Lake region as to the operation of the boats already at work there. I have received communications from shippers and others interested in Michigan protesting against the disturbance of the conditions at the Great Lakes. Commissioner Prouty himself stated that the rates on the Great Lakes were as low as it was reasonable to expect if proper facilities and accommodations were furnished, as they are being furnished now.

Now, why do I mention this when I say I am in favor of the general proposition of railroads not owning steamboat lines? It is because in this bill, at least, there is a distinction. I have said that I have heard of no complaint from the Great Lakes. I have received protests against the enactment of this legislation, and I believe that the proposed enactment would disturb satisfactory conditions and make them worse.

Inasmuch as there is an honest difference of opinion, inasmuch as we are not suffering at the present time from this ownership of boat lines by the railroads on the Great Lakes and in New England, it seems to me to be the part of wisdom for us on this bill to confine ourselves to the Panama Canal, which is the business before us, and let that question be taken up by the proper committee, which in this body is the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has not considered the question, in order that we may cover all these various points which are in controversy, and which, in my judgment, are not at all connected with the operation and governing of the Panama Canal.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I regret to hear a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce state that this matter has not been considered at all by the committee, because the committee has had a bill before it for now seven months making exactly this provision. I know it had some hearings on the bill, and I supposed it had given it some consideration.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know of no real consideration that has been given it. We heard a man by the name of Turner, at the invitation of the chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. After he had appeared before the latter committee he came before the Interstate Commerce Committee and made a statement similar to the one he had made on the previous occasion.

Mr. BRISTOW. I was present at a meeting of the committee at one time when some other gentlemen were heard on a bill which I introduced and which is now before the Committee on Interstate Commerce making exactly the same provision that is put into this bill. I regret very much, when that bill has been there and there have been hearings upon it, to hear a member of the committee say that it has been given no consideration.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Possibly we may have had some hearings, but we had no consideration of that bill unless it was to receive the evidence of men who appeared before the committee, and I am not familiar with that fact, if it is a fact.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does not the Senator think that a subject of this importance should have been given consideration?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I certainly do. I agree with the Senator on that. I think it is an important question and that it should have been given careful consideration.

Now, Mr. President, without detaining the Senate longer, I simply want to refer to what the Senator from Minnesota said last night, that this was an opportunity to perform some constructive legislation and that we ought to take advantage of it; that we have done nothing worthy in three years, and that it is time we should do something.

In the first place, I want to take exception to the last statement and simply submit that, in my judgment, there has been quite as much constructive legislation during the last three years in the Congress of the United States as was enacted during three years theretofore. The RECORD will disclose that fact.

I also want to insist that there may be a great difference of opinion as to whether this is constructive or destructive legislation. Progressive constructive legislation is not a matter of definition or of declaration, but it is a matter of substance and reality. I think we are performing a piece of great constructive legislation when we apply the principles of section 11 of the bill passed by the House properly amended to the canal proper, and we ought to leave the other question as to railroad-owned boats on the Great Lakes, where no complaint has been made, and where, according to the testimony of the Interstate Commerce Commissioner, the conditions are very satisfactory, in New England, and in the Southeast to future investigation and legislation. They may be much worse if we interfere with them. No harm can be done by allowing this question to be considered on its individual merits, and we should not embarrass this great proposition by what seems to me to be this extraneous ill-considered legislation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I assume that when this bill passes out of the committee and into the Senate we shall have gone beyond the stage at which debate will be permitted. I desire, therefore, to explain a change of vote which I shall make if it is proposed in the Senate to disagree to the amendment which gave free passage to American ships engaged in foreign trade.

I voted for that amendment, having voted against exempting the coastwise traffic from tolls, because it seemed to me that it was unfair to discriminate between one class of American ships and another. I still feel that it is harsh treatment of our merchant marine, but I have come to the conclusion that if we are going to put ourselves by this bill in a position which is sure to breed international differences we should be in a better position to deal with those differences when they arise, if we confine the exemption from tolls to the coastwise trade.

If I may repeat what I have already said in the Senate, my own belief is that under the terms of the treaty in the words "all nations" the United States is not included. That view is questioned both here and abroad, and I am unwilling by my vote to put the United States in a position where she can be accused by any one of violating the solemn obligations of a treaty, no matter what my personal opinion as to the interpretation of that treaty may be.

The decision to send our ships through the canal free of tolls is bound to raise very serious question with other countries, and I think, diplomatically speaking and with a view to the settlement of those differences which I apprehend, it will be better if we confine the exemption to coastwise ships. I do not myself think that there is any distinction in the treaty between one class of vessels and another. I do not think the language of the treaty recognizes any distinction as to the trade in which a vessel is employed, and yet in actual practice and in law, although not under the treaty, there can be no doubt that a broad distinction exists between vessels engaged in the coastwise traffic into which no foreign ship can enter as a competitor and ships engaged in the foreign overseas trade. I make this statement simply to explain the change of vote which I shall make if I am called upon to vote upon that amendment which was agreed to yesterday, relating to ships in foreign trade.

As I am on my feet, Mr. President, I wish to say a single word in regard to the railroad clause now under consideration. My own belief is that we are making a mistake in preventing any railroad from owning any stock in any vessel which is to have passage through the canal. I think that the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, whatever they may say, and if they are fit for their places, can perfectly well control the rates for freight and passengers through the canal.

It seems to me that it is the part of wisdom to open that canal so as to make it a great encouragement to American commerce and not try to restrict it or use it as a weapon to wound and cripple American interests.

I can not understand, myself, that attitude of mind which is perfectly ready to let the canal remain open, as it must remain open, to railroad-owned ships from other countries and yet prevent any of our railroads from owning a share in any vessel which passes through it. This mental attitude is on a parallel with the readiness which appears so constantly here and elsewhere entirely to disregard the possession of our markets by a foreign syndicate or a foreign trust and at the same time do everything in our power to destroy any business to which the name of trust can be affixed, provided it is American business.

We seem to have no sort of objection to foreign syndicates taking complete control of all our sea-borne trade. The absolute monopoly and control of ocean rates by foreign ship-owning syndicates and combinations has been exhibited here and in the other House over and over again with an array of facts that can not be questioned. To all this we seem perfectly indifferent; and yet Congress is seized with terrors and tremors if anyone suggests giving any assistance, however indirect, to an American shipowner.

I can not understand this readiness on the part of Congress and of political parties in this country to strike continually at our own business. I recognize as fully as anybody the errors and mistakes of the railroads, the injustices they have committed, and the wrongs they have done; and I believe as thoroughly as anybody in a strong Government control and supervision and regulation. But that is a very different thing from making war upon them as if they were a nest of criminals fit only to be destroyed.

This provision as it comes from the House prevents any railroad from owning any steamship or any vessel for water carriage anywhere in the country. If it becomes the policy of this Government to divorce steamships from railroads, that is a great economic question to be properly and fully considered in its own time and place. But it is utterly wrong to attach such a sweeping change to a bill designed solely to arrange for the management of the Panama Canal.

There are many railroads in this country which have no possibility of competing in any way with the traffic through the Panama Canal, and yet they are to be deprived of the possibility of taking any interest whatever in a steamship line through the canal, although in many cases it is to the railroads, who will be the feeders of the steamships, that we must look for aid in the establishment of lines running from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast and from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast. If we prevent them from taking any part or sharing in the development of these great lines, which I hope and trust will be built up, I know that in many cases we shall not have the ships at all.

Mr. President, there is a very grave situation now existing in regard to our railroads. I hold in my hand an article from the New York Times, a newspaper supporting the party to which I am opposed and supporting policies in many respects to which I am also opposed; but this article, which I shall ask to have printed when I have concluded my remarks, is in regard to the conditions of the railroads at the present moment under existing legislation. It is an appeal to Gov. Wilson to give the matter his consideration. The article furnishes facts and conclusions upon which it will be well for all those charged with the legislation and the administration of the affairs of this country to ponder. I shall not repeat them here, but I will call attention to this one fact, that to-day while the gross earnings, owing to the growth of the country, are increasing, the net earnings of the railroads are decreasing.

Mr. President, that is a condition which can not long continue. It will very soon reach the point at which it is impossible to conduct the business of railroad transportation without a loss. The railroads, in order to meet public demands, are obliged to increase their expenditures. They have also been obliged to increase their rates of wages. The organizations of railroad men of this country are managed with great intelligence and discretion, and I believe those at the head of the railroads are, as a rule, glad of the existence of those organizations. The railway conductors, the locomotive engineers, and the firemen are men of unusual character and intelligence. We know how very few strikes occur in that great industry, and it is because the heads of those organizations arrange matters intelligently with the men who manage the railroads. But, Mr. President, it has been necessary to increase the wages of the railroad men. Wages have risen all over the world; with the increased cost of living their wages had to be increased; and the expenses of operating railroads have increased. At the same time the Interstate Commerce Commission either reduces rates or prevents the railroads ever increasing the rates on their freight. That is a condition that can not possibly continue. The only body in existence that will run a railroad at a loss is the Government, which could charge the loss up to the taxpayers. If rates are not made profitable, railroad wages must come down or railroads pass to the Government or go out of business. The figures presented in this newspaper article are of the most serious character, and yet this savage pursuit, this hunting down of the railroads, which has gone far beyond compensation for any errors or sins they may have committed in the past, goes on with increasing force from day to day.

The railroads, Mr. President, are not owned by the men who operate or manage them. Take the great railroad organization in my own State, which has been attacked here to-day, and which is wisely and liberally managed and which shows a real public spirit in its work. That railroad is owned very largely by the people of New England. The multimillionaires own comparatively a small part of it. The stock and the bonds are largely held in the savings banks of New England, and the savings banks represent the accumulated earnings of the working people. They are held by trustees; they are held by charitable institutions. So wise has been the management of the road, which has absorbed some of the old local roads of my State and other States, that its securities are looked upon as trust investments, a safe provision for the widow and the orphan. Those people are certainly entitled to some consideration. They are part of the American people, even if they have some property, and are neither outlaws nor outcasts.

I think also, Mr. President, that we shall not gain in the long run by this blind assault on everything American that has any flavor of business success about it. You can not make the mass of the people of this country prosperous if you destroy all the machinery of prosperity. If the country is prosperous, all benefit; if the country is not prosperous, no one benefits; but we are getting into that state of mind where it seems to be the assumption that if any man or any corporation or anybody has a dollar in the world saved, accumulated, or earned it is prima facie evidence that they stole it, and that the only certificate of honesty is that a man should have nothing in his pocket. Thrift, energy, frugality, hard work, and their fruits are offenses, apparently, under the new dispensation, although they were once regarded as virtues.

Why, Mr. President, the material greatness of this Republic has been made through the enterprise of its business men; and its successful business men to-day, the great body of them, are honest men, working hard, saving money, earning money, helping the country and carrying its burdens of expense. I am no defender or apologist of the men who have made huge sums of money by speculation in stocks, or by trickery or dishonesty gathering in other people's property to enrich themselves. They are an evil and a curse to the country and the cause of most of the troubles under which we are now suffering; but, Mr. President, to extend our condemnation of such men, few in number as they are, and of misconduct of railroads here and there and of the greater industrial combinations to everybody in this wholesale way, and to suppose that all business men, great and small, are engaged in trying to rob somebody, can lead to nothing but disaster. You will end by bringing on ruinous stagnation, which will fall heavily on all the people, and most heavily on those least able to bear it. I make this protest here, quite hopelessly, I have no doubt, but I make it because it is to me painful to the last degree to see such propositions pressed upon this great bill which we are now engaged in considering. This bill is intended to open to the use of the world the greatest triumph of engineering and of intelligence that this century or the past centuries can show, and we seek to disfigure it with assaults upon American interests, American business, and American success. When we are considering such a bill as this, instead of trying to make it worthy of its purpose, we seem to be engaged chiefly in striving to curb American enterprise, to see if we can not ruin some American railroad or how we can hurt some American ship. It seems as if we were seeking to make this bill a seed plot for acts which will germinate into national quarrels. Mr. President, that is not the way to deal with a subject of this kind.

I ask that the article which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair). Without objection, the article referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROOT (to Mr. LODGE). Have it read.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the article may be read, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that seems to be quite a lengthy article. We have to vote at 5 o'clock and other Senators want to speak.

Mr. LODGE. Other Senators suggested that the article be read. I will not ask that it be read. I merely ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to the article being read, except to save time.

The article referred to is as follows:

WILL THE POLICY OF STARVING THE RAILROADS BE CONTINUED?

Do we need more laws and more Federal orders to hamper and hem in the railroads, or is it now time to take thought how the railroad business of the country may, with good conscience and regard for the public welfare, be delivered from the hard conditions that beset it? We put this question to Woodrow Wilson, Democratic candidate for President of the United States. He is practiced in public affairs, trained in inquiry, accustomed to use facts as stepping-stones to conclusions. If he shall be elected to the Presidency, we know that he will wish to use the powers of his office to promote the general welfare and to provide for the public prosperity. He has the ear of the people. They have listened to many false teachers. Will he teach them the truth? It is vitally important. We ask that he inquire into the facts, then speak. The largest single business interest of the country is that of the railroads. Hard times for the railroads make hard times for the country.

First, as to the facts. The Interstate Commerce Commission's bulletin of the evenues and expenses of steam railroads of the country for the 10 months of the fiscal year ended April 30 shows that the operating revenues of the country's railroads increased from $2,268,221,494 for the 10-month period a year ago to $2,300,441,752 for the 10 months ending with last April. This is an increase of $32,220,258. But the operating expenses of the roads rose from $1,553,422,947 last year to $1,585,994,725 this year. This is an increase of $32,521,778, or $301,520 more than the gross increase in revenues. To this great increase in operating costs must be added an increase of $9,666,827 in taxes, the taxes levied upon the railroads by the States through which their lines run. These increased costs and taxes much more than offset the increase in gross revenue, insomuch that the operating income of the roads, their net income, which was $628,719,126 in the last year's 10-month period, was only $618,340,085 this year, a loss of $10,379,041.

A business that shows the enormous increase of $32,000,000 in gross in a year ought, if all conditions are sound, to show a very large increase in net. The railroad net diminished more than $10,000,000. It is all summed up in the showing that for each dollar of new business the railroads secured in this 10-month period they had to pay out $1.31. These facts are already well known to the railroad and financial public. We call them to the attention of Gov. Wilson in the hope that he may make them known to the very large general public he addresses. He will not fail to see what these figures mean. He is undoubtedly acquainted already with the chief causes of the increase in railroad-operating costs. Repeated increases in the wages of labor are one cause, a marked rise in the price of the supplies which the railroads must buy is another. It is stated on good authority that on the average it now costs the railroads $1.40 to buy supplies and services which 10 years ago cost them but a dollar.

Nevertheless the Interstate Commerce Commission refuses to permit the railroads to increase their freight charges. In two memorable decisions rendered in February, 1911, one by Commissioner Prouty and the other by Commissioner Lane, the new rate tariffs filed by the railroads east of the Mississippi and those of the farther West and Northwest, increasing the charges for freight transportation, were canceled and ordered withdrawn. The railroads must pay the higher transportation costs reflected in the alarming showing of the commission's report, which we have set forth above; there is no escape from paying them, yet they are forbidden by the commission to provide themselves with additional income out of the only source from which it can come.

These conditions can not continue without imperiling the solvency of many railroads. Already they have impaired the credit of all railroads. It is no longer possible to secure investment capital on favorable terms for railroad uses. Securities that were attractive a few years ago are now practically unsalable, and there have been notable instances of reductions in the rate of dividends. The surplus accumulations of many of the railroads have been invaded for upkeep in some cases and in others dividends, if paid at all must be paid from surplus. But we must assume that all these conditions of the investment market are well known to Gov. Wilson.

This is the case of the railroads—not the whole case, only its structural features, for impressive details might be added without end. But hold, is it the case of the railroads alone? Is it not the case of the country, of the people themselves? The people can not, by their laws and their public policy, take the life blood of this great business interest without impoverishing their own vital current. On that point we beg to submit the opinion of a very high authority, the Railroad Securities Commission, appointed by the President under the act of June 18, 1910, of which President Hadley, of Yale University, was the chairman. We quote from the report of President Hadley's commission, made to the President last November:

"There was a time when the efforts of the banking authorities in most of the States were directed toward getting the discount rates as low as possible. The bank commissioners in those days regarded themselves as the representatives of the merchants who wanted loans. They made little or no attempt to safeguard the stockholders and creditors of the bank. Those were the days of wildcat banking. The country has passed beyond that period—not solely or primarily because it obtained a national banking law, but because it administered that law with due regard to the security of the stockholders and creditors of the bank as well as its customers. We have not developed our ideas of railroad management as far as we have developed our ideas of bank management. The subject is a more complex one. The apparent conflict of interests between the management and the customers is greater with a railroad than with a bank. As a result of this misunderstanding the necessary development of railroad facilities is now endangered by the reluctance of investors to purchase new issues of railroad securities in the amounts required. This reluctance is likely to continue until the American public understands the essential community of interest between the shipper and investor, and the folly of attempting to protect the one by taking away the rewards of good management from the other. * * * As our population grows denser we shall need more and more to approximate European standards of construction by the increased amount of double track, the abolition of grade crossings, the development of station facilities, both for passengers and for freight, and many other improvements scarcely less fundamental. * * * Neither the rate of return actually received on the par value of American railroad bonds and stocks to-day, nor the security which can be offered for additional railroad investments in the future, will make it easy to raise the needed amount of capital. The ratio of interest and dividends to outstanding bonds and stocks of American railroads is not quite 4½ per cent in each case. The average ratio of dividends to the capital of national banks is between 10 and 11 per cent."

Doubtless Gov. Wilson is already familiar with the Hadley report. In view of the great responsibilities which he may presently assume, we can not refrain from urging upon him the attentive study of this invaluable document. Especially is it worthy of study in those passages where it commends the policy of encouraging the creation of reserve funds out of the surplus earnings of railroads. At present we are compelling the railroads to eat into their reserve funds for day-to-day sustenance. We need not here dwell upon the grave consequences of such a policy. The New York Chamber of Commerce recently adopted a resolution urging upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, and upon State railroad commissions, the importance of allowing the railroads such a reasonable return as would attract the money of investors in amounts needed for the development of facilities. The committee of the chamber reported "that competent railroad statisticians have estimated that the sum of $8,500,000,000 will be needed in the next five years to maintain railroad facilities equal to the enormous traffic of the country." If the present policy is continued "the credit of the railroads and their ability to market securities will be impaired and the commerce of the Nation will be crippled."

We are well aware that in advocating a more liberal regulative policy toward the railroads Gov. Wilson would incur some political risk. The state of public feeling toward railroads and other corporations which has been created in the past 15 years by the appeals of agitators and of politicians is one with which he must reckon. But it is the business condition of the country, not a political theory, that confronts him. Our national wealth is at present estimated at $125,000,000,000. The last annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue showed that there are now in the United States 270,000 corporations with more than $88,000,000,000 of issued securities, stocks, and bonds. Nearly two-thirds of the United States' wealth, therefore, is in the form of capital invested in corporate securities. Gov. Wilson has said that he does not understand that it is a proper policy of the Government to make "war" upon business, big or otherwise. War upon corporate business in this country has now for some years been rather actively waged. The consequences are before us. Gov. Wilson is a self-reliant man. The success he has attained thus far in the private and in the public station has not been won by imitation of others or by borrowing the ideas of others. We confidently assume that, if elected President, he will have a policy of his own, and that he will pursue it with intelligence and with courage. We hope he is open minded enough, clear-sighted enough, courageous enough, to attempt the creation of a new and more enlightened public opinion toward business, and particularly toward the business of the railroads. The railroad problem is not only a great one, a most serious one, but, in our judgment, it is the first one to be considered. We trust that Gov. Wilson will favor the country with some illuminating discussion of that problem during the campaign.

The Democratic candidate for the Presidency will not fail to see the practical application of these remarks. They point directly to a change of mind and of heart in the Interstate Commerce Commission—or to a change of men. Should he be elected President, his advisers may tell him that this would be a bold step. In our opinion it would be a timid and unworthy shirking of duty not to take it. The minds of the people must be prepared—that is granted. Nobody is better qualified for this task than Mr. Wilson. The people are already turning from the false teachers and seeking new light. The disastrous consequences of the policies pursued by Republican administrations since 1901 are plain in the view of Gov. Wilson. He can judge whether the party that has been so long in power has strengthened itself, or the reverse. Regulation of the railroads we must have, but regulation is not strangulation. With a sound and consistent policy of his own, President Wilson, should that title come to him, may establish for himself a great reputation and regain for his party the confidence of the people. Will the next administration have a policy of its own, or will it be content to bark into the vacuum created by successive Republican administrations?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, we are approaching the completion of the Panama Canal, which is only the commencement of the organization of a great system of waterway transportation throughout the United States, for I regard that canal as a part of our domestic waters, necessary to bring our two coasts together and necessary to the establishment of a complete system of waterway transportation that will involve the utilization of our rivers in the highest degree for the carriage of freight.

We have two classes of transportation—one by railroads, the other by waterways. Both of them are conducted by public servants. The use of the waterways preceded the construction and use of the railways. The development of the railway has gradually driven out the use of the waterway. That can not be objected to, of course, whenever the railways furnish the cheaper and more efficient method of transportation; but it is objectionable when it is the result of destructive methods created by the railways themselves, the purpose of one public servant being to destroy by unfair methods the service of the other public servant. Whenever it is apparent that one public servant is endeavoring by unfair methods and practices to drive the other public servant out of employment, it is the duty of the Government to intervene and see that those practices and methods are discontinued.

As to the relative cheapness and efficiency of these two methods of transportation, we realize, of course, that, so far as quickness of service is concerned, the railway is more efficient, but we all know that as to cheapness of service the railway is not so efficient. The country is interested in maintaining the transportation cost of the country at as low a figure as is consistent with efficiency.

Take, for instance, transcontinental transportation from coast to coast. The lowest tonnage rate from coast to coast is about $15 a ton for a 3,000-mile haul. That charge is hardly compensatory to the railroad. It may cover the bare cost of transportation, but it probably does not yield a profit. The cost of transporting by sea is about $5 per ton for a distance of from 5,000 to 8,000 miles. Sugar, I understand, is transported around the Horn from the Philippine Islands to New York for about $5 a ton. Assuming that, on the average, freight can be transported from San Francisco to New York via the Panama Canal at a cost not exceeding $5 a ton, and assuming that ultimately the tonnage amounts to ten millions per annum, we will have a cost of $50,000,000 annually via the Panama Canal as against $150,000,000 by railroad, a saving of $100,000,000 annually to the American people in the cost of transportation from coast to coast.

The transcontinental railroads have at present that business, and they hope to retain not only what they have, but to secure the largely increasing business of the future.

It is quite natural, therefore, from the standpoint of human selfishness, that they should have for years delayed the construction of the Panama Canal, and that they should now, when it is approaching completion, seek to prevent it from becoming as efficient an instrumentality of transportation as it can be made. So we find, and we have reason to expect, that the policies pursued by the transcontinental railroads in the past are being pursued in the present and will be pursued in the future.

What is the duty of legislators under these conditions? Is it their duty to let this matter rest until time shall demonstrate that the efficiency of the canal has been impaired by the plans of its enemies, or is it their duty, in the exercise of a wise foresight, to provide for the future, and, guided by experience, prevent the practices which have been so injurious and destructive in the past, injurious not only with reference to trans-Isthmian transportation, but which have been injurious upon every waterway in the United States, including our coast lines, enabling railroad carriers, through their ownership or control of water lines, which ought to be competitive, to use them as agents for the destruction of their water competitors, recouping any losses which may be suffered temporarily from the railway treasury, and thus having a source of strength in the general revenues of the railway company that a mere water carrier lacks?

There is but one thing, it seems to me, to do, and that is to prevent the railway carrier from owning or controlling the stock of a competitive water carrier; and, inasmuch as we have the opportunity and are addressing ourselves to the evils of which the trans-Isthmian transportation is only a part, why should we not address our remedy to the entire system of transportation instead of confining it entirely to transportation by way of the Isthmus of Panama?

We do not always have an opportunity of legislating upon these big questions. Direct legislation upon the subject, general legislation upon the subject, is a long time in incubation; it takes a long time to pass through the various legislative processes which finally result in the complete enactment. Here we have an opportunity—nay, the absolute necessity—of correcting this evil in part. Having the opportunity of correcting it in part, we have the opportunity of correcting it in whole, and why should we deny ourselves that opportunity? The House provision does make sweeping provisions correcting this entire evil. It is, in my judgment, reasonable legislation upon the subject, for two years are given in which the railways can adjust themselves to the terms of this bill.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, an administrative tribunal that has the entire confidence of the country—and I may say has won the confidence and support of the railway managers themselves—is appointed a tribunal to determine disputed questions of fact as to whether the lines are competitive or not; and two years, as I have said, is given for accomplishing it.

During that time I have no doubt, if the Interstate Commerce Commission finds the problem so vast, so complicated, and so difficult to unravel as to warrant the extension of time or some modification of the principle involved, there will be opportunity for that commission, as the agent of Congress, exercising its power to regulate commerce under rules laid down by Congress, and having the power of recommendation to Congress given by its organic act, to recommend to us any such modifying legislation as may be necessary.

I do not look for radical results; I do not look for results that will tear apart the transportation system of the country. The Interstate Commerce Commission has never shown a destructive disposition, and I have no doubt that the great powers conferred upon that commission will be exercised wisely and temperately in the future as they have been in the past.

I am always inclined to discount the outcry that is raised against reformatory measures of this kind. Such outcry has attended every effort which Congress has made to remedy the evils of transportation. The direst disaster has been predicted. Disaster was predicted by the railroad managers in 1906, and their predictions so alarmed foreign investors and so alarmed their own stockholders that they played a great part in the great panic and depression in 1907, a panic that was brought on not by our legislation, but by the false alarm created by the railroad managers themselves in their attempts to defeat that legislation. That their predictions were entirely without basis was demonstrated later on, when the railway managers appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission and admitted that the legislation which we enacted had been beneficial not only for the country, but for the railways themselves, and indicated that they did not desire any backward step in that legislation. You will find such admissions recorded in the hearings of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate.

I am glad to see that the great transportation interests of the country, learning the lesson of experience from that unnecessary panic created by their own outcry, are not engaged now in alarming the country with reference to the effect of this legislation, though we see some indications of what might be a great clamor and outcry on the outside in the hall of legislation, where some are predicting gloom and disaster as the result of these efforts to remedy great evils.

Mr. President, the friends of this kind of legislation are not the enemies of the railways. There is not a sensible legislator who does not realize that regulation must not go to the point of destruction; that in order to secure public service we must not destroy the public servant. Who is there who does not realize that? It is true that certain movements of great railway companies toward large and general extensive increases of rates, simultaneously made as the result apparently of understanding and concert of action, have been resisted both by the administration and by the Interstate Commerce Commission; but that does not mean that as time goes on and it is demonstrated that the operating expenses of the railways, notwithstanding increased efficiency in administration, are increasing as the result of increases in the cost of supplies and the price of labor, the rates will not be so adjusted as to meet that new condition; but it is of the highest importance that we should ascertain first whether the earnings now received are a fair return upon the investments.

As yet the Interstate Commerce Commission has been denied that power. Congress thus far refuses to give it the machinery to ascertain the value of these roads, although the Supreme Court of the United States has determined that the value of the road is one of the factors which must be considered in the determination of rates.

If, therefore, the railways complain that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not proceeding with sufficient speed to take up this question of increased expense and the resulting necessity for increased rates, we must charge them, on the other hand, with a lack of candor and frankness and fairness in thus far withholding from the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to ascertain the value of their property upon which a just determination of this question depends.

So far as concerns water competition as contrasted with railway service, I have to say that the railways need not, in my judgment, fear anything from the full and complete waterway development of the country, because the railway is not adapted to the carriage of bulky and cheap commodities which constitute the chief portion of the traffic of the country, and if the transportation of these cheap commodities—the raw materials—is promoted at reasonable rates, it will result in a development of the country, an industrial development, a manufacturing development which will result in the creation of the manufactured articles, able to pay a higher price for transportation than the railways get from cheap freight.

The railroads of the country prior to the year 1907 were congested by the carriage of raw materials, so much so that the exchanges of the country were temporarily disarranged. Waterways, at least for these cheap and bulky articles of commerce, will relieve that congestion, save enormous expenditures in the future, and throw that burden upon a waterway transportation which can be capitalized and conducted at a very much lower expense.

Germany has the most perfect system of transportation in the world—the waterways of the entire State connected with each other by canals, so that you can go from any portion of Germany to another by water. These waterways are interlocked with railways, and both are interlocked with the great steamship system which promotes foreign commerce. There the services of the three public servants are enlisted to the highest degree—the domestic water carrier and the foreign water carrier and the domestic railway carrier—whilst we in this country have been practically reduced to one—the railway carrier.

The problem which we have before us is the development of the domestic water service, and when that service is once efficiently established upon an enduring basis we will have the over-sea water service established. But that will come subsequent to the full establishment of the service of the domestic water carrier.

Mr. President, I was apprehensive in the consideration of this bill that we had not sufficiently guarded against the foreign railway carrier—the Canadian railway carrier—which, whilst competitive with our domestic railway carriers from ocean to ocean, is also united in interest with those carriers in the suppression of water transportation by the Isthmus of Panama; and I feared that while prohibiting the ownership by domestic railway carriers of ships engaged in the Panama service, we might leave open the door to the Canadian railway carrier to establish such a service, either by acquiring the ships now owned by the American transcontinental lines or by establishing a new service of its own. I realized that if that was so the purpose of this legislation would be largely defeated.

It was my suggestion, therefore, that in addition to legislating with reference to domestic railway carriers and prohibiting them from owning or controlling the stock of water carriers through the canal, we should legislate against the ships which might be owned or controlled directly or indirectly—probably indirectly—by the Canadian railroad carriers, and that we should forbid such ships the use of the canal.

I am told, however, that the Canadian railway carrier is now subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission and that, as full power over the subject is given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Canadian carrier will in that way come under the control of our domestic commission. If that is so, that relieves this legislation of the difficulty which I suggested, and does away with the necessity for the additional legislation which I suggested, but I think this is a matter that requires careful consideration, and that in shaping legislation of this kind we should see to it beyond peradventure that in legislation absolutely correcting this evil, so far as domestic carriers are concerned, we may not permit it to be perpetuated, so far as foreign railway carriers are concerned.

I will say, then, Mr. President, that it is my purpose to support the original provision as it passed the House with reference to the ownership or control by railway carriers, of ships engaged in what should be competitive waterway transportation.

As this canal is now approaching completion, I have a suggestion to make to the committee in charge, and I shall be glad to supplement that suggestion hereafter by an amendment; and that is, that in finishing that great structure we should take into our councils the great men in architecture and in art who have done so much in the way of the artistic development of the country since the Chicago World's Exposition. In ancient times no great structure of this kind was completed without utilizing great men in architecture, sculpture, and painting, and their work has gone down to posterity with the work of the great constructors.

We have been utilizing in the construction of this canal a very plastic material—concrete—which can be molded into any form without additional expense and which can be made attractive in appearance as well as useful in purpose.

There has been a strong movement in this country, almost ignored by Congress, but a movement which has a strong hold upon the American people, in favor of democratizing art. We have seen organized all over the country associations of architects, artists, sculptors, engineers, associations organized in the various States devoted to the arts, including music, national organizations of each one of these associations, and a federation of arts which is bringing them all into cooperative action. They have developed a journalism of their own, devoted to the arts, music, painting, sculpture, and architecture, and they are doing much to impress the public opinion of the country.

America, blessed by nature, with all that is beautiful and attractive to the eye, has deified ugliness in the works and structures of man, and it is only of late years that we have had a renaissance of art, a renaissance of that culture that existed in the time of Washington and Jefferson and which is exemplified in the public structures which they erected.

It seems to me this is an appropriate time to bring the commission of arts, recently organized by national legislation, into cooperation in an advisory way with the Panama Canal Commission, and that they should be called upon to make some suggestions which will enable us to crown this structure with an artistic demonstration so that it will be representative to the nations of the world and to future generations, not only of the constructive genius, but the culture of our time.

I am aware that many think that the arts hardly constitute a part of civilization; that has been the materialistic view which has prevailed; and I have seen smiles upon the faces of some of my friends in the Senate Chamber as I broached this subject. The arts not a part of civilization! Civilization consists mainly of literature and the arts, and art finds its highest work in uniting the beautiful with the useful in such a way as to make art the common heritage of all the people and not confine it to a privileged class.

We find art in Europe democratized everywhere, and it is because of this that the artisans of Europe far surpass American artisans, not in capacity, but in the nice training and culture which produce the highly finished articles that command the highest prices throughout the world. The commonest peasant in France or Germany has access to the accumulations of the ages in art, the accumulated experience in design.

This feeling which has been increasing throughout the country has resulted in the creation of the National Commission of Arts, composed of the great architects of the country, the great artists, the great sculptors, the great constructors, men who have done more in the way of advancement on these lines in the last 20 years than had been accomplished within the entire history of the Republic; men who, receiving the training of the very best schools abroad, have with a practical American genius applied the information which they have received there to the material things of life. These men are not merely great artists, they are great constructors, great administrators.

There are men upon that art commission who are consulted by the great railway men of the country with reference to methods of traffic, particularly the traffic of cities, the great terminal stations that now adorn our country, and enterprises of that kind. In great private enterprises the artist, the engineer, and the constructor are yoked together for effective work. Go into the offices of our leading architects and you will find two or three hundred employees—artists, designers, draftsmen, engineers—all working with perfect system, and so you realize that the men—the so-called artists—on this Commission of Arts are men of great constructive and administrative capacity.

Now, I should like to see something of that kind provided for in this bill. I should like to see that Commission of Arts, which has been appointed and organized for the purpose of giving the President and Congress advice upon these matters, commissioned to visit the Isthmus of Panama and to suggest to the Congress of the United States how that great constructive work can be appropriately crowned by some artistic design that will be a fitting memorial of the spirit and culture of our time.

I hope that the Senate—taking, as I know it always has done, a broad and liberal view of the importance of the art development of the country; of the necessity of seeing to it that our public buildings, structures, and works are of the highest artistic quality—will at all events commission the National Commission of Arts to inquire into this matter and to make a report as to whether the existing work, plastic in character, can be molded into such form as will be attractive to the eye, and also as to what appropriate memorial shall be raised that will exemplify to the nations and to the ages the high development of artistic culture in the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have long been of the opinion that our waterways would continue to be of comparatively little benefit, either as a means of transportation or of regulating railroad rates, unless some method could be devised to prevent the railroads from monopolizing the water as well as the rail transportation. I am in hearty sympathy, therefore, with the proposition to divorce rail from water transportation. I believe the quicker we can, with justice to all interest, devise a just system by which no railroad carrier will be permitted to own any interests in a water carrier, except such as may be necessary to extend its lines, the better it will be for the country at large.

While entertaining these views, Mr. President, I admit the force of the objection that in this bill we are dealing with the Panama Canal and providing legislation for its regulation and operation, and that for this reason it might be better to confine this act to a prohibition of railroad-owned vessels passing through the canal.

Mr. President, on account of my duties in connection with the tariff and with river and harbor legislation, I was not able to be present at the hearings before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. Although I am ranking minority member, I did not hear the testimony. I was present only at the meeting at which Mr. Lane and Mr. Prouty, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, gave their views to the committee, and at the final executive session at which the amendments submitted to the Senate were adopted. After mature reflection I have reached the conclusion that the Senate committee amendments with reference to the ownership and control by railroads of competing water carriers do not meet the situation as well as the House provisions with respect to this subject.

The House bill provides for the divorcement of rail and water transportation. I am in favor of that, but if it is thought wise to confine the bill to vessels passing through the canal, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] will be adopted and that the principle of divorcing these two methods of transportation will be applied to all vessels passing through the canal.

The problem which confronts us is that of protecting the people against the control by railroads of competing water lines, with a view to preventing a monopoly in transportation and to provide a workable and effective method of regulating freight rates. That is the evil with which we are dealing, whether our legislation is confined to the canal or is broadened so as to cover water transportation generally. In connection with that question I know of no authority of greater weight than the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is a commission in which the people have great confidence. It has dealt intelligently and, in the main, wisely and with reasonable satisfaction to the people, considering the limited powers possessed, with our great railroad problems. The opinion, therefore, of that board should carry, and I believe does carry, with it great weight and it is important that we should know exactly what it thinks about this question and the problems growing out of it.

The President of the United States seems to have been of that opinion, for on the 12th day of March of this year, when this question had been raised by the House bill, he addressed an inquiry to this board soliciting its opinion upon two propositions. The first was whether in its judgment the transcontinental roads should be permitted to exercise control over vessels passing through the canal, and second, whether, in its opinion, the dangers which the people fear as a result of railroad control could be properly regulated and safeguarded if the commission were invested with plenary power over water rates. That is not the language, but that is the meaning of the letter addressed by the President to the commission. The chairman of the commission, Mr. Prouty, speaking for the commission and answering that inquiry of the President, made the following emphatic statement:

The commission, after consideration, is unanimously of the opinion that if the waterways of this country are to be of any substantial benefit in the way of reducing rates of transportation it is absolutely essential that rail carriers be prohibited from owning or controlling, directly or indirectly, competing water carriers. From our knowledge of what has happened in the past we are of the opinion that this is particularly true of transcontinental railroads and steamships plying in competition with them.

Meeting the other inquiry of the President, the commission declares that the powers of rate regulation would not meet the situation and would not remove the danger which the people justly apprehend.

Here is the statement of the commission in response to this inquiry:

While the Interstate Commerce Commission might, if vested with authority, prevent to some extent the injurious effect of allowing the common ownership over these competing carriers, still the limitations under which we act are such that we do not believe we could secure to the public the same favorable rates which would result from unrestrained competition.

It is argued, and argued with considerable persistence, especially by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], that the views of the commission as expressed in this letter to the President had undergone a change and that this modification of their views was disclosed in the testimony of the chairman of the commission, Mr. Prouty, and of Commissioner Lane, before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

It is true, as an examination of the hearings will disclose, that Mr. Prouty in his testimony before the committee did express the opinion that the New Haven road, although it had a monopoly both of water and rail transportation in New England, had not exercised the powers of that monopoly so as to impose upon the people of that section unreasonable rates or for the purpose of denying them efficient service. He did say in connection with the lake transportation system there was no great cause for complaint because of railroad monopoly. In other words, that, so far as these two monopolies were concerned, the one controlling New England transportation and the other controlling lake transportation, the evils which naturally and which generally flow from the monopolization of transportation have not been so pronounced there as in other parts of the country. But there was no modification in their testimony upon the general proposition that wisdom and sound public policy require that there should be a divorcement of railroads from water transportation.

A careful reading of the testimony of these members of the commission before the committee will show there has been no modification by them of the views expressed in the letter to the President. Indeed, they there expressed the same views even more strongly.

Let me read from the evidence of Mr. Prouty:

The CHAIRMAN—

This is the question put by Senator BRANDEGEE, the chairman of the committee, to Mr. Prouty, the chairman of the commission—

Now, suppose we bar out from the canal all the ships that any railroad, domestic or foreign, is interested in; what effect do you think it would have upon the commerce of the country and the operation of the canal?

Mr. PROUTY. Well, my belief is, Senator, that that would eventually be the proper thing to do. I think that the proper thing to do would be to prohibit all railroads from owning ships which ply through the Panama Canal.

This testimony was given in June. The letter was written in March.

I think in that way you would get a healthy competition between water lines plying between the Atlantic seaboard and the Pacific seaboard; probably a healthier competition than you would get in any other way. Now, it is not, in my opinion, a good plan to rely upon any commission, or any court, or anybody else, to do a thing which the forces of commerce and transportation, the competitive forces, will regulate.

Why did Mr. Prouty think that it would be wise public policy to foreclose the opportunity of these transcontinental railroads to control transportation through the canal?

They own and operate lines of rail from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, from New York to San Francisco, thoroughly equipped and fully adequate to the accommodation of the business of the country. Why then should they want to own water lines running from the same points on the Atlantic to the same points on the Pacific coast?

In other words, why should they go to the expense of tens of millions of dollars to secure a water line which runs in immediate and direct competition with their rail lines, unless, as Mr. Prouty intimates, their purpose is to prevent somebody else, to prevent some hostile interest from getting control of this competing water system, thereby reducing the rates of transportation from Atlantic to Pacific points by rail.

Here is what Mr. Prouty said to the committee upon this subject:

Mr. PROUTY. Well, the railroad is engaged in transporting that traffic by rail from New York or the Middle West to San Francisco. Now, why should it desire to build a steamship? It is not its business to run a steamship.

Again, he says:

It does not seem to me that there is any legitimate reason why the Southern Pacific should desire to put on a water line between San Francisco and New York.

Again, he says:

Now, what I can not understand is this: Why does the Southern Pacific want to own the Pacific Mail Steamship Co.? Why did it ever acquire the Pacific Mail Steamship Co.? It acquired the Pacific Mail simply for the effect it could produce by it on transcontinental rates. That is the only reason.

Senator TOWNSEND. What effect did it have?

Mr. PROUTY. Why, to control the transcontinental rates. It kept up the transcontinental rates. It virtually shut up that line as a competitive line.

Mr. President, there can be no doubt in the world about the object of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. in its declared purpose to put on a costly line of steamships between New York and San Francisco. More than half the stock of this company is owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad, whose rail line spans the continent from New York to San Francisco.

This company represents the whole transcontinental railroad system and syndicate. It represents the same railroad interest which, years ago, when we were trying to pass a bill to locate and construct an interoceanic canal, fought with all the influence and agencies they could command the adoption and inauguration of that great project, and for many years thwarted and delayed it.

Suppose we shall open the canal to the ships of these great railroad companies. Does anybody suppose for a minute that any private capital will be invested in ships for this trade, or that they could live under such unequal conditions? Have not the railroads wherever they have controlled competitive water transportation succeeded in driving out practically all privately owned ships?

Could we more effectually shut out private capital from the use of this canal than to permit these railroads to carry out their manifest scheme to enter and preempt this traffic? Does anybody doubt, if that is permitted, that there will be no competition and reduction in transportation rates as the result of the vast expenditure of money on the part of the Government in the construction of this great artificial waterway? Does anybody doubt, if that is done, that the great moving purpose which the people of this country had in authorizing the construction of this canal, at an expenditure of $400,000,000, will be defeated?

The advocates of this legislation want to prevent the monopolization of the canal by competitive railroads—that the canal may be used so as to lower transportation and regulate rates. They want this great link between the two oceans to subserve the great public purposes for which it was constructed. That is what they seek to accomplish by this legislation, and it is all we seek to accomplish. And when we seek to do that we are told by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that we are trying to strike down the railroads. No, Mr. President, we are not trying to strike down the railroads; we are trying to keep the railroads from striking down and defeating the great purposes for which the people have made this vast outlay.

During the last quarter of a century the greatest problem connected with our industrial situation has been the question of preserving commercial competition, protecting the people from the monopolization of production, protecting the people from the monopolization of the distribution of the products of industry. That is the great problem with which we have struggled. It has grown, as the years have passed, more and more acute; and to-day, if I understand anything about the signs of the times, the most vital question before the American people, outside of the tariff—and the tariff naturally affiliates itself with this question—the most vital question outside of the tariff before the American people, and the one that is going to exercise the most potential and determining influence in the presidential contest in which we are now engaged, is the question, How are we to preserve the essential principle of competition in our business life?

In my judgment, the party which convinces the people that it is best able to deal with this question, that it is in earnest about this question, and that it can and will solve it in the interest of the people, and restore competition in production, in distribution, in the marketing of the things essential to the life of the people and the prosperity of the Nation, will appeal powerfully to the support of the electorate of the country.

In our efforts to deal with this problem we have adopted various and sundry devices. Years ago we established the Interstate Commerce Commission. Why? Because we discovered that the railroads, always and naturally a monopoly, were using their power of monopoly for the purpose of exacting from the people unjust tribute and excessive rates. We established it for the purpose of correcting that evil; and from time to time we have enlarged its powers with a view to correcting that evil.

A few years ago when it was discovered that, with all the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, they were helpless to deal with the situation because of the railroad ownership of such a large percentage of the productive resources of the country, to meet that situation what did we do? We did in principle exactly what the advocates of this legislation insist we shall do now. We passed an act by which we divorced the railroads from production. We are seeking to apply the same principle to meet another phase of the same question and the same evil. With the same general object in view we passed the Sherman antitrust law; and with those two acts we sought, and have been seeking, as best we could, to restore competition in this country, to preserve that essential of prosperity—not the prosperity of the few, but the prosperity of the many. We have not succeeded.

There has been a great movement recently for enlarged expenditures by the Government for the development of our waterways, and we have enlarged these expenditures. Our appropriations now for the purpose of improving our waterways are the largest in our history, and yet the people are not satisfied. They demand that the amount be increased. It is folly to say that this demand comes from what is called the "pork barrel system"—the desire of Members of Congress to secure something for their constituents in order that they may further intrench themselves in their affections.

This movement comes, not from Members of Congress at all—it comes from the people of the country. From one end of the country to the other it finds expression in local associations and national movement—congresses formed for the purpose, not of promoting any project, but for the purpose of impressing upon the country the importance of developing our waterways.

What is the argument that runs through all the demands and resolves of these conventions? What is the argument that is inspiring the people with so much zeal in behalf of enlarged expenditures for the improvement of our rivers and harbors and the construction of canals? Higher than any other consideration or motive is that of utilizing our national waterways to escape from the grasp and the greed of the railroads. The people know perfectly well that if our magnificent system of waterways are thoroughly developed and made to subserve their natural purpose of transportation, and the railroads are not permitted to acquire control of them, the result will be a lowering of rates both by rail and water.

The trouble is, Mr. President, as fast as the people through the expenditure of this money improve these waterways the railroad companies come in and get control of them and defeat the purpose of the expenditure.

When the House of Representatives declared, as they do in this bill, in favor of divorcing the railroads from water transportation, they were simply giving expression to the will of the people, simply providing that these expenditures in the improvement of our waterways and in the building of this canal should not be frustrated and defeated by the railroads acquiring control of them and maintaining on them the same high rates that they now exact on their rail lines.

Mr. President, when it was proposed to construct this canal connecting the two oceans I have no doubt the desire that we should bring the two oceans together for military purposes and for purposes of general use had much to do with it; but I think if the people had not believed that it would furnish a means by which they could escape from the grip and the oppression of the transcontinental railroads, the Isthmian Canal would never have been constructed. Who was here opposing that canal? Who for more than a score of years delayed the beginning of this great work? Was it not the same railroads that are now saying they are anxious to utilize it as a means of transportation in the interest of the people? Why were they trying to defeat it then? Was it not because they knew it would interfere with their monopoly? Why are they seeking now to get control of it? Is it not because they want to continue their monopoly?

We have built that canal at a cost of $400,000,000, a sum that staggers the imagination—the greatest engineering feat of all the ages. It is the property of the people. The question is, Shall we so safeguard and protect that property as to make it an instrument in the accomplishment of the will and purpose of the people in its construction or shall we, by indifference and carelessness, fail to do that and permit the men who fought it, the men who for so many years delayed it, to get control of it and measurably defeat one of the main purposes of its construction? Shall we do that? I hope not.

If we want to secure to the people the full measure of benefit which they have a right to expect from the construction of this great enterprise, there are two ways in which we can do it. One is to make it a free canal for American ships. The other is to exclude from it all vessels owned by competing rail lines.

The railroads are behind this demand for tolls. They favor tolls, whether they are allowed to use the canal or not. The higher these tolls are made the better the railroads will like it.

Suppose you impose a toll of $2 a ton on American commerce passing through the canal. What would be the effect? Would not the transcontinental railroads make the people pay the same amount of tolls in the shape of increased rates upon every pound of freight that they haul across the continent on their rail lines? The amount of domestic tonnage through the canal will be small compared with the transcontinental tonnage, and in that proportion the tolls in the form of high rates paid these railroads will exceed those paid through the canal.

Take these tolls by the water route off, and the rail routes, unless they own the water route also, will have to that extent to come down on the rail rates. With tolls retained, and railroad-owned vessels allowed, the Treasury of the United States would take in a few dollars, but the people would have to pay on the great commerce that crosses the continent five times as much in higher rates to the railroads. The Government would save a few dollars and the people who make up the Government and supply it with all its funds would loose many dollars.

But, Mr. President, whether tolls are charged or not, the people will get but little benefit from the canal in the way of reduced transportation rates, in the way of regulation of freight rates, unless by excluding railroad-owned ships we prevent the railroads from practically taking charge of the great waterway and, by driving out all others, prevent it from being used in competition with them—thus utterly defeating one of the main purposes, if, indeed, not the chief purpose, of its construction.

Mr. President, I have said more upon this subject than I intended to say. I thank the Senate for the flattering attention it has given me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Georgia. I desire to say but a few words in regard to this matter. It has been my misfortune that I have not been able to attend all the sessions of the Senate during the time it was under consideration. I shall, therefore, attempt to present in as concise form as possible the suggestions that occur to me.

In the first place, we are not building this canal as an agency to punish violators of the law—violators of the law against monopoly or violators of the laws regarding transportation. Those questions should, as far as possible, be eliminated from the consideration of a measure that is intended, primarily, to provide a system of tolls for the use of this canal. We should eliminate every thought and suggestion tending or looking to the restraint or punishment of those who use it.

No tonnage or traffic originates on the sea. It originates on the land. The railroads are the agencies that gather up the traffic that is to afford business for this canal. The means by which that business is to be transacted is embodied in the shipping that is to carry this merchandise. To us the most important use served by this canal is that of getting our excess products to the foreign market. In that we find our greatest advantage. Whatever use the canal will best promote, the carrying of our surplus products to the foreign market for sale is that which should first receive our attention.

I would not exclude vessels because they were owned by this or that combination of individuals. The surplus products of the Pacific coast will find their market through the canal to European countries. Much of the surplus product of the Atlantic coast will find its outlet through the canal to the Orient or to the western coast of our own country, or to the western coast of South America. The first question entitled to consideration is the individual benefit derived by the producer of the commodity that is to be carried through the canal, and if we will keep our minds close to that question we will not have time or find it necessary to consider the punishment of those who operate in violation of the law against monopoly. We ought not to reach that question until after the business of this great enterprise is established and well on a solid basis.

Hence I have not been in sympathy with the provision in the House bill which seeks to discriminate against transportation companies because of either the quantity or the character of the property which they own. It is equivalent to a confession of inability on the part of the Government to enforce its laws to apply such agencies as that great canal in doing so.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Co., to-day operating between the Pacific coast and the oriental ports and countries, would doubtless extend its lines so as to include the traffic between the Atlantic States and the Orient, and yet under the restrictions contained in the House bill that line would not be allowed to send its vessels through the canal because, forsooth, a certain railroad company is a large stock owner in the Pacific Mail Co. Do we want to do that? We should be beckoning for business for this canal rather than waving it away. We will not have too much business to insure the solvency of this great enterprise if we take advantage of all that is possible or available. Any discouragement will result in a lessening of the income and a discouragement of the use and operation of this canal.

The railroads are the gatherers of that which must sustain the canal. It does not originate on the shore of either ocean. It originates back in the country and must be brought to the seaports by railroads. They are the natural conveyors of the commodities to be carried through the canal upon ships. Ships that pay toll afford a sure and definite revenue. Our own ships, under the provisions of this bill as it now stands, will pay no tolls, nor should they. The measure carrying that provision will tend to build up American commerce; it will promote the building and operating of ship lines, because they will have that much advantage over the ships owned by other countries. They should have it. It will build up the merchant marine for which the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has been pleading for so many years. It will give an advantage to Americans because they are Americans, and that is the doctrine which has always appealed to me in the distribution of the rights of our citizens.

I was glad to have the message come to me during my enforced absence from this Chamber that the Senate of the United States, in its conservative wisdom, had spoken for free ships flying the American flag and carrying American merchandise.

It was suggested this morning during the debate that we could get along without ships owned by railroads or controlled by them. Who would build these ships? Are there men standing ready with money, enterprise, and disposition to supply enough ships, independent and outside of those owned or controlled in whole or in part by the railroads, to meet the wants and necessities of commerce? Where are those men who will, as an independent enterprise, furnish the ships—they do not furnish them to-day without the canal—up to the measure of the commerce of to-day? When that canal is in operation, the commerce will be multiplied many times and the necessity for ships will be many times as great as it is to-day. If you divorce the land transportation with the water transportation, you inaugurate a strife between independent operators on the land and on the sea that would always result in more or less business disturbance. The railroads are people. The railroad companies are individuals. Every share of stock is owned by an individual. One might think, listening to some of the discussion here, that a railroad was an impersonal thing, and not a part of our people or their institutions. There is so much clamor—clamor for ulterior purposes—against men because they combine to do that which could not be done except through the combination of men and the means of men that we are apt to be led astray, to be led into false trails. Being once embarked upon, they lead no one knows where, not even those who clamor for these new methods. They seem to be imbued with a spirit of antagonism against the railroads, and upon that spirit of antagonism they are led far from conservative, reasonable lines.

Now, I hold no brief for the railroad companies; neither do I hold any briefs against them. I would be ashamed to stand here and inveigh against the great transportation companies of this country. Take them away as by magic in a night, and you would take away the advancement of generations that represent the growth of this country and its greatness. They are only individual enterprises for the convenience of management formed under the law, not in violation of it, to do that which no individual could do.

Under the provisions of this bill as it comes to us if the railroad, or those controlling it, owned a share of stock in a great ship that is in itself an asset to the commerce of the country, that ship would be put out of business. What good purpose is accomplished by it?

One Senator in speaking this morning suggested that the railroads should divorce themselves from the ownership of the vessel. To what end? Who would become the owners of the ships? In what hour could they be transferred from present corporate existence to a new corporate existence? Are we sure we would gain something by installing a new corporation as owner of the ships and build up a new basis of possible monopoly? It does not appeal to me. The people who do things and produce commodities to be taken to and disposed of in the foreign market have no such feeling as that indicated by the discusion of this bill here to-day. It is enough to take a false promise and reason out into the uncertainty and the unknown conclusions.

I regret that this question has been interjected into a measure that should have been concrete in form, specific, and confined to the real purpose of this legislation—the fixing of tolls. I hope that before the hour of voting arrives the Senators will gather their minds together, centered upon the real question. Adopt the amendment, if you please, which I would not vote for except as a means to a better end, and then strike out the whole provision after you have accomplished what is termed here the "perfection of a bad provision." You can not make it a good provision by amending it. You may express your disapprobation of it through such means, but the thing for the Congress of the United States to do is to eliminate the provision entirely and trust to the enforcement of the laws regulating commerce, regulating transportation lines. Trust to the wisdom of Congress, in the event that the law is found insufficient, to enact laws and to enforce laws that will be sufficient, but do not make a $400,000,000 proposition an instrument of vengeance or a whip to ruin some one who, in the judgment of some one, is violating or may violate the law.

I sincerely hope that when we have finished the consideration of this measure it will contain no provision restricting the use of the canal to either foreign vessels, railroad-owned vessels, or American vessels carrying the American flag. That is my hope. Whether I shall realize it in part or any part of it I can not in this hour say, but all we can do is to speak for the truth, and some day it will find a lodgment in the wisdom of men.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think that railroad-owned ships should be excluded from the Panama Canal. I gave my general reasons for this the other day and I do not intend to repeat them now. The conditions are different from those existing in other sections of the country where business interests have grown up and great industrial organizations formed, and we can exclude these ships from the canal without any damage or without the disturbance of any business conditions or interests.

I desire to say that in the committee—and I think it is not improper to say it here—I offered an amendment in line with, if not almost in the words of, the amendment by the Senator from Georgia to the House section, limiting its operation to the Panama Canal. I did that not only for the reason that I thought railroad-owned ships should be excluded from the canal, but also because I believed that this is such a broad question and one that involves and affects so many sections of the country and such great business interests and has not been given the consideration it ought to receive, and that it would be best to confine our legislation to the Panama Canal, as that was really the subject that was before our committee, and now before us.

As a general principle I am in favor of divorcing, if possible, the ownership of railroads and steamboats. Railroads should be confined to railroad business, to land lines, and steamship lines should be confined to steamship business.

While that is my general view with reference to the House provision, if it were possible to place in it a provision under which the Interstate Commerce Commission might be vested with discretionary authority and power to extend the time provided in the bill for the separation of water and railroad lines so that no injury would result, I would not see so much objection to it and think I should vote for it.

But when I see practically every Senator from the New England States opposing this measure because of the disturbance it will very likely bring to their business conditions, I am constrained to see considerable force in their position. I am satisfied that they are just as devoted to the interests of their people as I am to mine. I am satisfied that they want conditions there which are for the benefit of their people just as much as I do in my section, and if the people there were suffering from inferior service or unjust exactions by the railroad companies, I am sure there is no one who would more swiftly take up a proposition to correct those ills than they. So while individuals representing different organizations came before our committee denouncing the conditions in that section, I am constrained to defer very largely to the judgment of the representatives of those States as to the course to take at this time on this matter. Members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as shown by the junior Senator from Michigan, do not think it would be wise to take such action on this bill.

This is also true with reference to the Great Lakes. We have had, as I remember, none of the Representatives or Senators from those States coming here and advocating this particular proposition, but they all seem to be anxious that their business conditions should not be disturbed. They seem to think that the conditions are fairly satisfactory, and I think that added weight should be given to this position on their part, or at least it ought to add considerable importance to it. I do not desire to do anything that would bring greater damage to their business interests or their sections than the good that would come from this legislation, if it were enacted as it passed the House.

Other sections of the country are in the same condition. This simply illustrates that this is a broad question, a large question, and a most important one, and I think we should confine this legislation to the Panama Canal, unless we can get a satisfactory provision extending the time under which the Interstate Commerce Commission, or some body of that kind, can take into account all the conditions that exist in the various sections of this country, so that they can work out what we probably all desire, without disturbing the business and without doing really more harm than good.

There are other provisions in section 11 that I think are really of greater importance—that is, that would bring more real good to the people—than the divorcement even of railroads from water lines, and those are provisions to which the Senate committee has made no amendment whatever. One of them provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission may establish through connection between rail lines and the docks of the water carrier where it is reasonably practicable to do so. I think that will bring about substantial good to the shipping interests of the country and the people of the country. It will secure docking facilities to shipping where none can now be secured. It will destroy one of the greatest means now used to throttle competition.

Then we also provide that the Interstate Commerce Commission may establish through routes and maximum joint rates over a rail-and-water line and determine the conditions under which such lines shall be operated. In other words, we place through rates under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission and require the rail lines and the water lines to make and furnish connections to and with each other. No more substantial relief to shippers can be secured by legislation than will be secured by this provision.

We also empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish maximum proportional rates by rail to and from ports to which their traffic is brought or from which it is taken by a water carrier. We empower the commission to determine upon what traffic these rates shall be laid and the conditions under which they shall apply.

Then, we also empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to require rail lines entering into arrangements with water carriers from a home port to a foreign country for carrying through business to require similar arrangements with other water carriers to such countries or the ports thereof. In other words, if a railway line has a connection with a steamship line to one port in a country and another steamship line desires to carry from that port to that country, the Interstate Commerce Commission may require the railroads to make connection with it. This provision I consider of really greater substantial general benefit to the business of this country than even the general divorcement of steamship lines from the railroad lines.

I am heartily in favor of those provisions. I think they give us substantial constructive legislation, and if we confine this legislation to the matter of railroad-owned ships coming through the Panama Canal, unless we can get a satisfactory provision and get the Interstate Commerce Commission to see that this divorcement is made without the disturbance of business and without great damage to the community and secure the enactment of these provisions into law, we have secured the passage of very great constructive legislation that will bring real benefit to the people of every section of the country without disturbing any business conditions or working any injury to any section of the country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE and Mr. CUMMINS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I heard the voice of the Senator from Iowa behind me. I was going to make a few remarks. Did the Senator desire to speak? We have only 50 minutes. The Senator from Georgia desires to speak, I understand, briefly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to speak not more than five minutes, probably less than that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will simply state that inasmuch as I have refrained during the course of the debate from making any remarks upon the general features of the bill, I hope that I may be allowed to proceed and close the debate at that time. But I want to accord the Senator from Georgia an opportunity, if he desires to make some remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not wish more than 10 minutes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am, and have been ever since I studied the subject, very much opposed to permitting a land carrier to do business by water over a competitive route. But nevertheless I shall support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, and I do it for one reason, and one only. It is that the House provision does not furnish what I believe to be a workable, fair, just plan for dealing with the existing situation. We have allowed land carriers to become interested in water carriers, and whenever we impose what I believe to be a wise policy upon the country at large we should be careful to so deal with those who have been permitted to enter the business both on land and sea fairly, not only fairly to those who have made their investments but fairly to those who are to be served by the carriers.

One further word. I believe that the House provision is faulty as respects the Panama Canal or any other water line in this respect. It is made unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of the interstate-commerce act to own, to lease, to operate, and so forth, any common carrier by water. A boat is not a common carrier. A ship plying through the canal is not a common carrier any more than a locomotive engine is a common carrier, or a car a common carrier. The common carrier is the animate organization which does the business, whether it be by a partnership, an individual, or a corporation.

The House provision prohibits the land carrier from becoming interested in that distinct organization, and it does not prohibit the land carrier from the ownership or the operation of a boat upon the water, even though it be engaged in competitive business.

In my judgment, if the provision ever comes to the construction of a court it will be held that the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. may own and operate ships through the Panama Canal, although the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. could not operate ships through the canal, because the Southern Pacific Railroad owns a part, possibly a major part, of its capital stock.

I assume that it is the intent that the land carrier shall not only be prohibited from the ownership or interest in a distinct organization which is a common carrier by water, but also that it shall be prohibited from operating the ship itself through the canal. At the proper time I intend to offer an amendment, after the word "traffic," in line 23 of page 19, to insert:

Or any vessel carrying freight or passengers over said water route.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment which will be offered by the Senator from Iowa. I think the criticism upon the language of the House is sound, and if intended to reach the subject it is essential also to vote for the provision which he has suggested.

I do not desire to occupy the time of the Senate upon section 11 or the amendments to it. I wish to discuss a subject which can only come up when this bill goes into the Senate. When it is reported to the Senate and section 5 is reached I hope the Senate will reject the Senate amendment to section 5. Section 5 as we have perfected it permits the vessels exclusively engaged in coastwise traffic to go through the canal without paying toll. The Senate amendment also permits vessels belonging to Americans engaged in foreign trade to go through the canal without paying toll. It is to that provision that I beg the attention of the Senate, and I earnestly plead for its rejection.

Mr. President, during the whole history of our country it has been our policy to concede to the owners of vessels of other countries the same privileges in our harbors, the same privileges in our canals that we gave to citizens of our own country owning vessels. That has been the fixed policy, followed even during the days when we had a great merchant marine. We have treaties by which whenever our vessels reach an English port they receive there exactly the same treatment that the vessel owned by an Englishman would receive. We have treaties by which vessels owned by citizens of our country receive exactly the same treatment upon the canals along the lakes owned by Great Britain that Great Britain concedes to citizens of Canada and citizens of Great Britain generally.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Is not the Senator from Georgia aware that the United States permits British vessels to use the canal separating the two countries, at least, to the same extent that Great Britain permits American vessels to use the canals on the Canadian side?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Precisely; and I have so stated it. What I stated was that it has been our policy to concede to the vessels of Great Britain the same privileges in our waters that we concede to vessels owned by citizens of the United States; that this is true as to harbors; that this is true as to canals we have built; and that the same policy has been pursued by Great Britain in her harbors and in the canals she owns toward the citizens of America owning vessels that she extends to citizens of Great Britain owning vessels.

What I urge is, that there has been a policy considered wise—and which I believe to have been wise—to facilitate the owners of vessels of either of the countries with the same privileges in the waters of either, and the provision in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty that, if this canal were built, citizens of England owning vessels should go through it upon the same terms that citizens of the United States owning vessels should go through with their vessels is nothing novel. It has been a part of the general policy of our country, and I believe it was a wise policy. What I insist is that such a provision in the present treaty, with reference to this canal, is nothing novel. It is a part of the general policy that has been pursued by the two countries. To-day an American vessel can enter a British harbor with no more restrictions than a vessel owned by a subject of Great Britain would enter an English harbor.

I have drawn the distinction between coastwise vessels and vessels engaged in foreign trade. I have shown that the Supreme Court of the United States has recognized that distinction. We have a treaty that requires the harbors of the United States to admit an English vessel on the same terms that an American vessel is admitted; and yet the Supreme Court of the United States held that coastwise vessels did not fall under that provision, because coastwise vessels involved exclusively a domestic problem and it was applicable, therefore, only to vessels owned by Americans.

I do not press again the proposition that our existing treaty with reference to the canal requires us to extend to a vessel owned by an Englishman the same privileges that we extend to a vessel owned by an American. I have no doubt that that is what it means, but I put the case this time upon even a higher principle. I put it upon the broad policy which has been our universal policy; I put it upon the broad practice that has been our universal practice; and not only our policy and our practice, but the policy and the practice of Great Britain toward the owners of American vessels.

With the provision that we passed yesterday, permitting the purchase of vessels anywhere and the putting of the American flag over them if they are owned by Americans, our merchant marine should grow; and it will need the privileges of equal terms in other countries; it will need, where the dominion of Great Britain is found, the same privileges which she extends to her own vessels.

I urge upon the Senate, when in the Senate we are called upon to vote on this Senate amendment providing that vessels owned by Americans engaged in the foreign trade may pass through without paying tolls, to reject that proposition and to require equal tolls of all persons owning vessels passing through the canal, except, of course, coastwise vessels, and that we treat all coastwise vessels the same. We let them go through free.

I shall not detain the Senate longer. I discussed the treaty yesterday. I do not believe a further discussion of the construction of the present treaty would change a vote. I am not encouraged to believe that Senators are anxious to be bound by it; but even if they are not anxious to be bound by the present treaty, for the broader reason which I have presented, one of sound policy, let us not handicap American vessels by establishing a course which will put an end to the equality of treatment for the owners of American vessels hereafter in foreign waters.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course in a bill of this character, with a large number of different topics extending over the range of subjects that it contains, it is absolutely impossible in the space of 30 minutes—at the end of which time we are bound by the unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the bill and all amendments to its final passage—to do anything more than give the barest superficial attention to the bill.

Mr. President, before I come to the bill itself, referring to what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has said in relation to his vote on the question of granting free passage to our vessels engaged in the foreign trade, and what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has just said, I want to state that yesterday I voted to give free passage to our vessels engaged in the foreign trade. I did so because the Senate had already voted to give free passage to our vessels engaged in the domestic trade. I have taken the view that we did not have any right under the treaty to do either; but, inasmuch as we had done one, I thought it was consistent to do the other. I have since thought over the matter, and for the reasons so cogently and succinctly stated by the Senator from Massachusetts I think that whatever trouble may result from the action of Congress upon this question of tolls and the construction of the treaty may be capable of easier adjustment if we can confine the action to our ships engaged in the domestic trade than if we include those engaged in the foreign trade also. I expect to change my vote when the Senator from Georgia introduces his amendment in the Senate and to vote against giving free passage to foreign ships.

Mr. President, we also yesterday went upon record as giving American registry to ships built in foreign lands, provided they were owned and manned by Americans; and Senators have said that they thought that this method would be a long step in the direction of building up our merchant marine. The senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who voted for it, stated that he thought it would amount to very little, because he thought the expense of operating those ships under American registry would be so great that there would be but little advantage taken of it.

I regret the action that was taken, because I think it is a humiliating spectacle and a humiliating admission to make; and I think we would take very little pride in seeing whatever portion of the American merchant marine might be developed under that system of buying our ships in foreign markets and flying the American flag over them. I think the humiliation of the spectacle would be worse than the deficiency in the American merchant marine for a great nation like this to confess that it can not build its own ships and that it will not, either by subsidy to those ships or by encouragement of its shipbuilding plants, build its own ships. I think we will take very little pleasure in sailing foreign-built ships under the American flag and carrying around upon the ships the label "Made in Germany" or "Made in England."

Mr. President, as I said when I reported this bill from the committee, it has been a matter of deep regret and some concern to me to see this bill, which ought to be devoted entirely to matters in connection with the Panama Canal, sought to be made the float upon which to load the variegated mass of legislation that has been superimposed upon it. Section 11 of this bill, which he have been discussing for the most part to-day, provides that section 5 of the act to regulate commerce shall be amended by adding the paragraph which at an earlier part of the day I put into the RECORD, which states in brief that after the 1st day of July, 1914—less than two years distant now—it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to control or have any interest whatsoever, either by stock ownership or otherwise, directly or indirectly, or by stockholders or directors in common, or in any other manner, with any common carrier by water with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic.

As has been said by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], his State and other States have for many years—in fact, almost since ancient times—allowed the railroad companies which they incorporated to engage in the steamboat business. It has been a lawful business. Under that system the entire transportation system of this country has developed. Lines of traffic and communication have been thereunder established and continued. In many portions of the country there is no complaint against it, and it is asserted by the people who are qualified to know from those sections of the country that it is the best system and is rendering the best service that can be devised. In other parts of the country there may be some complaint against that system; but I think it is a very unfair thing to disturb that entire system.

In view of the testimony of the two distinguished members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, one of whom testified that he had furnished to the House committee the basis for section 11, and that they did not think that at the present time Congress has sufficient information to legislate in the manner proposed in this bill. It seems to me it is a very rash proceeding for us, in a jaunty and almost flippant manner, to attach this exceedingly far-reaching and little-understood legislation to this bill, which ought simply to provide for the opening of the canal and the government of the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. President, there appeared before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals a great many witnesses in relation to this section of the bill. The representatives of the shipyards of the country generally appeared and protested against it; many of the most prominent railroad officials of the country appeared and protested against it; many of the chambers of commerce and boards of trade, notably of New England, filed their most earnest protests against it. So many complications are in view in relation to the interpretations of this clause that it seems to me to be extremely hazardous, in the closing days of this session, with what limited information we have upon the subject, finally to legislate upon it.

The attorney for the Southern Railway system, also a member of a committee representing the great railroads of the country, appeared before our committee and disclosed the situation in his section of the country. Steamboat lines ply from Norfolk to New York, and steamers ply to many other places along the southern coast in which the southern system of railroads have interests. The vice president of the New York Central Railroad appeared and explained the situation in its bearing on that road in connection with its ownership of the Western Transit Steamer Co. on the Great Lakes. In those cases and in the New England States the commissioners themselves admit that the service is probably better than it would be if the railroads were compelled to divorce themselves from the ownership of steamboats.

What is the object of transportation, and what constitutes a good system of transportation? I had supposed that a good system of transportation was such a one as rendered the best service for the cheapest rate. Why, then, if that service is being rendered, should Congress, which is not exclusively a body of transportation experts, set its hand upon an established system in perfect working order designed and carrying out its design to convey the manufactured product of a section of the country like New England from the interior, from the various towns and the mills, which are working up the raw material brought from other sections of the country into the manufactured product, and then distributing it back through all sections of the country—why should we say that that system shall be at an arbitrary date ruthlessly torn asunder when we see nothing but devastation and disaster to come from it?

Mr. President, these are serious questions, and we are serious and responsible men. I yield second place to no man in my desire to apply any remedy to correct any abuse or to bring any common carrier or corporation to obey the law and perform its functions as chartered by the States. Mr. Mellen, president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, appeared before our committee and stated—and I had intended to read many extracts from the testimony if I had time to do so, but I have yielded to other Senators—and stated that that road, a consolidation of many small roads in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, has been a gradual growth. The steamboats were put on first—that was the original method of transportation—then the main shore line was built, and then the laterals constructed up from the coast into the interior where the goods were to be had. That system is a variegated system of small roads, each north and south road getting to a port on Long Island Sound and putting on a line of steamboats, not with the idea of throttling anybody, not with the idea of preventing any competition, but with the idea of bringing the produce of the interior of those States down to the coast line, and then by water, the cheapest and best method of transportation, continuing that service into the great metropolis of the city of New York.

Every one of those steamboat lines is put on, not as a competing line but as an extension of a north and south road into the city of New York. Then, gradually, as those small systems ceased to give the service that was demanded, they were all consolidated, with the consent of the legislatures of the different States, and now a system exists there second to none in this country, with the cheapest rates and the best service, a service that satisfies everybody there, except, of course, there is an occasional complaint and grievance that would exist in a system of that size under any possible circumstance.

People say it is a monopoly. Mr. Prouty says that every railroad is a monopoly, a natural one. The minute you give them the exclusive right of way and they are bound to their own tracks it is in the nature of a monopoly. That is the reason we regulate them by government. Why should we take a steamboat system, in which Mr. Mellen testifies he has invested $25,000,000 of the money of the people, his stockholders, money taken out of the savings banks, the savings of all their lives and put into that system, and say to him that on January, 1914, that shall be disrupted? Who will buy the boats? How can the products of New England be taken into New York? The railroad deprived of the cheap transportation of its water lines would be compelled to start upon what, to establish now, would be a tremendously expensive scheme of condemnation, through built-up towns and cities, to get sufficient track facilities into the city of New York to distribute its goods. As Mr. Mellen says, New York is not one city. It is an aggregation of cities. The different industries are in different sections of the city and the goods they demand must be delivered at the docks in those different sections.

If that disruption should be compelled, who would buy the boats? The railroads own the wharves and the terminal facilities. They own the hoisting and loading apparatus. They run their tracks from their trunk lines and other lines onto the docks. Who would bid for $25,000,000 worth of steamboats on Long Island Sound without piers, without terminal facilities, when the road has, in asking for bids, to advertise that they can not deliver any goods to them? What would they carry and where would they get it? It would create absolute destruction and devastation—I know it—in that section of the country, and I can see from the testimony that to do that with the Pennsylvania Railroad, with its great ferry and lighterage systems, which do or may compete with it, and the New York Central and the Southern Railroad would be worse than throwing a cobblestone into the delicate structure of a splendidly working Corliss engine. The Interstate Commerce Commission say they would take the chance. They would like to see the experiment tried. On what evidence? I do not profess to be a transportation expert, but I would no more make an assertion on the evidence before our committee or that they were able to give us than I would cut off my right hand.

Mr. President, there are difficulties in this bill in almost every section. Here on pages 21 to 23 there is another amendment, amending section 6 of the interstate-commerce act, conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction to order or establish physical connections between railroads and steamboats. Anybody who has a mind to buy a steamboat can demand a spur track to a wharf he has hired. The Interstate Commerce Commission can order it done. Wherever a railroad company has been able to get into a small port a good line of steamers to carry the cotton crop of the South to foreign ports, there are provisions here which compel it to grant through bills of lading to any other steamship companies that demand the privilege. If that provision was enforced, it would deprive every small port on the Atlantic Ocean in the South of any chance of ever getting to be a port of any consequence, and would absolutely concentrate in New Orleans the export of the cotton crop of the South, because no steamship company can be induced to come to a small port, no matter how favorably situated it may be, unless it is guaranteed a cargo. The only way to get that is on a through bill from Memphis to Europe over a regular line of steamers, not a tramp steamer that will turn up once in six months, but over a regular line, having regular dates for sailing.

There are provisions equally objectionable, at least, amending two sections of the interstate-commerce act that was fought over here for years before it was even partially perfected. There was no reference of it to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. There was no chance for the business men of this country to come in and give their views. There was no chance to refer it to a skilled board or a commission of investigators to ascertain the truth and the wisdom of this proposed legislation. This amendment was introduced on the floor of the House in its complete shape. Nobody had a chance to be heard before the House Committee on it. It was put on in a few minutes and sent over here. We have endeavored to revise it, but you see with what a multitude of things it deals. Now, I am willing at any time, if any Senator will introduce a bill comprehending this subject, to take it up in the Interstate Commerce Committee and discuss it and report and do the best possible thing.

Mr. President, it has been stated that the Canadian Pacific Railroad could not go through the Panama Canal with its ships, because it is under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Canadian Pacific Railroad is voluntarily and pro forma only under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Does anybody suppose the Interstate Commerce Commission here can prescribe the rules for the operation of the Canadian Pacific Railroad in Canada? Wherever it comes into our territory it has to file its schedule of rates, or it does so voluntarily. But, Mr. President, it is under its jurisdiction to that extent only.

It is said it does not compete with us. They send daily tremendous amounts of goods in bond right through our country and then market the goods back in the Northwest.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I beg the Senator to excuse me. The Senator occupied two hours and a half, after saying he would take 10 minutes, and I as chairman of the committee am limited to 10 minutes before the vote is taken.

Mr. Mellen said:

In the first place, as I have stated, I have not the slightest interest in the Panama Canal from my official position. I do not expect to use it, although I can conceive of conditions under which my company might want to run boats through the canal.

Would it be a great disaster to these people in the West who have been complaining about monopoly and the Southern Pacific domination to have the New York, New Haven & Hartford put on a line of steamships from New York and go through the canal and compete with the Southern Pacific Railroad and exchange the products of the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts? What would the damage be?

Mr. Mellen goes on to say that the Canadians are alive to the opportunity. He has talked to them about it and they are all ready and willing, hoping that we will pass this legislation so that they can go through the canal. Meanwhile there is proposed what I consider very foolish legislation, largely induced by a lot of old inherited rows that have occurred on the Pacific coast, when they were all cutting each other's throats and competing for business, just as the railroads used to do; but those inherited hatreds and bitternesses ought not to prevent the Senate from doing the wise thing.

We ought to open that canal to ships of all nations without requiring a certificate of the ownership of any ship that applies there to go through. Does anybody suppose that a British skipper or a Canadian skipper who comes to the mouth of the canal at night and wants to be put through, perhaps in a storm, can inform some watchman as to all the people who own any interest in that vessel and can satisfy him that no railroad with which he does or might compete has an interest in it? Is it to stop and try a lawsuit there before it can go through the canal? It is perfectly preposterous. That canal ought to be as free as the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, except to pay the value to the Government of the money it has to expend to put the vessels through. That was the intent of the treaty.

I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read a letter from Mr. Dearborn, the president of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., and then I will make some comments upon it.

The Secretary read as follows:

AMERICAN-HAWAIIAN STEAMSHIP CO.,
New York, June 28, 1912.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Chairman Committee on Interoceanic Canals,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to section 11 of the Panama Canal bill as it was reported out of your committee, particularly this part of its language, viz:

"SEC. 11. That no ship * * * in which any railroad company has any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly or indirectly * * *), shall be permitted to enter or pass through the Panama Canal if engaged in the coastwise trade between ports of the United States"— for the reason that an interpretation might be made which, applied to the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., would prohibit the use of the canal by its steamers, on account of the fact that the Tehuantepec National Railway Co. has a substantial minority interest in this company of stock standing in its name.

The Tehuantepec Railway is the link of 190 miles connecting the Atlantic and Pacific fleets of the steamers of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co.—a substitute for a waterway, and provides the through service of the steamship company between Atlantic and Pacific coast ports.

When the contract was entered into between the railway and the steamship company it became necessary to provide for more ships to enlarge the capacity of the service, and to secure funds the steamship company sold stock of its company to the railway company.

In anticipation of the opening of the Panama Canal at an early date, the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., which had a year ago a fleet of 17 steamers, has since purchased 1 and is now building 8 additional steamers of a capacity of 10,000 tons each, in all 26 steamers. It will be qualified to transport annually through the canal from a million and a half to two million tons of freight.

This company does not for a moment imagine that there is any intent upon the part of your committee to prohibit it the use of the canal, but can not overlook the possibility of a technical interpretation of this paragraph of the bill, and is therefore submitting to you the situation in the belief that it will result in correcting the language of the bill, so that no doubt will remain of our eligibility for entering the canal trade.

We make the suggestion that the language of the Senate bill be changed, so that any railroad referred to in connection with ownership in a steamship company be designated as one under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Yours, respectfully,
G. S. DEARBORN,
President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, Mr. President, that is one of the things that shows what sort of legislation we are passing, and we do not see the effect it will have. That is a criticism upon the Senate committee's provision. He admits that the Tehuantepec Railroad Co., a corporation in Mexico, owns a large interest in the stock of his company, which owns 26 of the handsomest steamboats in the American trade, and the House provision only inhibits steamboats which are owned by railroads which are under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission from going through the canal.

Are we to prevent the passage through the canal of our own steamboats, especially the Pacific Mail, a company that has existed for 50 years, no matter what the crimes of its owners years ago may have been, no matter how hard it struggled to control the traffic over the Isthmus of Panama on a little single-track railroad? Are we to throttle this great canal, which should be open to the competition of the world? It is preposterous. Are we to allow the Tehuantepec Railroad Co., which owns an interest in a fleet of 26 magnificent steamers, to use the canal and keep our own out? For whom are we legislating in this American Congress, I should like to know?

Mr. President, we provided that these vessels, carrying 10,000 tons of cargo each, that the Pacific Mail wants to build and run from New York, as shown by that map, through the canal, stopping at San Francisco to discharge passengers and freight, then take on what they can get and go to the Orient, should be allowed to pass through the canal and stop at our own ports. Think of it—having to provide by legislation for your own vessels going from an American port en route to Hongkong to bring back tonnage, provided they did not take over 50 per cent of domestic cargo.

Now, there come from San Francisco 800 telegrams which I hold here, subject to anyone's inspection, from the most prominent business men, representing a majority of the whole Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, or its voting membership, protesting against that limitation, and I ask at this point the privilege of putting into the RECORD the letter from the chairman of the committee, inclosing the correspondence, and stating that there was no compulsion used in securing any of these dispatches.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permission is granted, in the absence of objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, July 31, 1912.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Chairman Committee on Interoceanic Canals,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I confirm night lettergram of this date, as per copy herewith. Now have the honor to inclose copy of correspondence referred to. The originals will undoubtedly be filed with the committee of which you are chairman, by Senator PERKINS, and we respectfully ask that they be brought to the attention of your committee.

Thanking you, in anticipation, I am,
Yours, respectfully,
JOHN BARNESON, Chairman.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 31, 1912.

Hon FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Chairman Committee on Interoceanic Canals,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As chairman of the committee representing 54 per cent of the voting membership of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, I am to-day wiring Senator PERKINS as follows:

"Referring to your telegram of July 21, sent to Secretary Burks, of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, and reply of Mr. Robbins, president, our committee is mailing to-day original correspondence with Mr. Robbins and other documents, which will show that the position taken by him is not correct and that his statements are not supported by the facts. The protest against the attitude of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, in regard to canal legislation, has been signed up to date by 54 per cent of the voting membership of the chamber, and further protests are being received. It is an insult to the membership to even suggest that any coercion or other improper methods have been used in this connection, and as chairman of the committee having this matter in charge I emphatically deny this statement. Am mailing you with the papers a list of the protestants. Will you please file this telegram and these documents with the Senate committee when received."

Am mailing you copies of this correspondence to-night.

JOHN BARNESON.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 31, 1912.

Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I confirm night lettergram of this date, as per copy herewith. Now have the honor to inclose the papers referred to, from which you will note the attitude of the committee of the chamber of commerce, which now represents 54 per cent of the voting membership of that body; and in view of the fact that Mr. Robbins has requested that you file with the Senate committee, and thus make part of a public record, his telegram in which he so unjustifiably charges us of signing under coercion from the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. respectfully ask that you file the inclosed papers and the telegram also with the Senate committee.

The inclosed copy of correspondence with Mr. Robbins will show that we tried to get a meeting without avail, and as to the correctness of Mr. Robbins's statements, I respectfully refer you to the inclosed list of the directors of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. On receipt of Mr. Robbins's communication advising me that a large number were out of town, I wrote him asking for the names of those who were out of town, and up to this writing have had no reply. However, I took other steps to ascertain, and on the inclosed list a star has been placed opposite the names of those members who were in town, from which you will note that quite a majority, or, at least, a quorum, of directors were in town and could be called together.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN BARNESON, Chairman.

Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Referring to your telegram of July 21, sent to Secretary Burks, of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, and reply of Mr. Robbins, president, our committee is mailing to-day original correspondence with Mr. Robbins and other documents, which will show that the position taken by him is not correct and that his statements are not supported by the facts. The protest against the attitude of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco in regard to canal legislation has been signed up to date by 54 per cent of the voting membership of the chamber and further protests are being received. It is an insult to the membership to even suggest that any coercion or other improper methods have been used in this connection, and as chairman of the committee having this matter in charge I emphatically deny this statement. Am mailing you with the papers a list of the protestants. Will you please file this telegram and these documents with the Senate committee when received?

JOHN BARNESON, Chairman.

JULY 27, 1912.

Mr. M. H. ROBBINS, Jr.,
President San Francisco Chamber of Commerce,
San Francisco.

DEAR SIR: I have just been informed that under date of Washington, D. C., July 21, 1912, the following telegram was addressed by Senator GEORGE C. PERKINS to Mr. C. W. Burks, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco:

"I am in receipt of some 800 telegrams from members of chamber of commerce and prominent citizens protesting against limitation coastwise trade Panama Canal bill, which I have presented to Senate and had referred to Committee on Interoceanic Canals for consideration. Kindly inform your members and signers as far as you can conveniently do so."

And that to this telegram the following reply was made by you as president of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco:

"Answering your twenty-first. Telegrams referred to are personal from certain members of chamber presumably sent following their signatures to petition circulated by transportation company interested authorizing telegrams to be sent in members' names. They do not represent official action of this chamber. As names and signatures are unknown to us, can not acknowledge as requested. Attitude of chamber of commerce is expressed in its resolution of March 11, copy of which you have. This resolution was unanimously adopted by the board of directors of chamber and represents opinion of a large majority of its members. In obtaining signatures to the petition all influence was exercised on those from whom the Pacific Mail purchases supplies and with whom it has business relations. Please file this communication with the Senate committee and reaffirm chamber's attitude as expressed in the resolution referred to."

In your telegram you make the following statements and charges, either directly or by insinuation:

"First. That improper methods were used in obtaining the signatures which were obtained by the committee of which I am chairman.

"Second. That the names and signatures are unknown to you.

"Third. That they do not represent the official action of the chamber."

First. As chairman of the committee representing a majority of the voting members of the chamber of commerce, and having been an active participant in an endeavor to obtain from these members of the chamber of commerce most directly interested in avenues of transportation and the future upbuilding and welfare of the port of San Francisco an honest expression of their views and that only, I must protest most vigorously against the attack you have made on the honesty and good faith of a majority of the most important members of the body over which you preside. Further, I desire to state, as my opinion, that had the board of directors, before committing the chamber, made an honest effort to obtain the views of the majority membership of the chamber on this question, and then acted in accordance with the decision of the majority, the attitude of the chamber would have been entirely different. As you know, this question was not submitted to the membership prior to the time that the directors committed the chamber on this question, but that, on the contrary, the resolutions passed were simply the opinion and the decision of the board of directors.

Second. You state to Senator PERKINS that the names are unknown to you, thereby endeavoring to convey the impression that the signers are not well-known members of the community and of the chamber. In doing so you totally ignore the fact that the committee waited on you and the board of directors, with an earnest desire to convey their views; have kept in touch, by correspondence, with the chamber since that time; and you know perfectly well that it was possible for yourself or the secretary of the chamber to obtain at any moment from the committee, through myself as chairman, a full list of the names of those members who, disagreeing with the views expressed by the board of directors, desired to place themselves on record before Congress, the arbitrary position taken by the board of directors making this the only course they had left to prevent yourself and the board falsely placing them on record in a body on this most important question.

Third. I take issue with you in your statement that the attitude of your board of directors represents the official action of the chamber. The position your board of directors has taken is at variance with the views of a majority of the voting membership of the chamber. It was taken without reference to this membership and without asking their views or in any way giving them an opportunity to submit their views, and is clearly contrary to same, and therefore does not and can not represent the official action of the membership of the chamber, but, on the contrary, represents only the "official attitude" of the board of directors of the chamber and yourself as president.

The members have been given by the board of directors or yourself no opportunity to pass on this very important question. The action taken has been arbitrarily taken by the board of directors; and has left the membership, in order to be justly represented, no other course but that which they have followed under the committee appointed by them, namely, of protesting individually as members of the chamber of commerce against the false position in which they have been placed by the arbitrary action of their board of directors. Yourself and the board of directors are wholly responsible for this position. The committee was, as it originally expressed itself to you and to the board of directors and on numerous occasions since the original meeting, desirous that the false position in which the membership of the chamber of commerce had been placed by the action of the board of directors should be rectified by the board of directors officially and not force the membership to the necessity of protesting individually.

The records of the protest in my possession and the names of the protestants are sufficient warrant for my saying that you, as president, and your board of directors are not correctly representing the membership in the position you are taking, and that the position assumed by you is wholly unjustifiable and subject to the gravest criticism.

In closing I must again refer to the uncalled-for and unwarranted attack made in your telegram to Senator PERKINS, and which telegram you have asked to be filed and made a public record, on the honesty and business integrity of many of the oldest and best-known mercantile firms of this city, and on their behalf and my own I hereby formally demand that you immediately retract this statement in a telegram to Senator PERKINS, and that such telegram be given equal publicity as has been given to your telegram quoted on the first page of this letter.

Asking that I may have the favor of an early response, I am,

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN BARNESON,
Chairman of Committee.

SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
July 29, 1912.

Capt. JOHN BARNESON,
Chairman, 149 California Street, San Francisco.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of July 27, addressed to me as president, is just received.

I have placed the same in the hands of the executive secretary, with instructions to bring it before the board of directors at the next meeting.

Yours, very truly, M. H. ROBBINS, Jr., President.

JULY 30, 1912.

Mr. M. H. ROBBINS, Jr.,
President San Francisco Chamber of Commerce,
San Francisco, Cal.

DEAR SIR: I have just received your favor of July 29, replying to mine of the 27th. A meeting of our committee is called for 2 p. m. to-morrow, and it appeals to me that the matter is of sufficient importance to entitle us to some reply from your board, which I can submit at the committee meeting, and request that a special meeting of the board of directors be called, so that we may have a reply by that time, failing which, we will feel at liberty to take such other action as we may deem necessary.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN BARNESON,
Chairman of Committee.

SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
San Francisco, July 30, 1912.

Mr. JOHN BARNESON,
Chairman of Committee, San Francisco, Cal.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of even date reached me this afternoon, and as many members of the board of directors are out of the city it is a practical impossibility to call a special meeting within the time you name. It gives me deep regret that I am thus placed in position whereby I can not comply with your request.

Yours, very truly,

M. H. ROBBINS, Jr., President.

JULY 30, 1912.

DEAR SIR: Acknowledging receipt of your favor of even date. So that I may be in a position to inform our committee, would you kindly advise me the names of the members of your board of directors who are at present out of the city?

Thanking you in anticipation for this information, I am,

Yours, very truly,

JOHN BARNESON,
Chairman of Committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will ask the senior Senator from California if he has glanced over these telegrams?

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that for 40 years and more I have been a member of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, and twice its president. I am personally acquainted with many of the firms and individuals who signed the dispatches, and I say without reservation that they are gentlemen of the highest character and are men of integrity and reliability. I do not believe any one of them would sign a telegram or a petition or be improperly influenced by any selfish interest. There is no question as to the standing and reliability of the gentlemen signing the telegrams.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And yet it is claimed that the voting membership of the chamber of commerce has been intimidated by Mr. Schwerin to state what is false.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I can not yield at this time. I have only a half a minute, which I want to use myself.

I ask to insert in the RECORD the report of the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, as showing that the real danger of throttling competition through the canal is not from the steamboats owned by railroads, but is from the foreign steamships controlled by rings, combines, pools, and conferences.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 632, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

AMERICAN TRADE AND FOREIGN SHIPPING MONOPOLIES.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 23470:

The Sherman antitrust law invests the several courts of the United States with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of the act, and the Supreme Court has given very broad construction to this enactment. In the Northern Securities case (193 U. S., 197) Justice Harlan, in writing the opinion of the court, said:

"If there was a combination or conspiracy in violation of the act of Congress between the stockholders of the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific Railway Cos., whereby the Northern Securities Co. was formed as a holding corporation, and whereby interstate commerce over the lines of the constituent companies was restrained, it must follow that the court, in execution of that act and to defeat the efforts to evade it, could prohibit the parties to the combination from doing the specific things which, being done, would affect the result denounced by the act. To say that the court could not go so far is to say that it is powerless to enforce the act or to suppress the illegal combination, and powerless to protect the rights of the public as against that combination." (Pp. 356–357.)

In the case of United States v. American Tobacco Co. the court held that in order to enable it to award relief coterminous with the ultimate redress of the wrongs which it found to exist it must approach the subject of relief from an original point of view, and stated that—

"We might at once resort to one or the other of the two general remedies—(a) the allowance of a permanent injunction restraining the combination as a universality and all the individuals and corporations which form a part of or cooperate in it in any manner or form from continuing to engage in interstate commerce until the illegal situation be cured, a measure of relief which would accord in substantial effect with that awarded below to the extent that the court found illegal combinations to exist; or (b) to direct the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the assets and property in this country of the combination in all its ramifications for the purpose of preventing a continued violation of the law, and thus working out by a sale of the property of the combination or otherwise, a condition of things which would not be repugnant to the prohibitions of the act." (221 U. S., pp. 186–187.)

Nevertheless, for the reasons stated in the opinion, the court remanded the case to the circuit court for the purpose of working out a plan or method of dissolving the combination before the court in that case and of recreating out of the elements composing it a new condition honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law.

In the equity suits brought by the Attorney General against the North Atlantic shipping pool and the Asiatic shipping pools, respectively, the prayer for relief, among other things, asked the court to adjudge the combination to be illegal and to enjoin the ships employed in the combination from making clearance at the ports of the United States until such combination shall be dissolved. There seems to be no doubt of the power of the Federal courts under the act, as construed by the Supreme Court, to award such relief, if it shall deem it necessary, in order to accomplish the ends of justice, but such relief would be secured under the existing law only by way of injunction against the owners of the ship from making entry or applying for clearance, whereas there is no distinct prohibition against the officials of the United States acting upon such applications. In order to make it perfectly clear that in case of an adjudication that an unlawful combination of shipowners exists in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, a dissolution of that combination may be effectually secured by prohibiting all entry and clearance privileges until the combination is dissolved. This bill makes it unlawful for such vessel or vessels to so enter or clear until the court shall find that the unlawful combination has been dissolved and imposes a penalty upon the vessel which makes entry or clearance in violation of the provisions of such decree. It also authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to cancel any contract for carrying the ocean mails upon satisfactory evidence to him that any vessel performing such service under such contract at the time of performing service is owned, operated, or controlled by any party to such unlawful combination.

The act, therefore, makes more effectual the remedies for violation of the law and will tend to compel foreign shipowners to respect a law which they are now systematically violating.

It is a matter of common knowledge that more than 90 per cent of the over-sea trade of this country is carried by foreign ships that belong to rings, pools, conferences, and combines. Between these ships there is absolutely no competition. Each conference or combine is a complete monopoly. Freight and passenger rates are fixed by agreement. The lines in these combines distribute the business, pool their earnings, and divide their profits. They agree as to the number of vessels that each company shall run. They agree as to the amount of traffic that each line shall carry. They combine to drive out any independent lines. To do this they designate what they call "fighting" ships, and these ships are run over the same course on practically the same schedule as the independent vessels, with instructions to cut rates to any extent necessary to drive the independent line out of business. When this is accomplished the loss sustained is divided among the lines in the combine.

These foreign steamship monopolies also largely dictate the ports of this country through which both freight and passenger traffic shall pass. They also largely control railroad rates in this country, both freight and passenger. Our railroad agents are instructed that they will receive no commission on the sale of passenger tickets from interior points in Europe unless that ticket reads over one of the conference lines of steamships.

These foreign monopolies also practice the rebate system in all its iniquitous and devious ways. The rate that every ton of freight and every passenger must pay to cross the Atlantic Ocean is fixed by written agreement made in advance in Europe. In the fixing of these rates American interests are not considered. Only the interests of the foreign steamship lines are represented.

The foreign steamship combinations carrying our over-sea trade are the most complete monopolies in the world. Being monopolies, their rates are unjust and oppressive. The rates between this country and Europe and between this country and South America are exorbitant and far higher than a fair compensation for the services performed. These combines annually unjustly levy millions upon American commerce. To a great extent they have destroyed our foreign trade, not only by exorbitant freight rates, but by discriminating against us in all the ports of the world in favor of the products of their own country. These lines admit all the charges that have been made against them—that they are in combination to suppress competition; to fix rates; to increase their earnings; to advance the commercial interests of the nation whose flag they fly. They admit that they openly violate our law. Their answer to these charges is that what they do is legal in their own country; that they do not believe in the laws of our country or have any respect for them, and they ask this question: "We are foreign ships belonging to foreign corporations and owe allegiance to a foreign government, and if we do not choose to obey your laws, what are you going to do about it?"

This bill is answer to this impudent and defiant question. This country will not have one law for our own people and another for the foreigner that does business in this country. We are to-day in a most humiliating condition. Our ships have practically disappeared from the sea. Our commerce is at the mercy of foreigners. They dictate the terms upon which it is carried and openly violate our laws. It is not conceivable that this Government stands helpless before this giant foreign monopoly.

It is the unanimous report of the committee that the bill do pass.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut declines to yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to present a request for a unanimous-consent agreement, and I desire to present it now.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that under the unanimous-consent agreement no business can intervene at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is bound to sustain the point of order.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, in view of the vote that I expect to cast on one or two of these amendments, I think I should explain my position somewhat.

I have declared for the principle that no railroad company should be allowed to own any stock in or have any control over a steamship line. I have been convinced, however, from what has been said here, particularly by the attitude of Senators who represent one section of the country, that it is perhaps unwise to undertake to enforce that rule to its full extent in legislating upon the matter of the Panama Canal. For that reason I shall favor the amendment that is offered here to confine this legislation in this respect to steamers passing through the canal, in view of the fact of the disturbance it may bring about in New England and in conditions there, when all the representatives of that section of the country say they do not desire that any disturbance should result from any legislation at this time, and with the fact in view that there has not been such consideration of conditions there as I think ought to be had before legislating upon this subject to that extent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will have the Secretary read the consent order to be executed at this time.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Friday, August 9, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 21969, the Panama Canal bill, so called, and that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on said day the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending to the bill, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill itself—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], on page 19, line 22, after the words "carrier by water," to insert "operated through the Panama Canal."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment just read.

Mr. REED. I desire to have the amendment again read. There was some confusion in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for a roll call on agreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin demands the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WATSON (when Mr. CHILTON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. CHILTON] is absent on account of personal illness. He is, however, paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I have transferred that pair to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], and I vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (when Mr. GARDNER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GARDNER] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], but I have an agreement with him that on all questions connected with section 11 that affect the coastwise trade I may be released from that pair. So I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I vote "nay." I wish to say by way of explanation that I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], but as I interpret his instructions I am at liberty to vote upon this question. As I understand his instructions, he would vote as I do if he were present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I may be permitted, the memorandum the Senator has is one I prepared and handed to him. I wish to say, to correct any misunderstanding about the views of my colleague, that the senior Senator from Michigan would vote "yea" on this proposition. I did not understand how the Senator from Missouri would vote.

Mr. REED. I voted "nay." I so interpreted the language of the document the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] handed me and so interpreted my talk with the Senator from Michigan. However, if there is any doubt whatever in regard to it, I, of course, will take the construction of the colleague of the Senator with whom I am paired. I will withdraw my vote and transfer my pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when Mr. RICHARDSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] is absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If my colleague were present and free to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent from the city. I can state with a good deal of confidence that he instructed me to say that he would vote "yea" on this proposition if here. Although he did not expect it to come up in just this form, he is in favor of relieving boats other than those going through the Panama Canal from restrictions.

Mr. OVERMAN (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent, and that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. STEPHENSON's name was called). The junior senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is detained from the city. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. If the junior Senator from Wisconsin were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]. In his absence I refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to announce a general pair between the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] and the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. LODGE. I desire too announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]; and

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

Mr. SHIVELY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 18, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was agreed to.

Mr. REED, Mr. BOURNE, and Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the question is now upon the adoption of the amendment proposed by the committee, striking out the section which has just been amended and inserting the substitute proposed by the committee. If Senators have amendments to the section, they are now in order; otherwise they are not.

Mr. REED. I desire to offer an amendment to the section we have just been amending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is right. The Senator is in order for that purpose. The Chair has just so stated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to suggest that the Senator from Oregon send to the desk, also to be read, an amendment which he intends to offer to the section, so that we may have the benefit of it.

Mr. GALLINGER and others. One at a time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 17, after the word "final," insert the following:

No ship engaged in or permitted by the terms of this act to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or the provisions of sections 73 to 77, both inclusive, of an act approved August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or the provisions of any other act of Congress amending or supplementing the said act of July 2, 1890, or said sections of the act of August 27, 1894. The question of fact may be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon its own motion or upon complaint filed by any shipper, jurisdiction being hereby conferred to hear and determine such question, or by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any case pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ship are parties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. REED. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Missouri ought to give us a short explanation of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER and others. No debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order. Nothing is in order except to vote.

Mr. REED. I wish to modify the proposition by inserting after the description of those acts the words "commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act and amendments thereto."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified in accordance with the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. REED. I should like to have it read in that form.

Mr. CRAWFORD. An inquiry. Has this amendment been printed?

Mr. REED. The amendment was printed with the exception of the last lines. It was, however, intended to be inserted as printed after the Senate committee amendment. But the body of the amendment has been printed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment as it has been modified by the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary read the amendment as modified, as follows:

No ship engaged in or permitted by the terms of this act to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or the provisions of sections 73 to 77, both inclusive, of an act approved August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or the provisions of any other act of Congress amending or supplementing the said act of July 2, 1890, or said sections of the act of August 27, 1894, commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act and amendments thereto. The question of fact may be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon its own motion or upon complaint filed by any shipper, jurisdiction being hereby conferred to hear and determine such question, or by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, in any case pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ship are parties.

Mr. REED. I want the privilege of amending the amendment further. [A pause.] Now let the last two lines be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is modified so that the last clause will read:

The question of fact may be determined by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any cause pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ship are parties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment again stated as it now reads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There having been no response to the roll call, the Secretary will again, without objection, read the amendment as modified.

The Secretary again read the amendment as modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as modified, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). Under the transfer of my pair heretofore announced I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). The exemption from the obligations of my pair did not apply to general questions of this kind, so I refrain from voting.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. Not knowing how he would vote upon this question, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). Mr. President, for want of sufficient information I decline to vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I will ask that the announcement I previously made in reference to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and his pair stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and on account of his absence I withhold my vote. I will let this announcement stand for subsequent votes upon this bill during the day.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]. On account of his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I again announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent from the city. I do not know how he would vote on this question if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 28, as follows:

So Mr. REED's amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, which is acceptable to the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it an amendment to the pending section?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is an amendment to section 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment is not now in order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment which has just been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is too late to offer an amendment to that amendment. The amendment can be offered as an independent amendment to the section as amended.

Mr. FALL. I offer it as an amendment to the section as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment just agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

No ships carrying goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured by any person, company, or corporation which is doing business in violation of any of the provisions of either of the acts of Congress referred to shall be permitted to enter or pass through the canal until such ship and cargo shall have been first examined by the proper officials and a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction shall have been rendered declaring that the owners of the ship have not violated any of the provisions of either of the acts referred to, and until after a decision should have been rendered that no portion of such cargo has been manufactured by any person, corporation, or company violating any of the provisions of said acts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the section as amended.

Mr. FALL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair, but believe that I can make a fair guess as to how my pair would vote if he were present, and I will take the chance of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Notwithstanding my pair, I think I will take the liberty of voting upon this question. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ASHURST (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to inquire how the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has voted?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I voted "nay."

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to change my vote to "nay."

Mr. SHIVELY. I again announce that my colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably and necessarily absent from the Chamber. Were he present he would vote "nay." I desire also to have this announcement as to his absence stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 0, nays 59, as follows:

YEAS—0.

NAYS—59.

Ashurst	Crawford	Lodge	Pomerene
Bacon	Culberson	McCumber	Sanders
Bankhead	Cullom	McLean	Shively

So Mr. FALL'S amendment to the section as amended was rejected.

Mr. BOURNE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to follow the amendment adopted on motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the same section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to, at the end of line 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That whenever the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find after hearing, either upon complaint or upon its own motion, that any railroad company engaged in interstate commerce other than through the Panama Canal owns or has an interest, direct or indirect, in the ownership of a line of water transportation which if otherwise owned might compete with any line of railroad owned or operated by said company and that the effect of such ownership is injurious to the public, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall require such railroad company to divest itself of its ownership or interest in such water line or shall require such water line to be operated under such restrictions and regulations as, in the judgment of the commission, shall be necessary to protect the public interest.

After the making of a finding and order by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the authority hereby conferred it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to hold or operate such line of water transportation, except as permitted by such order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, which has just been read.

Mr. BOURNE. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I did not catch where the amendment was to be inserted—whether it was an addition to the section or an insertion.

Mr. BOURNE. It is to be inserted immediately following the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] just adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to inquire if the amendment has been printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it has not been printed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then I ask that it be again stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I understood that amendment correctly, it in effect amends the Sherman Act. I ask to have it again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. BOURNE.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A parliamentary inquiry. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington can not ask the Senator from Oregon. He must ask the Chair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will ask the Chair. Does not this amendment in effect repeal the act——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must confine himself to the rule.

Mr. LODGE and others. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must propound a parliamentary inquiry only.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was going to ask as to the effect of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OLIVER. We are considering a bill to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, and an amendment is offered expressly excluding vessels passing through the canal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must confine himself strictly to the order of the Senate.

Mr. OLIVER. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the subject we are considering and is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will overrule the point of order in order that the Senate may vote upon the amendment. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, and upon that the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). On account of my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] I withhold my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). On account of my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair and withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 36, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ashurst	Cummins	McLean	Root
Bacon	Fall	Myers	Shively
Borah	Fletcher	Nelson	Simmons
Bourne	Gronna	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Bristow	Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Jones	Overman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Perkins	Tillman
Clapp	La Follette	Poindexter	Townsend

NAYS—25.

Bankhead	Crane	Martin, Va.	Thornton
Bradley	Cullom	Massey	Warren
Brandegee	Dillingham	Oliver	Wetmore
Burnham	du Pont	Page	Williams
Burton	Gallinger	Penrose
Catron	Heyburn	Sanders

NOT VOTING—33.

Bailey	Foster	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Briggs	Gamble	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.

Chilton	Gore	Paynter	Stone

Curtis	Kern	Reed
Davis	Lea	Richardson
Dixon	Lippitt	Smith, Md.

So Mr. BOURNE'S amendment was adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer an amendment to the House provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 23, after the word "traffic," insert "or any vessel carrying freight or passengers upon said water route," so that it will read:

In any common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic or any vessel carrying freight or passengers upon said water route, and in case of the violation of this provision, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of section 4, which, I understand, has the approval of the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not now in order. The section under consideration is section 11, and the motion is to strike out the part of it which has been read and to insert an amendment proposed by the committee, and nothing is now in order except an amendment either to the section as contained in the House bill or the paragraph which is sought to be inserted in lieu thereof.

The question now is upon the motion to strike out the provision in the House bill, beginning on page 19, line 10, and extending to the remainder of that page, and on the succeeding page 20, from line 1 to 17, inclusive, as it has been amended by the vote of the Senate, and to insert in lieu thereof the amendment found on page 20, beginning in line 18 and extending to line 16, inclusive, on page 21.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand that that was the motion. I understood that the motion was to strike out, but I did not know there was a motion to insert matter in lieu of the matter to be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to strike out and insert under the rules of the Senate is not divisible, although it is by general parliamentary law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is not the question on agreeing to the committee amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is necessarily one to strike out and insert, under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; to strike out the House provision and insert the Senate committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question before the Senate—to strike out the House provision as it has been amended and to insert in lieu thereof the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. A parliamentary inquiry. Is that motion divisible?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not, under the rule of the Senate. It is divisible according to general parliamentary law, but the rule of the Senate is expressly to the contrary.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 17, strike out the word "said" and insert the word "the" before the word "act."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think that inasmuch as the amendment proposed by the Senate committee has been disagreed to, that the word "said" should be reinstated as in the House print, so that it will read "section 6 of said act," because on the previous page, on page 19, the bill provided——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can not discuss it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All that is necessary is for the Senate to vote down the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope it will be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. The question is on the adoption of the amendment found in line 17, on page 20, to strike out the word "said" and insert the word "the."

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 17, after the word "commerce" and the comma at the end of the line, insert "approved February 4, 1887."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It ought to be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, line 15, after the word "public" and after the comma at the end of the line, insert "where the public, in the judgment of the commission, will be benefited by such connection."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed there are on the desk no other amendments by the committee, or amendments offered by any Senator on the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will it now be in order for me to offer the amendment I suggested?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now in order for the Senator from Nevada to offer his amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer an amendment to section 4, which has the approval of the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 4 it is proposed to insert the following words:

> The President, before the completion of the canal, shall cause the Commission of Arts to make report of their recommendation regarding the artistic character of the structures of the canal, such report to be transmitted to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order now to move to strike out a section or should that motion be made in the Senate when the bill gets into the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It depends upon whether it has been previously acted upon as in Committee of the Whole. If it has been acted upon in Committee of the Whole it is not now in order. The Chair does not know to what section the Senator from Connecticut refers.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understood the Chair to say that there were no further amendments and that all the sections had been acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not say all the sections had been acted upon. If it did, it was an inadvertence. The Chair stated that there were on the desk no other amendments proposed by the committee or any Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I inquire whether it is in order to submit an amendment to strike out section 11, which has been acted upon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be in order in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state, to be a little more exact, that the part of section 11 which has been acted upon by the Senate can not now again be acted upon as in Committee of the Whole. There are other parts of section 11 upon which there has been no specific action by the Senate. A motion to strike out those parts would be in order. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. According to the practice, is it necessary while the bill is still in Committee of the Whole to reserve an objection to an amendment which I intend to object to in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The announcement can be made at any time. It is usually done at the present time, when the bill is about to pass from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought that was about to take place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce the fact that if there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate, and the Chair will now receive the notice.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to reserve an objection to the Senate committee amendments to section 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and still open to amendment. If there are no further amendments the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is reported to the Senate with amendments. The Senator from Georgia has given notice of the reservation of the amendment adopted to section 5. With that exception, unless there be objection——

Mr. ROOT. I wish an opportunity to vote upon the provision of the bill as it was reported to the Senate relating to the relief of vessels engaged in the foreign trade from——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate it by number or section?

Mr. ROOT. I do not know whether it is covered by the reservation made by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is the reservation I made.

Mr. ROOT. I undestand the reservation covers also the coastwise trade.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; it does not.

Mr. ROOT. I wish an opportunity to vote upon each of those provisions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator please indicate by number the section he desires to have the reservation made in?

Mr. ROOT. It is the provision relating to tolls of vessels engaged exclusively in the coastwise trade of the United States in section 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is sufficient if all the amendments to section 5 are reserved.

Mr. ROOT. I understood the reservation to cover it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to a point of order. The Senator will please state it.

Mr. LODGE. Only the legislation exempting coastwise shipping from tolls is a part of the bill as passed by the House and not a reserved amendment. The only thing that can be reserved is the one word "exclusively."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. But it is open to any Senator to move to strike out those lines.

Mr. ROOT. I move now, Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to reserve the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the original text of the bill will be open to amendment in the Senate the same as if no action had been taken in Committee of the Whole. The only object in reserving amendments is that the Senate may concur en bloc in amendments not desired to be separately acted upon. The Senator from New Hampshire gives notice of a reservation of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], which was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to have the amendment reserved in line 13, page 6, where the word "exclusively" was inserted. I desire a separate vote on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas gives notice of a reservation of the amendment where the word "exclusively" was inserted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to lessen the number of reservations. The only amendment to which I desire my reservation to apply is the one that commences with the words "No tolls," at the foot of page 6, and ends with the word "conclusive," on page 7, line 13.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, the notice given by the Senator from Georgia. The Secretary will state it.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is reserved beginning with the words "No tolls," on page 6, line 25, and going down to and including the word "conclusive," on page 7, line 13.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment reserved by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] reserves the amendment in line 13, page 6, where, after the word "engaged," the word "exclusively" was inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will please state the amendment he desires to have reserved.

Mr. ROOT. I desire to move to strike out the words upon lines 13 and 14, on page 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not an amendment.

Mr. ROOT. It is not. Therefore I move to strike out those words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be in order to offer that as an amendment in the Senate.

Mr. ROOT. I thought the bill was in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in the Senate, and the Chair is trying to find out what amendments are to be reserved. Then the Chair will ask for amendments. The Senator from New York does not reserve any amendment which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New York desires to make a motion to amend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time has not arrived when he can so do.

Mr. LODGE. That I know, and there was nothing further for him to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was simply inquiring of the Senator whether he reserved action on any amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROOT. So long as the reservation of the Senator from Georgia covers the provision beginning on the last line of page 6; that is, "no tolls," and extending down to the middle of page 7, I make no further reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What the Senator has in mind it is not necessary to be reserved, as it is not an amendment but is a part of the original text. The Chair does not misunderstand the Senator. The Secretary will state the amendment reserved by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The SECRETARY. The Senator from New Hampshire reserves for a separate vote the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to come in on page 20, line 17, after the word "final."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole not reserved.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The question is on the reserved amendments, I suggest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be first upon the several amendments that were reported by the Committee of the Whole and which have been reserved. The first occurring in point of position in the bill is the one reserved by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], which the Secretary will state.

Mr. BRISTOW. I made that reservation, but prefer first to have the amendment reserved by the Senator from Georgia acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator is not ready to have action on it, the Chair will pass it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not care to have it brought up until the other amendment is voted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole, beginning on the last line of page 6, with the words "No tolls," and extending to page 7, lines 1 to 13, inclusive, ending with the word "conclusive."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On concurring in that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether this amendment stands as it is printed in the bill in italics or was it amended in Committee of the Whole? Is it to be voted upon now in the same form as printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there was a verbal amendment which the Secretary will report to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 3, as in Committee of the Whole, the words "and used," after the word "taken," were stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With that exception the Chair is informed the amendment was not otherwise amended. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the roll on concurring in the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. Understanding that he would vote the same way I would on this subject, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent from the city. If he were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Because of my general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Bourne	Crane	La Follette	Smoot
Bradley	Crawford	Massey	Stone
Brandegee	Cummins	O'Gorman	Thornton

Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Paynter	Sutherland
Culberson	Guggenheim	Percy	Tillman
Curtis	Hitchcock	Rayner	Watson

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have no further interest in the word "exclusively."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The insertion of the word "exclusively" will be considered as concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. ROOT. I move to strike out lines 13 and 14, on page 6, that "No tolls shall be levied upon vessels," and so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will pardon the Chair, there is one other amendment which was reserved, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. Which I desire to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

The SECRETARY. Amendment offered by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, on page 20, line 17, after the word "final," insert:

No ship engaged in or permitted by the terms of this act to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal if such ship is owned, chartered, operated, or controlled by any person or company which is doing business in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or the provisions of sections 73 and 77, both inclusive, of an act approved August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or the provisions of any other act of Congress amending or supplementing the said act of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act and amendments thereto, or said sections of the act of August 27, 1894. The question of fact may be determined by the judgment of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in any cause pending before it to which the owners or operators of such ships are parties.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment just read, and on that the Senator from New Hampshire demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. Not knowing what his vote would be on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when Mr. PERCY's name was called). I wish to make the statement, and let it stand for the day, that my colleague [Mr. PERCY] is unavoidably absent upon necessary business.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I again announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. As has been stated, he has a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire whether the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. DU PONT. In that case, as I have a general pair with him, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withhold my vote, because I am paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ashurst	Crawford	Nelson	Simmons
Bacon	Cummins	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Gronna	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Bourne	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Stone

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ROOT. On page 6, line 13, I move to strike out the words—

> No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged exclusively in the coastwise trade of the United States.

I shall not ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, beginning in line 13, it is proposed to strike out the words:

> No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged exclusively in the coastwise trade of the United States.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move to strike out section 11 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 11, beginning on page 19, line 10, and ending on page 24, line 11.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I withhold my vote owing to the absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I am paired.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). On this question I consider myself at liberty to vote and I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce the pair of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 45, as follows:

So Mr. BRANDEGEE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 11 and to insert in lieu thereof a new paragraph as follows:

> That every ship, however owner or controlled, shall be permitted to use the Panama Canal, but the traffic through said canal between ports of the United States and between ports of the United States and ports of adjacent foreign countries shall be, and the same hereby is, placed under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with power to said commission to fix the rates to be charged and to make such rules and regulations in regard to said traffic as it may see fit.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, lines 10 to 13, it is proposed to strike out all the words beginning with the word "or," on line 10, and ending with the word "dock" on line 13, and insert in lieu thereof a period; and on page 23, after line 22, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

> In establishing any through route under any provision of this act the commission shall not require any company, without its consent, to embrace in such route substantially less than the entire length of its railroad and of any intermediate railroad operated in conjunction and under a common management and control therewith which lies between the termini of such proposed through route, unless to do so would make such through route unreasonably long as compared with another practicable through route which could otherwise be established; and in fixing such joint or proportional rates the commission shall not diminish the net revenue previously received by such company as its proportion of a reasonable rate for transportation over such through route.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. GALLINGER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my pair already announced, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. DU PONT's name was called). The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is absent. He is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). On account of my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], I withhold my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], but on this particular question my pair has relieved me from its operation, and I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WATSON. Again announcing the absence and pair of my colleague [Mr. CHILTON], I desire to say that if present on this vote he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 15, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I was not at liberty to do it when we were voting.

I had announced in the open session of the Senate that I intended to change my vote on the question of tolls on our foreign ships. When that vote was put I was confused. I thought we were voting on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia about the word "exclusively," and I voted on the proposition of tolls on foreign ships the same way I did yesterday when I had announced that I intended to change my vote to "nay." It made no difference in the result, but having announced in open session I did not want the vote to stand in contradiction of what I said I wanted to do.

I ask that the bill may be printed with the Senate amendments, as the chairman of the House committee is anxious to get a copy of the bill as finally passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE COTTON TARIFF.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25034) commonly known as the cotton bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25034) to reduce the duties on the manufacture of cotton.

The motion was agreed to.

STANDARD OIL AND AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANIES.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask for the adoption of the order which I send to the desk. Under the rules I understand it must lie over until to-morrow. (S. Res. 375.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, relieved from further consideration of Senate concurrent resolution 4, declaring it to be the sense of the Senate and of the House of Representatives that criminal prosecutions should be begun against the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co. and the other parties and persons who were declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be violating the criminal provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman antitrust law, and instructing the Attorney General to institute criminal prosecutions against them where the evidence, in his opinion, justifies said proceedings; and it is Further ordered, That said resolution be laid before the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 9, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, in whose presence is life, come now in all the fullness of Thy power and possess our minds and hearts that we may worship Thee in spirit and in truth by the thoughts that we think, the words that we speak, and the deeds that we do. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RADIO COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill (S. 6412) to regulate radio communication, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

USE OF UNNECESSARY POWER.

Fourteenth. In all circumstances, except in case of signals or radiograms relating to vessels in distress, all stations use the minimum amount of energy necessary to carry out any communication desired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman whether he considers this provision of the bill sufficiently definite, and whether it would be practicable to make it more definite than to say the use of the minimum amount of energy necessary to carry out any communication desired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I hardly think it is practicable to make it more definite. That regulation is in the language of the Berlin convention. Conditions vary so much that it would be impossible to formulate a definite rule.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands that many of these instruments and apparatus for radio communication are adjusted to different amounts of energy. This proposition is to require all stations to use the minimum amount of energy necessary to carry out the communication, which would require a constant adjustment and readjustment of the apparatus. A very serious objection has been made to this provision on the ground that it is practically unworkable. If there was a penalty for it it might be very disastrous.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not recall what the specific penalty is, but the fact that it would be, from a practical standpoint, difficult to say what amount of energy they might employ to send a message a given distance is the reason that it is couched in general terms. The radioactivity in the daytime is about 50 per cent of the same energy at night. Daylight seems to dissipate it, and for that reason, in order that the stations might not have any hardships imposed upon them, it was thought the wisest to couch the regulation in general terms so as not to impose a hardship. The great difficulty in formulating all these regulations is to frame them so as not to impose hardships on these companies using wireless telegraphy.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

GENERAL RESTRICTIONS ON PRIVATE STATIONS.

Fifteenth. No private or commercial station not engaged in the transaction of bona fide commercial business by radio communication or in experimentation in connection with the development and manufacture of radio apparatus for commercial purposes at the date of passage of this act shall use a transmitting wave length exceeding 200 meters or a transformer input exceeding 1 kilowatt, except by special authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor contained in the license of the station.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, on page 10, lines 13 and 14, I move to strike out the words "at the date of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, lines 13 and 14, strike out the words "at the date of the passage of this act."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the language in the bill as it passed the Senate would have forbidden any new commercial stations, practically.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think that is correct.

Mr. MANN. And inadvertently would have created a monopoly, and the gentleman desires to correct that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. I think the amendment was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois himself.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri if there was not to be another amendment to this paragraph. While I should like to move to strike out the "200 meters and 1 kilowatt" and make them in both places "300," in the interest of the amateur, I understood that there was to be an amendment which various gentlemen had discussed. Does it come in here?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have an amendment that was agreed to by the representatives of the Department of Commerce and Labor and the Wireless Association of Pennsylvania, which they thought would meet the objection, and which I am going to offer.

Mr. MANN. Does not that come in here?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Page 10, line 17.

Mr. MANN. This is the place.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; it is. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to it. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 17, end of fifteenth regulation, change period to colon and add:

"Provided, That the owner or operator of a station of the character mentioned in this regulation shall not be liable for a violation of the requirements of the third or fourth regulations to the penalties of $100 or $25, respectively, provided in this section, unless the person maintaining or operating such station shall have been notified in writing that the said transmitter has been found upon tests conducted by the Government to be so adjusted as to violate the said third and fourth regulations and opportunity has been given to said owner or operator to adjust said transmitter in conformity with said regulations."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Seventeenth. In general, the shipboard stations shall transmit their radiograms to the nearest shore station. A sender on board a vessel shall, however, have the right to designate the shore station through which he desires to have his radiograms transmitted. The station on shipboard shall then wait until such shore station shall be the nearest. If this can not be done, the wishes of the sender are to be complied with only if the transmission can be effected without interfering with the service of other stations.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I call attention of the gentleman from Missouri to this situation: This provision requires that the station on the ship shall send its message to the nearest shore station. If the sender of the message desires that the message shall be sent to some other shore station, he can so indicate, in which case the message shall not be sent until the ship is nearest that station.

Take, for instance, a vessel on its way to our station at Guantanamo Bay and Panama. A man desires to send a message, which comes back to the United States. It is perfectly practicable to do that when you are more than half way to Panama. But under the provisions of this paragraph when you are more than half way the station at Panama would be the nearest station and you would be required to send a message to Panama, possibly there to be sent back by wireless to Guantanamo Bay. You could not send a message to Guantanamo or the United States, but you are required to send it to the nearest station, which is Panama. Or you can indicate that it shall be sent to the United States, in which case the message can not be sent until the ship has been to Panama and is more than half way back. I do not see any escape from that conclusion.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say that this regulation was taken from the Berlin convention.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but the regulation in a convention for the guidance of operators is quite a different thing from putting it into a statute with a penalty. That messages should ordinarily be sent to the nearest station may be correct. But to require a vessel to send its message to the nearest station when perhaps that station may be an island in the sea, or Panama, where it would have to be sent up there by wireless over the very line that the vessel is traversing seems to me a very roundabout method of sending communications.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the provision here gives sufficient latitude. In general it is provided that the shipboard station shall transmit radiograms to the nearest shore station. That is the general regulation.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and then the exception is made in the same paragraph.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And the sender on board the vessel shall have the right to designate the shore station through which he desires to have his radiogram transmitted.

Mr. MANN. Yes. If you stop there, I would not have any question about it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is then provided that the station on shipboard shall wait until such shore station shall be the nearest, and that if this can not be done the wishes of the sender are to be complied with only if the transmission can be effected without interfering with the service of other stations. Now, it seems to me if we strike out, in line 10, the word "only," that would meet the objection. The purpose is to avoid interference, and the framers of the regulation had that in view.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I would inquire what would be the result in leaving out that language, following what the gentleman from Illinois has said, up to that point. Would that interfere with the bill at all?

Mr. MANN. Suppose we leave out the language:

The station on shipboard shall then wait until such shore station shall be the nearest.

That is an absolute requirement.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection to that at all, because I agree with the gentleman. I can not see any good reason for the requirement in the instance the gentleman mentions. If he will offer that as an amendment, I will accept it.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in lines 7 and 8, page 11, by striking out the language:

The station on shipboard shall then wait until such shore station shall be the nearest.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECRECY OF MESSAGES.

Nineteenth. Every operator shall be obligated in his license to preserve, and shall preserve faithfully, the secrecy of radiograms which he may receive or transmit; and for failure to preserve such secrecy his license may be revoked by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment by way of substitute for the nineteenth regulation, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12 strike out, after the word "Nineteenth," lines 23, 24, and 25, and on page 13 strike out lines 1 and 2 and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"No person or persons engaged in or having knowledge of the operation of any station or stations shall divulge or publish the contents of any message transmitted or received by such station except to the person or persons to whom the same may be directed, or to another station employed to forward such message to its destination, unless legally required so to do by a court of competent jurisdiction. Any person guilty of so divulging or publishing any message, except as herein provided, shall, on conviction thereof, be punishable by a fine of not more than $250, or imprisonment for a period of not exceeding three months, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the trial court."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment was suggested by a representative of the Marconi Co. He urged that the penalty prescribed by the section as written in the bill is too severe. The regulation in the bill provides that for failure to preserve such secrecy of messages the licensee may have his license revoked by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. It was urged that it would be preferable, if an offense were committed, that a fine or imprisonment, or both, be imposed. The court could judge of each case on its merits and impose the penalty accordingly. I inserted the following language, however, to the proposed substitute:

Unless legally required so to do by a court of competent jurisdiction.

That is, that he should not divulge the contents of a message unless required to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we have recently had an investigation by a committee of the Senate in reference to the Titanic disaster, where it seemed to become quite important to question the radio operatives. Under this provision the radio operator could not answer such a question without having his license revoked. I take it the gentleman does not want to have that go into the law.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This amendment provides that if the operator discloses the contents of the message he shall be subject to a fine or imprisonment, or both, unless he is required to disclose the contents of the radiogram in a judicial proceeding. It occurs to me that perhaps that is too restrictive; that the exception should include any authorized investigation, like a congressional investigation.

Mr. MANN. Certainly, it seems to me, it ought to permit Congress to carry on an investigation. Then I ask, further, in reference to that, whether a radio operator who had sent a signal of distress under that provision would be able to communicate that fact to anybody else? It might be very important.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The distress signal is made up of 3 dots, 3 dashes, and 3 dots. That is the distress signal recognized by the international code.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but suppose he had received or sent signals of distress and desired to communicate that fact to some other ship? Under this provision he would have his license revoked if he did so. One ship might send a signal of distress to an operator and he would not have the right to notify another ship of that fact without having his license revoked.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think that would come within the language of regulation 19 or within the language of the proposed substitute. The regulation relates to radiograms and not to signals. Then, it does not prohibit a party from testifying that he had sent a message; but if he sends a message, he can not disclose the contents of the message itself unless required to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction. In other words, it is just like an ordinary telegram; the secrecy of the message, then, is protected by law, and if he willfully discloses it he shall be subject to punishment.

Mr. MANN. Suppose one ship is in distress and sends a signal of distress to another ship and then sends a radiogram telling where the ship in distress is. That is a radiogram, is it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That would be, yes; and it would be delivered to the ship for which it was intended. It would not violate the law.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not forbid the other ship from then sending a message, telling where the ship was, and telling that he had received such information. I suppose nobody would pay any attention to it in such a case.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think the regulation would apply to any such case as that.

Mr. McCALL. Why should there be any such provision as that any more than in the case of telegraph operators? Of course the regulations of the company would restrict them from making public messages. Now, why should we have a penal provision here drawn upon lines that might make it necessary for a man sometimes in the public interest to commit a crime?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The telegraph operator has no right to disclose the secrets of a message.

Mr. McCALL. Of course, but we have not a statute of the United States on that subject, have we?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not sure whether we have or not.

Mr. MANN. Well, we have not.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCALL. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that the time of the gentleman from Missouri be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCALL. I do not know of any statute of the United States that would be in accordance with this. I think if an agent of a company receiving the dispatch, a telegraph operator, discloses the contents the company would be liable for damages to the people who are interested in the transmission of that message and to the man who had paid for it. I do not see why we should have any penal provision here when the practice and custom are so well settled as they are in the case of telegraph operators. The lot of one of these operators is sufficiently hard now without putting criminal statutes in his path.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this relates to secrecy of messages and is required by the Berlin convention, and we are simply carrying out the provisions of that convention to which we became party by the action of the Senate.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the amendment of the gentleman offered to paragraph 19 strike it out as it stands?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And substitutes?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That every license granted under the provisions of this act for the operation or use of apparatus for radio communication shall prescribe that the operator thereof shall not willfully or maliciously interfere with any other radio communication. Such interference shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof the owner or operator, or both, shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $500 or imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, and I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether or not the penalty provided in the bill originally and which the Clerk just read will not in some manner conflict with the amendment which the gentleman has just offered?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And if it does not, what is the necessity of having two classes of penalties when you specify, in line 4, page 13, "for violation of any of these regulations," and so forth, a certain fine and imprisonment? That is all-embracing and very comprehensive and you clearly have a conflict between your provision set out in your amendment and the one originally in the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to correct that. On page 13, in line 11, after the word "regulations," insert the words "except as provided in regulation 19."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 11, after the word "regulations," insert "except as provided in regulation 19."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman withdraws his pro forma amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he prepare an amendment relative to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois. Instead of leaving it a technical crime for an operator receiving a message of danger to transmit it to another ship the law ought to make it his duty to transmit it to another ship, and it seems to me the gentleman is leaving his bill so that a man would have committed a crime and would have to rely upon there not being a prosecution. I think that is very bad policy to carry out. I think if you are going to have anything in the law covering the point you should make it the man's duty to retransmit a message of danger. I think that should be amended.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say to the gentleman I do not think the amended section applies to that case at all, but since the gentleman from Illinois calls attention to it I will scrutinize it and, if necessary, I will offer an amendment later; or, if the gentleman has any amendment to suggest, I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I understood that the gentleman was going to strike out, on page 13, lines 9 and 10, the language "which shall be deemed a misdemeanor."

Mr. ALEXANDER. I intend to do that. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment: Page 13, lines 9 and 10, amend by striking out the words "it shall be deemed a misdemeanor."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 13, lines 9 and 10, by striking out the words "which shall be deemed a misdemeanor."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois withdraws his pro forma amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I also desire to offer an amendment, in line 16, page 13, by striking out the words, "which shall be deemed a misdemeanor."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 13, line 16, by striking out the words "which shall be deemed a misdemeanor."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In line 17, page 13, strike out the word "may" and insert "shall," and after the word "suspended" insert the words "or revoked," so that it will read, "the license shall be suspended or revoked."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 13, line 17, by striking out the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall," and insert after the word "suspended" the words "or revoked."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield? Does not the gentleman wish to make the same amendment, line 11, page 13, after the word "regulations," that he made after the word "regulations," in line 4, on the same page, by inserting the words "except as provided in section 19"?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment, in line 4, page 13, after the word "regulations," insert the words "except as provided in section 19."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I think that paragraph relates only to sections 1 and 2.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is what I thought at first. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That a person, company, or corporation within the jurisdiction of the United States shall not knowingly utter or transmit, or cause to be uttered or transmitted, any false or fraudulent distress signal or call or false or fraudulent signal, call, or radiogram of any kind. The penalty for so uttering or transmitting a false or fraudulent distress signal or call shall be a fine of not more than $2,500 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each and every such offense, and the penalty for so uttering or transmitting, or causing to be uttered or transmitted, any other false or fraudulent signal, call, or radiogram shall be a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each and every such offense.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. This section again says:

Any false or fraudulent distress signal or call or false or fraudulent signal, call, or radiogram of any kind.

Would not the gentleman be willing to insert before the word "radiogram" the word "other," so that this would apply only to those things that are in some sort radio communications?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think that would be well.

Mr. MANN. There might be a question arising at some time. I move to insert, page 14, line 12, before the word "radiogram," and in line 19, before the word "radiogram," the word "other."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws his pro forma amendment, and offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 14, line 12, by inserting before the word "radiogram" the word "other," and in line 19, before the word "radiogram" the word "other."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the trial of any offense under this act shall be in the district in which it is committed or in any district in which the offender may be found, or if the offense is committed upon the high seas or out of the jurisdiction of any particular State or district the trial shall be in the district where the offender may be found or into which he shall be first brought.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. In lines 7 and 8, page 15, strike out the words "or in any district in which the offender may be found."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 15, lines 7 and 8, by striking out the words "or in any district in which the offender may be found."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if I understand that amendment, it is for the purpose of complying with the constitutional provision that a man shall be tried in the district in which the offense is committed, if it be on land.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. It conforms to the section of the judiciary act, defining the jurisdiction of courts.

Mr. MANN. The Constitution requires it. It seems to have escaped the attention of our friends at the other end of the Capitol.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after 90 days from its passage.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment: On line 14, page 15, strike out the words "after 90 days" and insert "four months."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 15, line 14, by striking out the words "after 90 days" and inserting "four months."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this practically concludes the consideration of this bill. There are many things in it which I do not like, but I wish to congratulate the gentleman from Missouri in charge of the bill [Mr. ALEXANDER] and his committee for the very excellent work they have done on this bill as well as on other bills.

I am very much afraid that this bill will have the effect of practically destroying the amateur work in reference to wireless communication. That work, probably, has done as much toward the advancement of wireless communication as any other one thing, or possibly all other things.

There are other people who are opposed to the provisions, and I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a communication given to me by one of the newspaper men representing one of the California papers. I do not know the gentleman from whom this communication comes, or how important it may be to him.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Make every effort to stop bill. My point is not covered by bill referred to Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Our stations and works with only one wave length, a part and duplex; that is, one station can cover two messages at the same time, while the other station is sending two messages. One operator can be listening for distress signals all the time, if necessary, on a given wave, and there would be no interference from a station a mile away sending messages all the time.

If the bill passes, Marconi could claim that we interfered with him and thus make any end of trouble. As soon as the Government has its powers in Washington complete, we shall be glad to put in our set and show them what we can do. All legislation so far as it affects the system using continuous waves should be held in abeyance until proper knowledge can be placed before Congress.

We now have a complete system for both land and water, the greatest invention of the age. It must not be hampered by legislation passed in ignorance of its requirements.

BEACH THOMPSON,
President of the Federal Wireless Co.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I received a communication from the same source. I will say that these gentlemen have hid their invention under a bushel. This legislation has been proposed for two or three years past, and hearings were had on a bill to regulate radio communication in the Sixty-first Congress, and a bill was reported from the committee, and this bill has been under consideration for the last five or six months. We never heard from this concern or of their invention until the last few days. They then came in and demanded that this legislation be held up until the department could investigate their invention. The committee did not feel justified in doing so.

Let me call attention to a provision in this bill. On page 5, in section 4, there is this provision:

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, in his discretion, waive the provisions of any or all of these regulations when no interference of the character above mentioned can ensue.

That provision was inserted so that the Government might avail itself of any discovery that might be made, or avail itself of any instrument that might be perfected to avoid interferences, and if our California friends have such a wonderful invention as they suggest, the Government would be very glad indeed to avail itself of that invention.

Now there is a company at Pittsburgh, the National Electric Signaling Co., which is at work on the same kind of a device. They think they have it nearly perfected. It is under the eye of the department, and the department is only too eager that it may be perfected, because then all these regulations in regard to interferences can be wiped out. Until that is done these regulations are absolutely imperative.

Now, with reference to the effect of this legislation on the development of the art, it is true that objection has been made to this legislation upon the ground that it would interfere with or retard the development of the art of wireless telegraphy by discouraging experiments and inventions. The committee regards this as a groundless fear, and that is the view taken by those who have given the subject careful consideration. Instead of interfering with or restricting or retarding the development of the art, the Government and the Congress would encourage it in all legitimate ways. The most notable progress in the art has been made in Europe and in those countries where the regulation of the art has been under governmental control for several years past.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. To recur to the nineteenth regulation, on page 12, does the gentleman from Missouri have at hand the provision in the convention of which he spoke?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have not had time to refer to it.

Mr. McCALL. As I understand the effect of the amendment to that regulation offered by the gentleman from Missouri, it makes the regulation more stringent than it was in the bill as reported, does it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not. It does not make it any more restrictive.

Mr. McCALL. But as I understand it, you provided a penalty, fine and imprisonment, and this provides a penalty by the revoking of the license.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the penalty provided in the bill. The substitute provides a fine or imprisonment, or both. The punishment will depend upon the gravity of the offense. It may be as low as $1. This was suggested by the Marconi Co., because they said the other penalty was too severe.

Mr. McCALL. I understood the penalty provided in the gentleman's amendment was a fine or imprisonment, and possibly both.

Mr. ALEXANDER. One or both.

Mr. McCALL. Do you strike out the provision in the bill for the revoking of the license and insert the provision which is now proposed?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. I would suggest that there should be an exception there, so that it would make it the duty of an operator at sea to transmit messages relating to safety of navigation, instead of imposing upon him the burden of committing a technical crime.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman will listen while I read the substitute, I think it will do away with his objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question first? Did the gentleman intend to strike out what is now in the bill as paragraph 19?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; and to insert the other in lieu of it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not offer his amendment in that way, and the Clerk has not got it that way, so that had better be corrected.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The language of the amendment is:

On page 12 strike out lines 23, 24, and 25, and on page 13 strike out lines 1 and 2 and insert the following in lieu thereof.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk did not report it that way.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have a copy of it here.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman read what he proposes to insert in place of what he strikes out?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It reads as follows:

No person or persons engaged in or having knowledge of the operation of any station or stations shall divulge or publish the contents of any messages transmitted or received by such station, except to the person or persons to whom the same may be directed, or to another station employed to forward such message to its destination, unless he is required so to do by a court of competent jurisdiction. Any person guilty of divulging or publishing any message except as herein provided shall, on conviction thereof, be punishable by a fine of not more than $250 or imprisonment for a period of not exceeding three months, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the trial court.

Mr. McCALL. I did not understand the amendment as read by the Clerk to be what the gentleman has just stated it to be.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think it ought to be prohibited to deliver a message to an authorized agent? Does not the gentleman think it would be well to provide that the message might be delivered to the person to whom it was addressed or to his authorized agent?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is expressly stated that he may do that.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. No; there is no qualification whatever. Your amendment provides that the message must be delivered to the individual alone. It can not be delivered to an authorized agent under the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to section 10. If the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, the vote will be on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That amendment provides that the act shall go into effect in 4 months after the passage of the act instead of 90 days.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask to return to regulation 19, and to the substitute that was offered in lieu of that regulation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following at the end of line 2, page 13—

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, there is something that goes before that. I will send the amendment to the Clerk so that it may be correctly reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12 strike out lines 23, 24, and 25, and on page 13 strike out lines 1 and 2, and insert the following:

"No person or persons engaged in or having knowledge of the operation of any station or stations shall divulge or publish the contents of any messages transmitted or received by such station except to the person or persons to whom the same may be directed, or to another station employed to forward such message to its destination, unless he is required so to do by a court of competent jurisdiction. Any person guilty of divulging or publishing any message except as herein provided shall, on conviction thereof, be punishable by a fine of not more than $250 or imprisonment for a period of not exceeding three months, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the trial court."

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment to strike out that regulation entirely. When would it be in order—before the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri or afterwards?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. McCALL. I did not understand that this amendment had been voted on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCALL. I understood that the gentleman was proposing the amendment which has just been read, which would change the nineteenth regulation. Now, I ask if it would be in order before or after the adoption of that amendment to move to strike out the nineteenth regulation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is offered as a substitute for the nineteenth regulation as it appears in the bill, and it has been agreed to as a substitute for the nineteenth regulation.

Mr. MANN. I should like to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that where it says "court" he might insert the words "competent authority," so that it would cover a congressional inquiry or possibly other cases.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] has an amendment to offer. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered now.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Let the gentleman from Missouri offer it. It is simply to insert the words "or authorized agent."

The SPEAKER. The understanding of the Chair is that this amendment which the gentleman from Missouri now sends up was adopted three or four days ago.

Mr. MANN. Three or four minutes ago.

The SPEAKER. Anyway, it has been adopted.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Now, I reoffer the amendment, which I send to the Clerks' desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment as offered now.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12 strike out lines 23, 24, and 25, and on page 13 strike out lines 1 and 2, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"No person or persons engaged in or having knowledge of the operation of any station or stations shall divulge or publish the contents of any messages transmitted or received by such station except to the person or persons to whom the same may be directed, or to another station employed to forward such message to its destination, unless he is required so to do by a court of competent jurisdiction. Any person guilty of divulging or publishing any message except as herein provided shall, on conviction thereof, be punishable by a fine of not more than $250 or imprisonment for a period of not exceeding three months, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the trial court."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the amendment. After the word "directed" add the words "or to their authorized agent," and after the word "jurisdiction," where it first occurs, add the words "or other competent authority."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting after the word "directed" the words "or to their authorized agent," and after the word "jurisdiction," where it first occurs, the words "or other competent authority."

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know when I can move to strike out the whole section. I imagine it would be in order to perfect the provision before the motion to strike out would be in order. I desire to move to strike out the nineteenth regulation, and my question is whether it would be proper to do it before the substitute is perfected.

The SPEAKER. Is the nineteenth regulation the one the gentleman's amendment relates to?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think the motion to strike out would come after the paragraph had been perfected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is correct. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the way the amendment was sent up by the gentleman from Missouri it would strike out the word "nineteenth" in line 23. The gentleman does not desire to do that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. My amendment is or should be to strike out all after the word "nineteenth."

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the gentleman ends this with the words "in the discretion of the trial court." That is not the usual phraseology, but "in the discretion of the court."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "trial."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to perfect the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCCALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the paragraph. I would like to say a few words on that proposition. As I understand it, the amendment as perfected applies to ships at sea, and it might make it a criminal offense for an operator to disclose a message of danger he had received—that is, it would make it a criminal offense if he should send it to another ship. While I imagine that no operator would ever be fined or imprisoned for that act, it seems to me that it is contrary to public policy for us to have a provision in the law which would lead in the opposite direction from what it was a man's duty to go.

That would not look well in an investigation. If the operator was being questioned why he did not send the message, he could point to the act of Congress which made it a criminal offense to divulge that message. I think the gentleman should perfect that proposition. It seems to me that it is an unusual proposition anyway. There is no provision making it a criminal offense for an operator to divulge a telegraphic message sent between the States. That would rest on general principles of right conduct, and parties interested in the message would have a ground of action for damages against the company. I believe there is no more reason why we should thus protect the sending of messages through the air by a penal provision than we should when sending them over the wire. I think the whole paragraph should be stricken out, and certainly in the form in which it is in the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, that certainly would be a great error. There is nothing in the amendment that would make it an offense for an operator to disclose a message under the circumstances mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is entirely proper that the secrecy of messages should be provided for, and that operators should understand that when they come into the receipt of the message they should not disclose it unless they do so under proper restrictions.

Many commercial transactions may be carried on by wireless. Messages of the very greatest importance to the parties may be involved, and to say that an operator might disclose the contents of such a radiogram without incurring any penalty is not right or fair or just. It would be very dangerous indeed to allow them to do so. The international conference thought it of so much importance that it expressly provided that a regulation of this sort should be adopted by the signatory nations.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike out regulation 19.

The question was taken, and the motion was lost.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to say a word. I think there is an error in the distress signal mentioned on page 7, line 17. The signal of distress is "s o s." In the international alphabet or code the letter o is made by a dot, space, and a dot, whereas the "o" as stated in line 17 in the bill is made by three dashes, which are said to represent the figure "5." So that the signal of distress reads in the bill "s 5 s" instead of "s o s."

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman debating the previous question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; I asked unanimous consent.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the motion for the previous question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not make this criticism of my own knowledge, but a gentleman representing the Associated Press called my attenion to it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say that the gentleman connected with the Associated Press had better be sure of his premises. The signal as set out in the bill is the distress call provided by the Berlin convention as the international signal for distress. I do not know what they mean.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Missouri did not offer the amendment that this act shall not apply to the Philippine Islands. I think he intended to offer it as a new section.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is correct, Mr. Speaker, and I offer as a new section the following.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After section 9 add a new section, to be known as section 10, as follows:

"This act shall not apply to the Philippine Islands."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment adding a new section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the figure "10," in line 13, and insert the figure "11."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF RADIO COMMUNICATION.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the report from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on the bill (H. R. 15357) to regulate radio communication, I wish to make a brief explanation to precede the printing of the report.

H. R. 15357, as reported to the House, is substantially the same in form as Senate bill 6412—just passed by the House with amendments—was in when that bill was reported to the Senate. As I recall, some few amendments to the bill were adopted in the Senate. Others have been agreed to in the House, but none of them materially changing the general scope or provision of the bill. They remove some objections to minor provisions of the bill and perfect it in other regards, hence the report on the House bill, H. R. 15357, may be of some interest to those who may wish a more extended explanation of the provisions of the Senate bill just passed than was given while the bill was under consideration in the House.

[House Report No. 582, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

REGULATION OF RADIO COMMUNICATION.

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 15357:

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15357) to regulate radio communication, having considered the same, report it to the House, with the following amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That a person, company, or corporation within the jurisdiction of the United States shall not use or operate any apparatus for radio communication as a means of commercial intercourse among the several States, or with foreign nations, or upon any vessel of the United States engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or for the receipt or transmission of radiograms or signals the effect of which extends beyond the exclusive jurisdiction of the State or Territory in which the same are made, or where interference would be caused thereby with the receipt of messages or signals from beyond the jurisdiction of the said State or Territory, except under and in accordance with a license, revocable for cause, in that behalf granted by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon application therefor; but nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to the transmission and exchange of radiograms or signals between points situated in the same State: Provided, That the effect thereof shall not extend beyond the jurisdiction of the said State or interfere with the reception of radiograms or signals from beyond said jurisdiction; and a license shall not be required for the transmission or exchange of radiograms or signals by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, but every Government station on land or sea shall have special call letters designated and published in the list of radio stations of the United States by the Department of Commerce and Labor. Any person, company, or corporation that shall use or operate any apparatus for radio communication in violation of this section, or knowingly aid or abet another person, company, or corporation in so doing, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, and the apparatus or device so unlawfully used and operated may be adjudged forfeited to the United States.

"SEC. 2. That every such license shall be in such form as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall determine and shall contain the restrictions pursuant to this act, on and subject to which the license is granted; that every such license shall be issued only to citizens of the United States or to a company incorporated under the laws of some State, and shall specify the ownership and location of the station in which said apparatus shall be used and other particulars for its identification and to enable its range to be estimated; shall state the purpose of the station, and, in case of a station in actual operation at the date of passage of this act, shall contain the statement that satisfactory proof has been furnished that it was actually operating on the above-mentioned date; shall state the wave length or the wave lengths authorized for use by the station for the prevention of interference and the hours for which the station is licensed for work; and shall not be construed to authorize the use of any apparatus for radio communication in any other station than that specified. Every such license shall be subject to the regulations contained herein and such regulations as may be established from time to time by authority of this act or subsequent acts and treaties of the United States. Every such license shall provide that the President of the United States in time of war or public peril may cause the closing of any station for radio communication and the removal therefrom of all radio apparatus, or may authorize the use or control of any such station or apparatus by any department of the Government, upon just compensation to the owners.

"SEC. 3. That every such apparatus shall at all times while in use and operation as aforesaid be in charge or under the supervision of a person or persons licensed for that purpose by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Every person so licensed for the operation of any radio apparatus on shore shall be a citizen of the United States.

Every person so licensed who in the operation of any radio apparatus shall fail to observe and obey regulations contained in or made pursuant to this act or subsequent acts or treaties of the United States, or any one of them, in addition to the punishments and penalties herein described, upon conviction shall suffer the suspension of the said license, and the same shall not be renewed for a period of one year from and after the date of his conviction of any such failure. It shall be unlawful to employ any unlicensed person or for any unlicensed person to serve in charge of the use and operation of such apparatus, and any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more $100 or imprisonment for not more than two months, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each and every such offense: Provided, That in case of emergency the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may authorize a collector of customs to issue a temporary permit, in lieu of a license, to the operator on a vessel subject to the radio ship act of June 24, 1910.

"SEC. 4. That for the purpose of preventing or minimizing interference with communication between stations in which such apparatus is operated, to facilitate radio communication, and to further the prompt receipt of distress signals, said stations shall be subject to the regulations of this section. These regulations shall be enforced by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor through the collectors of customs and other officers of the Government as other regulations herein provided for.

"The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, in his discretion, waive the provisions of any or all of these regulations when no interference of the character above mentioned can ensue.

"The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may grant special temporary licenses to stations actually engaged in conducting experiments for the development of the science of radio communication, or the apparatus pertaining thereto, to carry on special tests, using any amount of power or any wave lengths, at such hours and under such conditions as will insure the least interference with the sending or receipt of commercial or Government radiograms, of distress signals and radiograms, or with the work of other stations.

"In these regulations the naval and military stations shall be understood to be stations on land.

"REGULATIONS.

"NORMAL WAVE LENGTH.

"First. Every station shall be required to designate a certain definite wave length as the normal sending and receiving wave length of the station. This wave length shall not exceed 600 meters or it shall exceed 1,600 meters.

"OTHER WAVE LENGTHS.

"Second. In addition to the normal sending wave length all stations, except as provided hereinafter in these regulations, may use other sending wave lengths: Provided, That they do not exceed 600 meters or that they do exceed 1,600 meters: Provided further, That the character of the waves emitted conforms to the requirements of paragraphs 3 and 4 following.

"USE OF A 'PURE WAVE.'

"Third. At all stations if the sending apparatus, to be referred to hereinafter as the 'transmitter,' is of such a character that the energy is radiated in two or more wave lengths, more or less sharply defined, as indicated by a sensitive wave meter, the energy in no one of the lesser waves shall exceed 10 per cent of that in the greatest.

"USE OF A 'SHARP WAVE.'

"Fourth. At all stations the logarithmic decrement per complete oscillation in the wave trains emitted by the transmitter shall not exceed two-tenths, except when sending distress signals or signals and messages relating thereto.

"USE OF 'STANDARD DISTRESS WAVE.'

"Fifth. For the purposes of sending signals of distress every station on shipboard shall be so adjusted, except on vessels of small tonnage unable to have plants insuring that wave length, as to permit these signals to be sent with a wave length of approximately 300 meters.

"SIGNAL OF DISTRESS.

"Sixth. The distress call used shall be the international signal of distress . . . — — — . . .

"USE OF 'BROAD INTERFERING WAVE' FOR DISTRESS SIGNALS.

"Seventh. When sending distress signals the transmitter of a station on shipboard may be tuned in such a manner as to create a maximum of interference with a maximum of radiation.

"DISTANCE REQUIREMENT FOR DISTRESS SIGNALS.

"Eighth. Every station on shipboard, wherever practicable, shall be prepared to send distress signals of the character specified in paragraphs 5 and 6 with sufficient power to enable them to be received by day over sea a distance of 100 nautical miles by a shipboard station equipped with apparatus for both sending and receiving equal in all essential particulars to that of the station first mentioned.

"'RIGHT OF WAY' FOR DISTRESS SIGNALS.

"Ninth. All stations are required to give absolute priority to signals and radiograms relating to ships in distress; to cease all sending on hearing a distress signal; and, except when engaged in answering or aiding the ship in distress, to refrain from sending until all signals and radiograms relating thereto are completed.

"REDUCED POWER FOR SHIPS NEAR A GOVERNMENT STATION.

"Tenth. No station on shipboard, when within 15 nautical miles of a naval or military station, shall use a transformer input exceeding 1 kilowatt, nor, when within 5 nautical miles of such a station, a transformer input exceeding one-half kilowatt, except for sending signals of distress or signals or radiograms relating thereto.

"INTERCOMMUNICATION.

"Eleventh. Each shore station open to general public service between the coast and vessels at sea shall be bound to exchange radiograms with any similar shore station and with any ship station without distinction of the radio systems adopted by such stations, respectively, and each station on shipboard shall be bound to exchange radiograms with any other station on shipboard without distinction of the radio systems adopted by each station, respectively.

"DIVISION OF TIME.

"Twelfth. At important seaports and at all other places where naval or military and private or commercial shore stations operate in such close proximity that interference with the work of naval and military stations can not be avoided by the enforcement of the regulations contained in the foregoing paragraphs concerning wave lengths and character of signals emitted, such private or commercial shore stations as do interfere with the reception of signals by the naval and military stations concerned shall not use their transmitters during the first 15 minutes of each hour, local standard time. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, on the recommendations of the department concerned, designate the station or stations which may be required to observe this division of time.

"GOVERNMENT STATIONS TO OBSERVE DIVISIONS OF TIME.

"Thirteenth. The naval or military stations for which the above-mentioned division of time may be established shall transmit signals or radiograms only during the first 15 minutes of each hour, local standard time, except in case of signals or radiograms relating to vessels in distress, as hereinbefore provided.

"USE OF UNNECESSARY POWER.

"Fourteenth. In all circumstances, except in case of signals or radiograms relating to vessels in distress, all stations shall use the minimum amount of energy necessary to carry out any communication desired.

"GENERAL RESTRICTIONS ON PRIVATE STATIONS.

"Fifteenth. No private or commercial station not engaged in the transaction of bona fide commercial business by radio communication or in experimentation in connection with the development and manufacture of radio apparatus for commercial purposes at the date of passage of this act shall use a transmitting wave length exceeding 200 meters, or a transformer input exceeding 1 kilowatt, except by special authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor contained in the license of the station.

"SPECIAL RESTRICTIONS IN THE VICINITIES OF GOVERNMENT STATIONS.

"Sixteenth. No station of the character mentioned in regulation 15 situated within 5 nautical miles of a naval or military station shall use a transmitting wave length exceeding 200 meters or a transformer input exceeding one-half kilowatt.

"SHIP STATIONS TO COMMUNICATE WITH NEAREST SHORE STATIONS.

"Seventeenth. In general, the shipboard stations shall transmit their radiograms to the nearest shore station. A sender on board a vessel shall, however, have the right to designate the shore station through which he desires to have his radiograms transmitted. The station on shipboard shall then wait until such shore station shall be the nearest. If this can not be done, the wishes of the sender are to be complied with only if the transmission can be effected without interfering with the service of other stations.

"LIMITATIONS FOR FUTURE INSTALLATIONS IN VICINITIES OF GOVERNMENT STATIONS.

"Eighteenth. No station on shore not in actual operation at the date of the passage of this act shall be licensed for the transaction of commercial business by radio communication within 15 nautical miles of the following naval or military stations, to wit: Arlington, Va.; Key West, Fla.; San Juan, P. R.; North Head and Tatoosh Island, Wash.; San Diego, Cal.; and those established or which may be established in Alaska and in the Canal Zone; and the head of the department having control of such Government stations shall, so far as is consistent with the transaction of governmental business, arrange for the transmission and receipt of commercial radiograms under the provisions of the Berlin convention of 1906 and future international conventions or treaties to which the United States may be a party, at each of the stations above referred to, and shall fix the rates therefor, subject to control of such rates by Congress. At such stations and wherever and whenever shore stations open for general public business between the coast and vessels at sea under the provisions of the Berlin convention of 1906 and future international conventions and treaties to which the United States may be a party shall not be so established as to insure a constant service day and night without interruption, and in all localities wherever or whenever such service shall not be maintained by a commercial shore station within 100 nautical miles of a naval radio station, the Secretary of the Navy shall, so far as is consistent with the transaction of governmental business, open naval radio stations to the general public business described above, and shall fix rates for such service, subject to control of such rates by Congress. The receipts from such radiograms shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SECRECY OF MESSAGES.

"Nineteenth. Every operator shall be obligated in his license to preserve, and shall preserve faithfully, the secrecy of radiograms which he may receive or transmit; and for failure to preserve such secrecy his license may be canceled.

"PENALTIES.

"For violation of any of these regulations, subject to which a license under sections 1 and 2 of this act may be issued, the owner of the apparatus shall be liable to a penalty of $100, which may be reduced or remitted by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; and for repeated violations of any of such regulations, which shall be deemed a misdemeanor, the license may be revoked as provided in section 1.

"For violation of any of these regulations, subject to which a license under section 3 of this act may be issued, the operator shall be subject to a penalty of $25, which may be reduced or remitted by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; and for repeated violations of any such regulations, which shall be deemed a misdemeanor, the license may be suspended as provided in section 3.

"SEC. 5. That every license granted under the provisions of this act for the operation or use of apparatus for radio communication shall prescribe that the operator thereof shall not willfully or maliciously interfere with any other radio communication. Such interference shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof the owner or operator, or both, shall be punished by a fine of not to exceed $500 or imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.

"SEC. 6. That the expression 'radio communication' as used in this act means any system of electrical communication by telegraphy or telephony without the aid of any wire connecting the points from and at which the radiograms, signals, or other communications are sent or received.

"SEC. 7. That a person, company, or corporation within the jurisdiction of the United States shall not knowingly utter or transmit, or cause to be uttered or transmitted, any false or fraudulent distress signal or call, or false or fraudulent signal, call, or radiogram of any kind. The penalty for so uttering or transmitting a false or fraudulent distress signal or call shall be a fine of not more than $2,500, or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each and every such offense; and the penalty for so uttering or transmitting, or causing to be uttered or transmitted, any other false or fraudulent signal, call, or radiogram shall be a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each and every such offense.

"SEC. 8. That a person, company, or corporation shall not use or operate any apparatus for radio communication on a foreign ship in territorial waters of the United States otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of sections 4 and 7 of this act, and so much of section 5 as imposes a penalty for interference. Save as aforesaid, nothing in this act shall apply to apparatus for radio communication on any foreign ship.

"SEC. 9. That the trial of any offense under this act shall be in the district in which it is committed, or in any district in which the offender may be found, or if the offense is committed upon the high seas or out of the jurisdiction of any particular State or district, the trial shall be in the district where the offender may be found or into which he shall be first brought.

"SEC. 10. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of January, 1913: Provided, however, That the fourth, fifth, seventh, and ninth sections of this act shall take effect and be in force on and after four months after its passage."

The committee recommends the passage of the bill as amended in the belief that it is a practical measure to help accomplish five important results for the general good of the people of the United States, for the greater safety of life and property at sea, for the national defense, and for the orderly and scientific development of an instrumentality of human progress and civilization. This conclusion has been reached after three months' study of the subject by such time as the members of the full committee could devote to it and by patient hearings by a subcommittee of all interests concerned. The hearings have been printed. During the same period the Senate Committee on Commerce and a subcommittee of that committee have been holding similar hearings and have reached substantially the same conclusions as has your committee in the bill recommended herewith.

The principal purposes of the bill are:

First. To prevent the establishment of a monopoly in the United States by any private corporation in the use of radio communication, or "wireless telegraphy," as it is popularly called. The attempt to establish such a monopoly on a world-wide scale led the maritime nations of the world in 1906 to join in an international agreement, and there is reason to apprehend that an attempt to establish such a monopoly is at least contemplated in the United States.

Second. To promote the most general use of this means of communication without interruption (or "interference," as it is technically called), and thus to insure the full measure of usefulness both to the Government wireless stations, for the establishment of which Congress has voted large sums of money, and to such stations as have been established by commercial enterprise. In the present state of the development of wireless telegraphy such interruptions or "interference" can be prevented only by the observance of regulations which can be framed and carried out only by the exercise of the power of Congress "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States."

Third. To give the greatest efficacy to the distress calls of vessels at sea and thus enhance the usefulness of a powerful agency for the preservation of human life.

Fourth. To bring the United States into accord with the advance other nations have already made in the use and regulation of radio communication and to carry out the provisions of the Berlin Radiotelegraphic Convention, to which, by the action of the Senate of the United States on April 3, the United States became a party and by which we are honorably bound to carry out in legislation the necessary measures to execute that convention. While the Congress of the United States may to-day be thankful that it was the first parliamentary body to require by the act of June 24, 1910, wireless apparatus and operators on ocean passenger steamships, we must own that in the regulation of radio communication to render it effective we are as yet behind other maritime nations. This bill will bring the United States abreast of all, and in some particulars (pure and sharp wave) in advance of all.

Fifth. To insure to the people of the United States an uninterrupted wireless service 24 hours a day for every day in the year between vessels at sea and the entire Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coast lines of the United States and the outlying territories of Porto Rico, the Canal Zone, Hawaii, and Alaska. (A Government system of radio communication for the Philippines has already been established.)

Radio communication is the art of transmission of signals by electrical energy between two points which are not connected by wire or other metallic conductor. The signals are produced by a key like the telegraph operator's key, and consist of dots and dashes of the Morse system, and they are received by a receiver adjusted to the ear like a telephone receiver. Instead of a wire the transmission is effected by means of waves through the ether which travel with the rapidity of light. These waves travel with equal force in all directions from the center just as when a pebble is dropped in a pond undulations extend equally in all directions from the point where it is dropped. Consequently, the signals will be audible to the listener with a receiver at his ear wherever he may stand on the circumference of a circle of which the center is the sending station. This fact is mentioned to show the liability to "interference" with the hearing of messages by wireless telegraphy (or "radiograms") unless the system of sending out and receiving messages is subject to regulation. According to the electrical power used to produce the dots and dashes (which is expressed in kilowatts or in fractions thereof), and according to the adjustment of the apparatus, these waves through the ether may be sent at varying lengths, the lengths ordinarily in use ranging from 100 meters to upward of 6,000 meters for the most powerful apparatus. Roughly speaking, the receiving apparatus and the sending apparatus, to get the clearest results, should be adjusted to the same wave length.

Without referring to the early experiments and history of radio communication, which involve the question of patent rights now pending, it will suffice for practical purposes to state that these waves were experimentally applied for practical telegraphic purposes in 1895 by Marconi, who succeeded in transmitting messages a distance of 2 miles. At the present time messages are sent across the Atlantic by wireless, and the new naval wireless-station building at Arlington will be able to communicate directly with a similar station at the Canal Zone.

The corporations formed abroad to make use of the inventions of Marconi endeavored at the outset to establish a complete monopoly of this system of communication. To carry out this purpose exclusive contracts with governments were sought, and in addition the company undertook to establish a rule that ship or shore stations equipped with Marconi apparatus would not communicate with any other of the several systems already fairly developed. This attitude on the part of the company led to the calling of a preliminary international conference at Berlin in 1903, in which the United States participated. The preliminary conference was followed by a second conference at Berlin in 1906, at which some nations were represented by delegates with plenary power. Although the delegates of the United States were authorized to act only ad referendum, they took an important part in framing the international radio-telegraphic convention.

The principal features of the Berlin convention designed to prevent the establishment of a monopoly are to be found in article 3 of the convention, which reads:

"The coastal stations and the stations on shipboard shall be bound to exchange wireless telegrams without distinction of the wireless-telegraph system adopted by such stations."

And in article 1 of the supplementary agreement, brought about mainly through the efforts of the delegates of the United States, which reads as follows:

"Each station on shipboard referred to in article 1 of the convention shall be bound to correspond with any other station on shipboard without distinction of the wireless-telegraph system adopted by such stations, respectively."

The principle of interchangeability between systems was partially affirmed by Congress in the act of June 24, 1910, to require apparatus and operator for radio communication on ocean steamers in section 2, which reads:

"That for the purpose of this act apparatus for radio communication shall not be deemed to be efficient unless the company installing it shall contract in writing to exchange, and shall, in fact, exchange, as far as may be physically practicable, to be determined by the master of the vessel, messages with shore or ship stations using other systems of radio communication."

This bill, in the eleventh regulation (intercommunication, p. 8), establishes this principle in the following comprehensive language:

"Eleventh. Each shore station open to general public service between the coast and vessels at sea shall be bound to exchange radiograms with any similar shore station and with any ship station without distinction of the radio systems adopted by such stations, respectively, and each station on shipboard shall be bound to exchange radiograms with any other station on shipboard without distinction of the radio systems adopted by each station, respectively."

The section applies to stations open to general public service on the coast and to stations on vessels at sea. It does not, of course, apply to stations exclusively devoted to scientific experiments, to amateur stations, or to private commercial stations which a corporation may establish to maintain communication on its own business between the shore and its ships, such as the stations maintained by the United Fruit Co., to direct its ships where and when to load or unload bananas, and similar purely local communications.

The most important benefit conferred upon mankind by the Berlin convention, as has been repeatedly demonstrated since its adoption generally by nations, is found in the ninth article:

"Wireless-telegraph stations are bound to give absolute priority to calls of distress from ships, to similarly answer such calls, and to take such action with regard thereto as may be required."

The pending bill directly in the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth regulations and indirectly in all the other regulations except the nineteenth is aimed to give efficiency to the article of the Berlin convention just quoted. The particular provision in the bill relating to distress signals applies to all stations whether Government commercial stations open to public service, private commercial stations, scientific stations, or amateurs, and reads as follows:

"Ninth. All stations are required to give absolute priority to signals and radiograms relating to ships in distress; to cease all sending on hearing a distress signal; and, except when engaged in answering or aiding the ship in distress, to refrain from sending until all signals and radiograms relating thereto are completed."

To prevent "interference" the Berlin convention in article 8 provided:

"The working of the wireless-telegraph stations shall be organized as far as possible in such a manner as not to disturb the service of other wireless stations."

And to give effect to this article various regulations were attached to the convention and were recently ratified by the Senate, providing, among other things, in regulation 2 that—

"Two wave lengths, one of 300 meters and the other of 600 meters, are authorized for general public service, and additional wave lengths not to exceed 600 meters or in excess of 1,600 meters."

The intervening wave lengths from 600 to 1,600 meters were reserved by the Governments which participated in the convention, for the use of Government stations. These principles are incorporated in the pending bill.

To carry out the Berlin convention and to give effect to its provisions and regulations it was agreed a system of licensing both stations on shipboard and shore stations open to public business, as well as operators, was necessary.

SECTION 1.

The first section of the bill defines its scope within the commerce clause of the Constitution, and requires all wireless stations, ship and shore, public and private, to be licensed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. This section does not give the head of that department discretionary power over the issue of licenses, but in fact provides for an enumeration of the wireless stations of the United States and on vessels under the American flag. The license system proposed is substantially the same as that in use for the documenting upward of 25,000 merchant vessels.

SECTION 2.

The second section recites the particulars of the license and the station, limits the issue of such licenses to American citizens or corporations organized under the laws of some State of the United States, and gives the President power to close or take possession of such stations in time of war or public peril.

SECTION 3.

The third section requires the license of all operators by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and restricts the issue of operators' licenses to citizens of the United States. The license of the operator as well as the license of the apparatus itself are subject to regulations, which are set forth in section 4 of the bill.

The second and third sections of the bill, and particularly the fourth section, cover numerous details which in the judgment of some Members of the House possibly should have been left to administrative regulation. The committee, however, after careful consideration, has decided to adopt the principle in these sections of expressing in the statute itself precise limitations upon the powers of administrative officers and a precise statement of the obligations which must be assumed by commercial interests and individuals in taking out licenses for stations or as operators. To follow out this principle in some of the regulations, and in the fourth section of the bill in particular, it has been necessary to employ some abstruse scientific terms because the limitations can not be expressed in popular language. These limitations are as much for the benefit of commercial stations as they are for Government stations and do not bear more severely upon one than upon the other. Their aim is to require the use of apparatus which shall secure to the people of the United States the most satisfactory and efficient service. The committee has not felt under any obligation to frame a bill for the protection of antiquated and inadequate apparatus. If such apparatus were harmless, there would be no objection to its use; but when it stands in the way of the use of improved apparatus involving very little additional expense, the committee has preferred to say directly in the bill that improved apparatus shall be used rather than to leave such a question to an administrative officer. The first of the international service regulations provides as follows:

"The choice of wireless apparatus and devices to be used by the coastal stations and stations on shipboard shall be unrestricted. The installation of such stations shall as far as possible keep pace with scientific and technical progress."

The United States should at least keep abreast of this international prescription.

The committee has carefully considered the objection by one or two corporations that the bill will delay scientific progress and has rejected it. Practically all other nations are subject to the regulations of the Berlin convention, yet the scientific development of this art has been at least as rapid in Europe as in America. Similar objections have been raised repeatedly abroad and as often have been rejected and shown to be without warrant. The objection is really an objection to any regulation by Congress. To forestall, however, the possibility of unforeseen or undeveloped improvement, the bill at page 5 provides:

"The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, in his discretion, waive the provisions of any or all of these regulations when no interference of the character above mentioned shall ensue."

SECTION 4.

The purpose of the regulations of this section as set forth in the first paragraph are: First, the general prevention of interference between stations of all kinds; second, to facilitate all communications by following rules and regulations taken from the Berlin convention; and, third, making special arrangements to further the receipt of distress signals, especially by Government stations which are ordinarily best qualified for getting aid to a vessel in distress on account of well-known Government activities along those lines. The regulations apply to all commercial, experimental, and amateur stations, with the exceptions of regulations 13, 14, and 18, in which Government stations are specifically mentioned. All others are already in effect in a comprehensive set of orders issued by the Navy Department, being necessary, as far as they apply, to the proper conduct of the business of naval ships and stations and to set a good example to commercial stations. The Government stations are generally provided with much more expensive and elaborate apparatus than the commercial stations. These regulations were intended to be sufficiently general to enable all installations at present in use to follow them with a small expenditure of money.

The second paragraph gives the Secretary of Commerce and Labor authority to waive any of the regulations when not necessary to enforce them; that is, when apparatus is developed and used at any place where it can not interfere with the work of other stations, it may be independent of all the regulations except certain ones relating to distress calls from sea. An amateur in the interior of the country may get a license by a simple request if its location and characteristics are such as to make it unnecessary to go into details regarding the type and capabilities of the station.

The third paragraph takes care of the experimentation which may be necessary in the development of apparatus.

On page 6 Government stations referred to in the regulations are defined.

First regulation: This requires the use of a definite wave length which a ship will ordinarily use for sending and on which she may be called with the greatest expectation of her hearing the call. The limitation of this wave length to one below 600 meters or one above 1,600 meters is in accordance with regulations 2 and 3 of the Berlin convention. It is expected that some of the provisions of these two regulations will be changed at the London conference, but there is no proposition to extend the range of commercial wave lengths. All nations have agreed to reserve the range from 600 to 1,600 for Government use in order that the least interference between official business and commercial business will be insured. When interfering signals are much stronger than the signals which a certain station is trying to receive, the chances of communicating on different wave lengths without interference are much less, and the interference is dependent directly on the relative strength of the two incoming signals, which, in turn, depends on the relative power or relative distance of the two sending stations and on the difference of wave length used by them. It being a fact that the greater the difference of wave length the closer the stations can work with one another without interference, and it also being a fact that commercial installations usually are not prepared to use more than one wave length for sending, while Government stations are being fitted to quickly change the sending wave length, the wider the range reserved for Government use the more the difference in wave length between those in use for commercial purposes and those for Government purposes in a given locality that can be obtained. For instance, if merchant ships and shore stations are communicating on a 600-meter wave at a given place, a Government station in the same locality would choose a wave length of, say, 1,500 meters. If commercial stations were using 1,600 meters, all Government stations might use sending wave lengths of 1,000 meters or below.

The following should be noted: That all ships are required by the Berlin convention to use 600 meters or below, and these are the wave lengths most easily obtainable on board ship, since they are suitable for the low power ordinarily used on commercial vessels and for the small and light aerials which they ordinarily carry. These wave lengths are also most suitable for ordinary communication between ship and shore. On the other hand, long-distance work oversea and communication overland requires long wave lengths—that is, wave lengths over 1,600 meters.

Second regulation: This specially reserves the wave lengths of 600 to 1,600 for the use of Government stations and gives commercial installations latitude in regard to choice of wave lengths to be used. It requires also that in sending on these wave lengths the apparatus must be carefully adjusted so as to send signals of a noninterfering character.

Third regulation: This is to prevent a sending station monopolizing too great a range of wave lengths when a certain narrow range would serve just as well. A pure wave is one that has a single "hump" shown in its resonance curve. The signals sent out by the ordinary transmitter in this country at present are sent out simultaneously on two or more wave lengths or bands of wave lengths, only one of which can be received. The other represents loss of energy and interference; that is, the receiving operator can set his receiver so as to get certain signals either at 400 meters or at 600 meters when these signals are sent out by the one transmitter. All transmitters can be adjusted to send at a single wave, or a wave with a single "hump," or a "pure" wave, but the operation is rendered more simple if an additional coil, known as an inductance, is furnished with the ordinary ship and shore station set which at present causes the greatest interference. Samples of "double hump" waves may be seen on pages 43 and 44 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Commerce. A pure wave is shown on page 45.

Fourth regulation: This is to require all transmitters to be so adjusted that a certain definite wave length is used, and not a band of wave lengths with more or less indefinite limits. The "broad waves" from a sending station make a number of receivers set for certain distinct wave lengths respond. Sharp waves from a sending station affect one receiver only. Companies operating transmitters not adjusted for sharp waves claim that their work is facilitated because their operators do not have to set their receivers with care. A receiver can be set roughly and the signals received, but since it is possible for any transmitter to be adjusted to send on a definite wave length, the requirement that they should do so tends to the mutual protection of all stations concerned. Pure and sharp waves ordinarily go together, and the adjustment for one, in most circumstances, involves the adjustment for the other. A sharp wave is shown on page 46 of the hearing. The transmitter whose adjustment is shown by curve 3 on page 46 is sending on a definite wave length a little greater than 900 meters in length, and would have to be very close to other receivers to interfere with them if they were trying to receive signals on wave lengths differing very little from 900.

Fifth regulation: By the regulations attached to the Berlin convention the normal wave length for all ships is fixed at 300 meters, and it is desired to specify that distress signals should be sent on that wave. Ships should send distress calls on one wave length so that all stations may know on what wave length to listen for distress calls. As tugs, pilot boats, and small craft generally are not ordinarily fitted with aerials of sufficient size to enable them to send on a wave length of 300 meters an exception is made in their favor.

Sixth regulation: From the Berlin convention.

Seventh regulation: This waives the requirements of the third and fourth regulations in favor of maximum interferences; hence maximum probability of being heard for distress calls.

Eighth regulation: This is to require all ships, except the very small ones, to prepare for sending distress calls over a minimum distance of 100 nautical miles. The expression, "by day," is used on account of the absorption of radio energy by daylight and the reduced daylight ranges of stations as compared with their night ranges resulting therefrom. Since the distance over which signals can be sent and received between two stations depends both for sending and receiving on the effective heights of the aerial wires of the two stations, it was necessary to specify in the last lines that the minimum distance should be between two equal stations. This would result in requiring the minimum distance from the poorest equipped ship, provided she had sufficient height and distance between masts to use a wave length of 300 meters and to permit this distance to be attained.

Ninth regulation: From the Berlin convention.

Tenth regulation: The Berlin convention requires ship installations to use ordinarily not more than 1 kilowatt for communicating with the shore. This regulation is intended to prevent ships unnecessarily interrupting the work of all stations in the neighborhood of great seaports and other places where there is a congestion of wireless business. The term "naval or military station" is used because there are now at all important seaports, with very few exceptions, Government stations which, by this regulation, are themselves protected and protect commercial installations, ship or shore, in their localities. At isolated stations this regulation would prevent unnecessary interruption of the work of the stations concerned, since a ship would ordinarily pass a greater distance offshore than 5 nautical miles, and 1 kilowatt should be sufficient for the ordinary ship to communicate with another or with a shore station over a distance of between 100 and 200 miles by day. One-half kilowatt would ordinarily be good for at least 50 miles over water by day.

Eleventh regulation: This is one of the important basic principles of the Berlin convention and should be put into legislation as early as practicable for that reason.

Twelfth regulation is division of time. Interference can not be prevented by using different wave lengths alone. The power used by the stations in sending and their relative distances from one another are factors. For example, two stations are trying to communicate with each other on a certain wave length. They can do so without interference from other pairs of stations trying to communicate with each other on other wave lengths differing by at least 10 per cent from that used by the first-mentioned stations except when other stations use high power in sending or send out signals when very close to one or both of the two stations first mentioned. The interference with the receiving of one station caused by the sending of another near-by station is the most common, and at all large cities where there are two or more stations operating for governmental or commercial purposes within a few miles of one another, a division of time is necessary. The interference can be avoided sometimes by a very great difference in wave length, sometimes by a difference of wave length and the use of low power by all stations concerned. Otherwise by a division of time. Examples of the necessity of a division of time are afforded by the experience of the navy yards at New York and Philadelphia. These have within a few miles in each of the cities mentioned radio apparatus on the department stores of John Wanamaker, and when these stations are communicating with each other on a wave length of about 1,400 meters neither New York nor Philadelphia can receive from ships of the Navy sending on 600 meters; that is, the near-by interfering stations force oscillations on the receiving aerials of the navy-yard stations, and the more powerful interfering signals drown out the signals desired. It should be noticed that this division of time may be established only when all other means for preventing interference fail. When interference-prevention devices are perfected it will not be necessary to enforce this regulation.

Thirteenth regulation: Government stations to observe division of time. This requires that all Government business must be completed during the first 15 minutes of each hour. No extension provided for except in cases of distress.

Fourteenth regulation: Use of unnecessary power. This is from the Berlin convention.

Fifteenth regulation: Contains general restriction on private stations. This refers to amateurs, of whom there are many thousands in this country.

They would be restricted to comparatively low power and a short wave length which should suffice for all purposes of play or instruction. They would be able to send and receive messages over a large part of a city, depending on the height of the aerial used. Ranges over open country would be greater, and greater still over water. Many operators for commercial and governmental business are being developed by this play. At the same time any amateur who really develops any improvement may be allowed to test same under a special license provided for in the third paragraph at the beginning of section 4.

Sixteenth regulation: Special restrictions in the vicinities of Government stations. This also relates to amateurs and provides for the further reduction in power in the immediate vicinity of a Government station. It is probable that this will not in all circumstances prevent interference with the work of Government stations or commercial stations, but will serve in most cases. Amateurs being mostly schoolboys, they interfere at certain hours regularly.

Seventeenth regulation: Ship stations to communicate with the nearest shore station. This is from the Berlin convention.

Eighteenth regulation: Limitations for future installations in the vicinities of Government stations. The first part of this regulation protects certain naval and military stations from interference by the erection of future commercial stations within 15 nautical miles, as such new stations would compel a division of time in order that the two stations might work without interference. Arlington is mentioned on account of the size and importance of the Arlington station and the nature of its work as the center of the largest system of stations owned by the Government. Two radio stations erected for overland work in the city of Washington have failed on account of lack of business. The Key West station is mentioned specifically because it is a very important point strategically and is now handling, in a very efficient manner, all commercial work of a great number of vessels which pass through the Florida Straits on voyages to Cuba, the Gulf of Mexico, Central America, and the Canal Zone. The United Wireless Telegraph Co. had a station near the Key West naval station with the result that there was constant mutual interference, which was hard to eliminate because a division of time depended on a local agreement only. When the United Wireless station was destroyed the Key West naval station took up the commercial work in order to persuade the United Wireless and other commercial companies not to erect another station on Key West Island, which is too small to accommodate more than one station. Key West may be said to be a frontier station.

San Juan, P. R., is in a very important point strategically for naval purposes. The shipping passing near that port is at present very small, but is expected to be large when the canal opens. It is at present the only radio station on the island of Porto Rico, and it deserves this measure of protection. It is a frontier station.

North Head, Wash., is to be improved at considerable expense during the fall of this year for direct communication with Alaska to cover a possible breakdown of the Washington-Alaskan military cable. Its work at all times will be of such importance that it should not be subjected to a division of time. There is at present a low-powered commercial station at Astoria, about 15 miles distant, but it is hoped that this station will not interfere. The regulation prevents the establishment of more commercial stations within 15 miles.

Tatoosh, Idaho, and San Diego are frontier stations at the northwest and southwest corners of the United States, respectively.

In Alaska the Army has a system of radio stations working in conjunction with its cables and land lines. Of these one is a coast station at Nome, and this station, working with others at St. Michaels and on the Yukon River, eliminate the necessity for a cable between Nome and St. Michaels. Other stations, five in number, have been erected by the Navy Department, and three of them connect the following outlying islands with civilization: Pribilof (Seal Islands), Unalaska (Dutch Harbor), and Kodiak. Two of them cover a portion of the military cable above referred to, viz, that between Cordova and Sitka. A sixth station will be erected this summer on Unalga Island. It will be an important and powerful station. There are a few commercial stations. Most of them work only in summer in connection with the salmon-canning industry. The result is a practical Government monopoly which will hold for many years on account of the fact that operation of commercial stations will be unprofitable for some time except in special circumstances.

In the Canal Zone it is proposed to keep all radio communication in the hands of the Government for the protection of the canal and for the facilitation of the canal business. The Navy proposes to operate a high-power station for direct communication with the Arlington station above mentioned and desires to operate smaller stations in conjunction with those to handle the business of the canal. It already has two stations on the Atlantic side, one of which was erected solely for canal business and the other intended for direct communication with Key West and to handle the business of shipping.

The Navy Department would prefer to open all its coast stations for commercial business under the terms of the Berlin convention, and it is believed that most of this business will eventually be handled by Government stations as the operation of shore stations for communicating with ships at sea is known to be not sufficiently remunerative for commercial enterprise, although various companies may propose to do this for some years yet. The reason for this desire for commercial work is to insure, as far as possible, a continuous flow of work through each naval radio station in order that the personnel and the apparatus may be kept up to the high state of efficiency which comes only from constant use. The Berlin convention requires that the hours of operating of shore stations open for public correspondence between the coast and vessels shall be, as far as practicable, continuous. The average commercial shore station is manned by one, sometimes two, operators and is open during certain hours of the 24 only. Naval coast stations, however, with very few exceptions, have four or five operators and a constant watch is kept day and night for handling of Government business, cases of distress, and in some places commercial business. The last part of regulation 20 allows the Secretary of the Navy to fill in all gaps left by commercial companies. Commercial stations, with the exception of those in the few localities mentioned in the first part of this regulation, may prevent naval stations from handling commercial business by establishing a 24-hour schedule and by working under the Berlin convention. Naval stations are ordinarily 200 miles apart and it would be very easy for a commercial company with sufficient resources to monopolize all the commercial work with ships at sea except in the places specially mentioned, provided they were willing to operate under the terms of the Berlin convention, which requires, among other things, a 24-hour schedule.

Nineteenth regulation: Secrecy of messages. This is required by the Berlin convention and has been urged by commercial concerns at hearings before committees of Congress.

Penalties: The penalties for violation of the regulations are framed according to the method followed in acts of Congress for many years for violations of the navigation laws. For first offenses and minor offenses maximum money penalties are provided, which may be reduced by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in view of extenuating circumstances. Repeated violations involve cancellation of licenses, and are made misdemeanors, and heavy prison sentences are prescribed for malicious interference and false distress calls.

SECTION 5.

Willful or malicious interference is made a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not exceeding $500, or imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or both. (Sec. 60 of the Penal Code of Mar. 4, 1909, provides that anyone who shall interfere with messages over a Government telegraph line shall be subject to a fine of not over $1,000 or not over three years' imprisonment.)

SECTION 6.

Defines radio communication to include telephony when it shall be developed without wires.

SECTION 7.

Makes a false distress call subject to not over $2,500, or imprisonment for not over five years, or both. Any other false or fraudulent signal or message subject to not over $1,000 or imprisonment for not over two years.

SECTION 8.

Foreign ships are already subject to the Berlin radiotelegraphic convention, under which their own nations respectively prescribe penalties for violation of its requirements. This section brings foreign ships within section 4 (certain regulations of this bill not in Berlin convention—3, 4, 8, 10, 16, 20); section 7, false signals; and section 5, penalty for willful interference.

Appendix B gives a discussion on wave lengths and interference, by Lieut. Commander D. W. Todd, United States Navy, who, as representative of the Navy Department at the hearings, has been of great assistance to the committee.

APPENDIX B.—A DISCUSSION OF WAVE LENGTHS AND INTERFERENCE, WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO WAVE LENGTHS MENTIONED IN THE ITERNATIONAL RADIO CONVENTION OF 1906.

[By Lieut. Commander D. W. Todd, United States Navy.]

RECEIVING ONLY INTERFERED WITH.

Any number of stations may send together in a given area, or any number may receive together. The interference of which so much is spoken is experienced by an operator trying to receive from one station while the signals from another are coming in at the same time, jumbling the dots and dashes of the two messages together. The greater the number of stations the greater the confusion. If the signals from two stations which are interfering are of different pitch, a trained operator can read those of one pitch and ignore those of the other. If the desired signals are coming in on a certain wave length and the interfering signals on another, it is possible, under certain restrictions, to so set the receiver (tune it sharply for the wave length desired) to hear the desired signals and cut out the others, or so reduce the strength of the latter as to make them negligible.

COMPARISON BETWEEN WAVE LENGTHS AND TELEPHONE WIRES.

The analogy between the use of different wave lengths for radio communication and the use of several wires for several pairs of telephonic communications is not complete. The ether is more properly one trunk line connecting all stations on which, by means of special apparatus and careful adjustments, multiplex telephony is possible. Every wave length does not mean a possible exclusive wire for conversation between two persons. For a "pure and sharp" wave it would be subject to the following considerations: (1) With the average high-grade apparatus, two signals of equal intensity must differ in wave lengths by 10 per cent to enable one to be received and the other cut out by the adjustments of the receiver. (2) If the interfering signals are considerably louder or stronger than the signals which one wishes to receive, due to the power of the interfering sending set or its relatively short distance away, a greater difference of wave length than 10 per cent is necessary, which difference depends on the relative intensity of the signal desired and the interfering signal; the greater the difference in wave length between the signal desired and the stronger interfering signal the greater the possibility of eliminating the latter.

VARIOUS CONSIDERATIONS INVOLVING WAVE LENGTH.

The shorter the wave length used the easier it is to get the 10 per cent difference of wave length and the greater the number of communications that can go on in a certain region using a certain range of wave lengths.

The higher the power of the apparatus the longer the wave lengths which it can use readily, i. e., short wave lengths are most efficient for low-power sets and communication over relatively short distances, say, up to 200 miles.

Long waves are necessary for sending over land and for sending a great distance over sea by day.

Long waves not only imply, generally, medium or high power sets, but require a greater spread of aerial wire aloft in order to radiate them efficiently. Hence it is more costly to use long waves. The average commercial set is not costly.

Height of aerial increases range of a station both for sending and receiving, irrespective of power.

SUITABILITY OF TWO WAVE LENGTHS FOR WORK WITH SHIPS.

Since short wave lengths are suitable for low powers and can be more readily cut out, and since low powers naturally cause less interference than high powers, and since the ordinary ship set is a low-power set, the maximum of immunity from interference is obtained by using low powers, short wave lengths, and choosing two that are quite far apart. Three hundred meters is a wave length easily obtained by any ship except the smallest. In fact, most ships nowadays use a longer wave length. Both 300 and 600 meters are easily obtained by a low-power shore station, with sufficient range for communicating with ships passing within 200 to 300 miles. The range of these shore stations working over sea would be much greater if it were not for the fact that short waves suffer much more from absorption by the daylight than do the longer waves, i. e., to cover great distances by daylight one must use long waves.

Wave lengths of 300 and 600 meters were chosen as being sufficiently far apart to permit the establishment of shore stations within a reasonable distance of one another. If fitted with average apparatus, stations about 100 miles apart, using different wave lengths, one 300 and one 600, can work positively without mutual interference. With high-grade apparatus the stations could be nearer. It must be remembered that these stations are operated for communication with ships only, and while the receiving by a shore station on 600 meters would not be interfered with by the sending of the next shore station on 300, the position of a ship sending with reference to a shore station receiving must be considered. The greater the difference in wave lengths between that of the station from which it is desired to receive and the interfering station, the closer the interfering ship or station may be to the station trying to receive without preventing the receipt of the message desired. To avoid possible interference from passing ships, the Berlin convention requires ships to send, ordinarily, only to the nearest shore stations and to use the least amount of power necessary to effect satisfactory communication. The coast station likewise reduces its power.

COAST STATIONS NOT LIMITED TO TWO WAVE LENGTHS.

"Nevertheless each government may authorize the use of any coast station of other wave lengths for the purpose of providing a long-distance service, or a service other than that of general public correspondence." At present the Navy is installing at all stations where transmitters of more than ordinary power are working two kilowatt sets for communication with ships within 200 or 300 miles using short-wave lengths.

SHORE STATIONS OTHER THAN COAST STATIONS RESTRICTED ONLY BY GOVERNMENT RANGE OF WAVE LENGTHS.

Stations not engaged in general public service under the rules of the Berlin convention would not be restricted to 300 and 600 meters, nor would they be required to pay any attention to those wave lengths except in case their working should interfere with the coast stations open for international business.

WIDE RANGE OF WAVE LENGTHS RESERVED FOR THE GOVERNMENT.

Leaving aside the question of radiotelegraphy being more important to the Government than to commerce, and the unanimous agreement of foreign nations to reserve wave lengths from 600 to 1,600 for Government use, the wider the range reserved for the Government, the more chance Government installations have not only to increase in number of communications between its units in a given area but to eliminate commercial interference by choosing wave lengths far removed from those being used by neighboring commercial installations. At present the Navy standard calling wave length is 1,000 meters, which is practically in the middle of the Government's range (those chosen with the hope and expectation that the Berlin convention will finally be ratified). It is a little nearer 600 than 1,600 because it is easier to cut out a short wave than a long wave. In other words, a ship of the Navy at a given place would need only 400 meters difference of wave length to cut out in interfering commercial message near the lower half of the Navy's reservation of wave lengths and might need 600 meters to cut out such a message if the interfering signal were sent on a long wave. The ability of Government stations to use wave lengths far removed from those in use by commercial stations protects mutually both classes of stations from each other, and the advantage is equal.

ABILITY OF STATIONS TO CHANGE TRANSMITTING WAVE LENGTH READILY.

On page 129 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, March 1, 1912, it is stated:

"It will thus be evident that while two or more ships can successfully work two or more coast stations without interference if allowed to make their own selections of wave lengths so as not to interfere, it will not be possible under the Berlin convention regulations, as this requires the use of a definite and unvarying wave length by each station. As to what would happen in New York Harbor, where a number of stations are established at present, if compelled to work on the prescribed wave lengths—all on one or the other of the two—can best be judged by the character of conversation that results when one's telephone conversation is broken into by the exchange putting in a third party."

The inference is that ships and stations are at present fitted so that they can send any one of a certain range of wave lengths at short notice. While sets of the most modern type do permit this, especially those ordered for the Navy, the ordinary commercial ship and shore station set is more or less inaccurately adjusted for sending one single wave length or band of wave lengths with no provision whatever for changing the wave length or "tune" on which the signals are sent. Receivers, on the other hand, can be very quickly and easily adjusted to any wave length over a wide range. This is the case six years after the Berlin convention was signed, but it is proposed to require stations to be able to send on two or more wave lengths, the matter to be taken up at the London convention. The Berlin convention regulated radiotelegraphy as they found it at that time, and the ratification of the Berlin convention and any legislation for regulation of radiotelegraphy must deal with the subject as we find it to-day, i. e., while it is recognized that a tremendous difference would result from requiring every station, ship and shore, to have high-grade apparatus furnished by certain manufacturing companies, the rights of the greatest operating companies can not be entirely ignored. Certain improvements of their apparatus will be necessary in any event, but to require quick-change features for all transmitters would mean to legislate a great deal of commercial apparatus out of existence. It is extremely difficult for the Navy Department to find the money to modernize quickly its installations and to fit all transmitters for quick change of sending wave length.

OPERATION OVERLAND.

In the hearings the representatives of certain commercial interests frequently refer to the use of radiotelegraphy for overland communication, and it has been stated that they propose to compete with land lines between important points, and have had some negotiations with railroads for breakdown service—when land wires are down through stress of weather or ordinary telegraphic communication is interrupted by strikes. Reference to this working overland is usually connected with the subject of the use of two wave lengths only, i. e., the coast-station wave length of the wireless convention, 300 and 600 meters, and the idea of the wireless confusion in a large city like New York, where a number of commercial concerns are working. It is well known that long wave lengths are necessary for working overland, and there is nothing in the Berlin convention or in pending legislation which would prevent this overland work, provided that the work of stations open to public business with ships at sea or that of Government stations would not be interferred with. The use of wave lengths above 1,600 meters would minimize the chance of interference with the short-wave work of coast stations and ships.

SITUATION IN AND AROUND A LARGE SEAPORT LIKE NEW YORK.

Attempt has been made to bring out with emphasis at the hearings that a number of stations can work together within a relatively small area without interference only under one of the following conditions: (1) That all stations use low power, are as far from each other as possible, and use wave lengths as far apart as possible; (2) that if much power is used in sending, the stations must observe a division of time, i. e., one must not send while others are trying to receive from a distant station; (3) that each station is provided with a heterodyne receiver, promised in 1908 when this subject of ratification was under consideration and now said to be developed by the National Electric Signaling Co., which receiver, should it become a commercial possibility, would have to be purchased from that company. Should this instrument be perfected, all stations in congested areas would have to have them, because the stations provided with them would not have to pay much attention to the transmitting wave lengths used except to keep them definite (sharp and pure) and constant. They would be more or less independent of the length of the wave and it would not have to be chosen with reference to those used by surrounding stations—that is, chosen with much care. A very slight difference would suffice.

THE WOOL SCHEDULE (H. DOC. NO. 903.)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

On December 20, 1911, I sent a message to the Congress, recommending a prompt revision of the tariff on wool and woolens. I urged a reduction of duties which should remove all the excesses and inequalities of the schedule, but should leave a degree of protection adequate to maintain the continued employment of machinery and labor already established in that great industry. With that message I transmitted a report of the Tariff Board, which furnished for the first time the information needed to frame a revision bill of this character, and recommended that legislation should be at once undertaken in the light of this information.

Despite the efforts which have been made to discredit the work of the Tariff Board, their report on this schedule has been accepted, with scarcely a dissenting voice, by all those familiar with the problems discussed, including active representatives of organizations formed in the interest of the public and the consumer. Importers and merchants, as well as producers and manufacturers, have testified to the accuracy and impartiality of these findings of fact. For the first time in the history of American tariffs the opportunity has been afforded of securing a revision based on established facts, independent both of the ex parte statements of interested persons and the guesswork of political theorists.

My position has been made perfectly plain. I shall stand by my pledges to maintain a degree of protection necessary to offset the difference in cost of production here and abroad, and will heartily approve of any bill reducing duties to this level. Bills have been introduced into Congress, carefully framed and based on the findings of the Tariff Board, which, while maintaining the principle of protection, have provided for sweeping reductions. Such a bill was presented by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, which, while providing protection to the woolgrower, reduces the duty on most wools 20 per cent, and the duties on manufactures by from 20 to more than 50 per cent, and gives in many instances less net protection to the manufacturer than was granted by the Gorman-Wilson free-wool act of 1894.

Instead of such a measure of thorough and genuine revision, based on full information of the facts, and with rates properly adjusted to all the different stages of the industry, there is now presented for my approval H. R. 22195, "An act to reduce the duties on wool and the manufactures of wool," a bill identical with the one which I vetoed in August, 1911, before the report of the Tariff Board had been made. The Tariff Board's report fully and completely justifies my veto of that date. The amount of ad valorem duty necessary to offset the difference in the cost of production of raw wool here and abroad varies with every grade of wool. Consequently, an ad valorem rate of duty adjusted to meet the difference in the cost of production of high-priced wools is not protective to low-priced wools. In any case, the report of the Tariff Board shows that the ad valorem duty of 29 per cent on raw wool, imposed in the bill now submitted to me, is inadequate to meet this difference in cost in the case of four-fifths of our total wool clip. The disastrous effect upon the business of our farmers engaged in wool raising can not be more clearly stated. To maintain the status quo in the wool-growing industry, the minimum ad valorem rate necessary, even for high-grade wool in years of high prices, would be 35 per cent.

The rate provided in this bill on cloths of all kinds is 49 per cent. The amount of net protection given by this rate, in addition to proper compensation for the duty on wool, depends on the ratio between the cost of the raw material and the cost of making the cloth. The cost of the raw material in woolen and worsted fabrics varies in general from 50 per cent to 70 per cent of the total value of the fabric. Consequently, the net protective duty, with wool at 29 per cent, would vary from 28.7 per cent to 34.5 per cent. In the great majority of cases these rates are inadequate to equalize the difference in the cost of manufacture here and abroad. This is especially true of the finest goods involving a high proportion of labor cost. One of the striking developments of the last few years has been the growth in this country of a fine goods industry. The rates provided in this bill, inadequate as they are for most of the cloths produced in this country, would make the continuance here of the manufacture of fine goods an impossibility.

Even more dangerous in their effects are the rates proposed on tops and yarns. Tops are the result of the first stage in the making of raw wool into cloth. Yarn is the result of the second stage. Taken in connection with a rate of 29 per cent on wool, and 49 per cent on cloths, the rates of 32 per cent on tops and 35 per cent on yarn, fixed in this bill, seem impossible of justification. They would disrupt, and to no purpose, the existing adjustment, within the industry, of all its different branches. It is improbable in the highest degree that raw wool would be imported in great quantities when the cloth maker can import his tops at a duty of 32 per cent and yarns at a duty of 35 per cent. The report of the Tariff Board shows the difference in relative costs to be uniformly greater than the amount of protection on yarns given by this bill. In a year of low prices, the net protection granted by the proposed rates would not be more than half the difference in costs. The free-wool act of 1894 gave a protective rate of 40 per cent on all yarns over 40 cents a pound in value, with free raw material. The present bill gives only 35 per cent on such yarns with a duty of 29 per cent on the raw material. The great increase in the imports of tops and yarns which would result from the rates in the bill now submitted to me, would destroy the effect of the protection to raw wool and at the same time would be at the cost of widespread disaster to the wool-combing and spinning branches of the industry. The last 15 years has witnessed a great growth of top making and worsted spinning in this country, and the capacity of the plants is now equal to domestic requirements. Under the rates proposed such plants could be continued, if at all, only by writing off most of the investment as a net loss and by a reduction of wages. To sum up, then, most of the rates in the submitted bill are so low in themselves that if enacted into law the inevitable result would be the irretrievable injury to the wool-growing industry, the enforced idleness of much of our wool-combing and spinning machinery, and of thousands of looms, and the consequent throwing out of employment of thousands of workmen.

In view of these facts, in view of the platform upon which I was elected, in view of my promise to follow and maintain the protective policy, no course is open to me but to withhold my approval from this bill. I am very much disappointed that such a bill is a second time presented to me. I have inferred from the speeches made in both the House and the Senate that the members of the majority in both Houses are deeply impressed with the necessity of reducing the tariff under the present act on wool and woolens; that they do not propose to stand on the question of the amount of reduction or to insist that it must be enough necessarily to satisfy the principle of tariff for revenue only, but that they are willing to accept a substantial reduction in the present rates in order that the people might be relieved from the possibility of oppressive prices due to excessive rates. I strongly desire to reduce duties, provided only the protection system be maintained and that industries now established be not destroyed. It now appears from the Tariff Board's report and from bills which have been introduced into the House and the Senate that a bill may be drawn so as to be within the requirements of protection and still offer a reduction of 20 per cent on most wool and of from 20 per cent to 50 per cent on cloths. I can not act upon the assumption that the controlling majority in either House will refuse to pass a bill of this kind, if in fact it accomplishes so substantial a reduction, merely because members of the opposing party and the Executive unite in its approval. I therefore urge upon Congress that it do not adjourn without taking advantage of the plain opportunity thus substantially to reduce unnecessary existing duties. I appeal to Congress to reconsider the measure, which I now return, without my approval, and to adopt a substitute therefor making substantial reductions below the rates of the present act, which the Tariff Board shows possible, without destroying any established industry or throwing any wage earners out of employment, and which I will promptly approve.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1912.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the usual course in a veto message is either to take it from the Speaker's desk and pass it at once or to refer it to the committee from which it originally came, but in this instance, as a number of Members who may probably desire to vote on this message if it is taken up to pass it over the President's veto are not present, I would prefer to let it go over until some day next week. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the veto message may remain on the Speaker's table, to be called up at a later date, and that it be printed in the RECORD and as a document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the message and bill lie on the Speaker's table and that the message be printed as a document and in the RECORD.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I would ask if the gentleman from Alabama would give this side of the House the courtesy of at least a day's notice before it is brought up?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I can not promise that. I will say to the gentleman that I will if I can. The reason I can not promise it is because we have conference reports coming in here all of the time, and it is toward the end of the session, and I have to take this bill up when I can. If I had the opportunity, I would be very glad to comply with the gentleman's request.

Mr. HILL. Of course it can be taken up now, but I understand that the reason it is not is because Members on that side of the House are not present. The same courtesy that would be shown to Members on that side of the House, it seems to me, ought to be shown to Members on this side, that we might at least have reasonable notice as to when it would come up.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we will try to have notice on both sides, for the rest of the session, as gentlemen will be requested to be here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that if I have the opportunity to do so I will give notice, but I shall not bind myself to do so, because I do not know what the exigencies of public business will require me to do otherwise.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the message and bill will lie on the Speaker's table and the message will be printed in the RECORD and as a separate document.

EFFICIENCY OF PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 6453) to amend an act entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," approved March 3, 1899, a similar House bill, H. R. 24225, having been favorably reported by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 6453, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States, approved March 3, 1899, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That should it be found at the end of any fiscal year that the retirements pursuant to the provisions of law now in force, the voluntary retirements provided for in this act, and casualties are not sufficient to cause the average vacancies enumerated in section 8 of this act, the Secretary of the Navy shall, on or about the 1st day of April of each year, convene a board of five rear admirals on the active list and shall place before said board for its actual consideration and guidance the complete service and medical records of all the officers in the grades of captain, commander, lieutenant commander, and lieutenant.

"Each member of said board shall swear or affirm that he will, without prejudice or partiality, examine the records provided for in this section, having in view the special fitness of officers and the efficiency of the naval service, and that he will faithfully perform the duties imposed upon him by this act and recommend for retirement the officers who are shown to be least efficient as evidenced by these records, and arrange the names of said officers in inverse order of their merit. The board shall keep minutes and a complete record of its proceedings, and this record shall bear the certificate of the senior member of the board, and of the recorder if there shall be anyone serving as such, that it is a complete and a true record, and the findings shall be in writing, signed by all the members, not less than four governing. The record of the proceedings and finding of this board shall be transmitted to the President on or before May 1 of the current year, who shall select from the names submitted by the board the number of officers provided by this act for retirement. In order to provide for discretionary action on the part of the President, the board shall select two officers from each grade in addition to the maximum number from each grade that may be retired during any one year, as hereafter provided for.

"The President shall, as soon after June 30 as may be practicable, make by order the transfers of such a number of officers from the list herein provided for as will cause the necessary vacancies in compliance with section 8 of this act: Provided, That not more than five captains, four commanders, four lieutenant commanders, and two lieutenants are so retired in any one year: Provided further, That the President shall, through the Navy Department, immediately after the finding of the board shall be submitted to him, and not later than May 1, or as soon thereafter as practicable, notify the officers who have been recommended for retirement by said board, and offer to each the opportunity to submit in writing for the President's consideration any matters tending to show cause why such officer should not be retired: Provided further, That no officer whose name appears on the list as submitted to the President by said board shall be eligible for voluntary retirement pending the action of the President in the premises. The promotions to fill the vacancies thus created shall date from the 30th of June of the current year: And provided further, That any officer retired under the provisions of this section shall be retired with the rank and three-fourths the pay of the grade from which he was retired."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill on the Speaker's table, Senate bill 6453, is not similar to the House bill on the calendar, and that the House bill on the House Calendar is on the improper calendar, and should be on the Union Calendar, and hence it is not in order to take this bill from the Speaker's table at all.

The SPEAKER. The second objection could be very easily remedied, but the first, if it turns out to be correct, can not.

Mr. MANN. The second could not either, Mr. Speaker, if the bill is improperly on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That could be very easily remedied, but the first objection can not be, if it turns out to be the fact.

Mr. MANN. The second objection might be remedied by transferring the bill from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar, but that would not permit this bill to be taken up.

The SPEAKER. Wherein does this bill differ from the House bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am about to call it to the attention of the Speaker. This bill coming from the Senate is similar to a bill which was introduced in the House and which was reported to the House with a number of amendments. This bill does not contain the amendments recommended by the Naval Committee on the House bill. I contend that, under the rule, if a bill is introduced in the House and the committee recommends a lot of amendments which changes to a large extent the bill, and that then the Senate passes a bill like the original bill, without the amendments, it is not a bill similar to the bill on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman what happened to the House bill with the committee amendments? Did the House ever pass it?

Mr. MANN. The House has not acted upon it. The committee recommended certain amendments.

The SPEAKER. Did the committee report the House bill with those amendments?

Mr. MANN. It did.

The SPEAKER. And the Senate bill leaves out those amendments?

Mr. MANN. It does.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, because that rule is a pretty close one. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Texas, if he has anything to say.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the rule is that if the House bill is substantially the same as the Senate bill then we have a right to call up the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule to the gentleman:

> But House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. It says substantially the same.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but both of these things must be taken together.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will call the Speaker's attention to an amendment or two and see whether that makes any difference in the bill. Here is one amendment reported by the House to be inserted:

> In the event the President should decide that any one or more officers recommended for retirement should not be retired he shall reconvene the board, which shall proceed as in the first instance, and recommend for retirement the names of an officer or officers in lieu of such officer or officers which the President may decide should not be retired: Provided further, That such officer or officers shall be granted the same opportunity to answer as heretofore provided and be given a reasonable time therefor.

I will read another House amendment:

> And in making such selections he shall be governed exclusively by the record of the board and the answer of the officer or officers selected for retirement, and any evidence submitted by such officer or officers in corroboration of such answer, and shall not entertain or consider any other evidence or suggestions from any source whatever.

These amendments go to the very essence of the bill, and they are not in the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken, that that amendment is the essential part of the bill. The rule has two conditions. In the first place, the bill must be substantially the same; and, in the second place, it must be a bill that does not necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. On the latter I call the attention of the Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The first is sufficient.

Mr. MANN. I thought, possibly, that the gentleman might ask that it be put upon the proper calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pou].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be transferred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. HOBSON. Why should it be transferred?

Mr. MANN. It says this—

> That any officer retired under the provisions of this section shall be retired with the rank and three-fourths the pay of the grade from which he was retired.

Mr. HOBSON. That is in the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. It is in both, and it certainly involves a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman realizes they are retired to the grade next higher, and the effect of the bill is not to put a charge upon the Treasury, but to relieve the Government from a charge.

Mr. MANN. It involves a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. HOBSON. It relieves the charge upon the Treasury. I see no objection to changing, but this causes an officer to be retired in a lower rank instead of a higher rank.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it makes any difference. If it says a man's salary shall be reduced from $2,000 to $1,800, it must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will permit, suppose under the existing law an officer were to be paid out of the Treasury, say, a given salary. Suppose under the proposed law that salary should be reduced and would be reduced to a certain extent. That would not be creating an expense on the Government, but it would be a saving to the Government.

Mr. MANN. But it involves a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. HOBSON. I think it is a reduction of a charge upon the Government, a charge already existing and provided for, but I have no objection to the motion that it be transferred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to transfer this bill to the Union Calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. It has been decided over and over again you can not go into a problematical discussion as to whether an item involves a charge on the Treasury or not; it must be shown on its face.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask if it is not in order to-day to consider bills reported from the Committee on War Claims instead of from the Committee on Claims?

The SPEAKER. This is pensions day.

Mr. SIMS. Pension bills not seeming to be pressing, is not the Committee on War Claims in order, since the committee has had a day since the Committee on War Claims?

The SPEAKER. This is one of the Fridays that would be devoted to pensions if there were any pension legislation pending.

Mr. MANN. No committee is privileged to-day—Claims or War Claims. The only privilege is what the committee may give——

The SPEAKER. The committee has a right to fix that matter——

Mr. MANN. When we get into committee.

The SPEAKER. When the House goes into the Committee of the Whole.

ANNIE R. SCHLEY.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 4568) granting a pension to Annie R. Schley.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 4568. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1149).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill S. 4568, "An act granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted, insert the words "one hundred;" and the House agrees to the same.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
WM. A. DICKSON,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
REED SMOOT,
BENJ. F. SHIVELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The conferees on the part of the House on the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on S. 4568 report that the conference agreement fixes the amount of pension to be allowed Annie R. Schley at $100 in place of $150 agreed to by the Senate and $75 agreed to by the House; and the Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted, insert the words "one hundred;" and the House agrees to the same.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. RAINEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will call the first bill.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Are there any bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions or Invalid Pensions or any bills removing political disability or charges of desertion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that there are no bills of that character on the calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2512)——

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to move to take up bills reported from the Committee on Claims on the Private Calendar instead of those reported from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I had recognition of the Chair to make a motion to take up bills reported from the Committee on Claims, and I understand there was no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to take up bills reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SIMS. Of course, Mr. Chairman, it makes no difference, for if that motion is voted down then the other will be in order.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I was going to ask the gentleman, if I may, whether he would not prefer to go through the Private Calendar and take up unobjected bills instead of getting into a discussion of bills earlier on the calendar and never reaching those at the latter end of the calendar.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I then ask unanimous consent that the bills reported from the Committee on Claims be called, and if there is any objection to the consideration of any particular bill that it go over until the unobjected bills have been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that the bills reported from the Committee on Claims be read, and if there is any objection they shall be passed until the unobjected bills are disposed of?

Mr. POU. That is, that any objection to a particular bill will cause that bill to be laid aside until the complete list has been gone through with on the calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will report the first bill.

SNARE & TRIEST CO.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2512) for the relief of the Snare & Triest Co.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Snare & Triest Co. for reimbursement for all losses to them, including damage to pier growing out of a collision by the U. S. S. Colorado on the night of February 9, 1905, at League Island Navy Yard be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the same to judgment: Provided, That the petition is filed within six months from the date of this act.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. I think this bill would take considerable time. I shall have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. POU. I ask that the next bill be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HEIRS OF BENJAMIN S. ROBERTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4125) for the relief of the heirs of Benjamin S. Roberts.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make objection to that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill will be laid aside. The Clerk will report the next bill.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2819) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

GUSTAV A. HESSELBERGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15286) for the relief of Gustav A. Hesselberger.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next one.

G. A. EMBRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 183) for the relief of G. A. Embry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to G. A. Embry, of Estill County, Ky., the sum of $200 in full compensation for services rendered the United States during the War with Spain.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be reported favorably and laid aside for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

CATHERINE RATCHFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4050) for the relief of Catherine Ratchford.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $900 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the relief of Catherine Ratchford, because of the death of her son, James Ratchford, on or about the 7th day of August, A. D. 1895, caused by the injuries received by him on or about the 24th day of July, 1895, while an employee of the United States Government, riprapping on the Missouri River, near Leavenworth, Kans., because of the negligent and careless acts of omission of his foreman in using a rotten and defective rope after he had notice of the same, and after they had promised to replace the same.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with favorable report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the bill be laid aside with favorable report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether they obtained a report from the department, if they know, in reference to this bill. The report does not seem to indicate that there was any inquiry made of the War Department in regard to it.

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman that this is a Senate bill, and it does not appear whether or not there is a favorable recommendation from the department.

Mr. MANN. I am not asking for a favorable recommendation. I think we ought to know from the department whether the accident happened and if they have any record of it.

Mr. HEALD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the subcommittee that had that bill in charge and passed upon it in the Committee on Claims did have a statement from the department covering the accident. It had been reported, and it was the result of the use of a rope that had been reported as defective. The rope parted and caused the death of young Ratchford, and his earnings at that time were stated by the department to be about $900 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, what became of that last bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It was laid aside with favorable recommendation. The Chair did not hear any objection.

Mr. MANN. I did not hear the Chair put the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair put the question.

ESTATE OF JOHANNA S. STOECKLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4189) for the relief of the estate of Johanna S. Stoeckle.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the personal representative of the estate of Johanna S. Stoeckle, late of Wilmington, Del., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,753.99, taxes erroneously collected from said estate under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, on legacies passing by the last will and testament of Joseph Stoeckle, he having deceased prior to the passage of the war-revenue act approved June 13, 1898.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the bill (S. 4189) for the relief of Johanna S. Stoeckle, Private Calendar 77, has already been provided for in H. R. 24699.

Mr. MANN. Has that become a law?

Mr. POU. It passed the Senate, as I am informed. I do not know whether it is a law.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so.

Mr. POU. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY] thinks it has been signed by the President.

Mr. MANN. Was that on the omnibus bill—the bill that was reported recently from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. AINEY. It was not on an omnibus bill. It was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. It was one of those war-revenue payments, and afterwards the Supreme Court decided that the payments were irregular, and in order to take care of a number of claims of similar character the Committee on Claims determined to introduce a general bill permitting all those claims to be paid by the department direct.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks that bill has become a law?

Mr. AINEY. I understand so. I suggest that this bill be passed over.

Mr. POU. I withdraw it, and move that it be laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ESTATE OF ELIZA B. HAUSE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1508) for the relief of the estate of Eliza B. Hause.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the personal representative of the estate of Eliza B. Hause, late of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $342.08, taxes erroneously collected from said estate under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside, with favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside, with favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next bill.

ESTATE OF ANTONIA SOUSA, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2070) for the relief of the estate of Antonia Sousa, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the naval pension fund, to the estate of Antonia Sousa, deceased, late a musician in the Marine Corps of the United States, the sum of $19.50 per month from March 4, 1886, to April 27, 1892, both inclusive, being the amount of allotment granted to the said Antonia Sousa, by the Secretary of the Navy under section 4756, Revised Statutes of the United States, which was wrongfully withheld from him by the former Commissioner of Pensions, and the necessary amount is hereby appropriated out of the naval pension fund.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out in lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 the following words: "The sum of $19.50 per month from March 4, 1886, to April 27, 1892, both inclusive, being the amount of allotment granted to," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the sum of $1,431.25, the total amount found to be due the estate of the pensioner."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. May I ask on what ground the gentleman objects?

Mr. MANN. Yes. The gentleman, of course, knows the case perfectly well. It is to pay the estate of a man a considerable sum of money to which he would be entitled as a pension. That is the strongest side of the case, stating it in favor of the bill. It is claimed that the man while alive was entitled to a pension, which he did not receive, and that the courts had so held in a similar case.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In this particular case?

Mr. MANN. Not as to this particular money. It is proposed to pay the money to the estate of the man. Now, the rule as to all pensions is that when the pensioner dies the estate is not entitled to his accrued pension. The pension is for the support of a man, not for the benefit of his estate. If any pensioner dies, his estate is not entitled to the accrued pension, although it may be only a month's pension. Of course as a matter of fact they get it in the way of burial expenses.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to make a little further explanation?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this money is not, in fact, pension money at all, although it is commonly spoken of as such. This man Antonia Sousa served for a number of years as a musician in the United States Marine Band. Under section 4756 of the Revised Statutes of the United States he was paid a monetary allowance of $19.50 per month for life in lieu of a home in the naval asylum at Philadelphia. The Commissioner of Pensions was directed to pay the same out of the naval pension fund. That is the way it comes to be called pension money, but it is not really pension money at all.

Mr. MANN. I think it is absolutely pension money. It was designed for the support of the man during his life. It is not under the general pension law, that is true.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, if there is to be discussion at this time I suppose it ought to be passed over, but at the proper time I can satisfy the committee that this is not pension money at all.

Mr. MANN. That may be. I should want to take about half an hour to discuss it. Therefore I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be passed. The clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN C. SULLIVAN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 18294) for the relief of John C. Sullivan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to reopen and reaudit the account of John C. Sullivan, of Oswego, N. Y., the contractor for the heating apparatus at Fort Ontario, N. Y., and if it shall appear that an intentional mistake has been made on the part of said Sullivan or on the part of the officers of the War Department, that the amount of the claim found to be justly and equitably due said Sullivan, not exceeding $1,868, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to pay said claim, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "intentional" and insert in lieu thereof the word "unintentional."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 10 and 11, strike out "$1,868" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,108.40."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY W. CARPENTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12476) for the relief of Henry W. Carpenter.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, that is quite a long bill, containing three or four different items, all of which except one have been stricken out by the Committee on Claims. I ask unanimous consent that the bill as amended be read, instead of reading the whole bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill as amended be read and not the whole bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $40.13, the same being the sum to which he was entitled, and which has never been paid, by reason of being compelled to hire quarters out of his private fund while serving the United States naval station, island of Guam, from August 9, 1899, to March 27, 1900, there being no public quarters at that station available for his use.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill as introduced covered a number of items for which this officer desired to be reimbursed. I judge from the action of the committee that it probably gave very careful attention to the subject, because it eliminated all except one item. There is nothing in the report to indicate it. The amount involved is very small, but it seems to me we ought to have something in the RECORD to differentiate this from an ordinary case where a man is entitled either to quarters or commutation of quarters, and the department has control of that matter. What is there in this case which makes it necessary for any legislation to be enacted?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that this man went to the island of Guam. He was ordered there, and there were no quarters there. He had to rent quarters and he was entitled to commutation. That was not paid by the department in the course of business. I do not know why the department did not pay it, but the department now admits that this money is due to this officer.

Mr. MANN. Where is that admission?

Mr. HAY. It was filed with the papers in the case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, it should have been stated in the report, of course. I handled that claim. The gentleman from Virginia is correct. It was recommended by the department that it should be paid now. According to my recollection there were some officers provided for and two or three that were not provided for. This man was among the number that was not provided for. He rented quarters for a small amount.

Mr. MANN. He certainly can not be accused of great extravagance.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. No; the department held at that time that they were not required to furnish quarters other than those provided for, and there happened to be none provided for this man, and he was forced to rent these quarters, this room or two, and he did rent them. Now, the department recommends that he be paid, reversing themselves on the former decision.

Mr. MANN. I think I shall not object to this bill, though it is one of those bills that frequently come before the House where a man is retired from the active service, goes on the retired list, has very little to occupy his mind, gets to thinking over his service, picks up a point of a pin here and a point of a pin there, so as to make a claim against the Government.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that that is not the character of this claimant.

Mr. MANN. That is the character of this claim.

Mr. HAY. This claim was filed before he went on the retired list. He has not got the commutation of quarters that he was entitled to under the law.

Mr. MANN. I will accept the certificate of character offered by the gentleman from Virginia and will not object.

The committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

HARRY S. WADE.

The next business of the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15181) for the relief of Harry S. Wade.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Harry S. Wade the sum of $20,000, in full compensation for injuries received by him on May 16, 1911, while in the performance of his duties as an employee of the United States Government, being a machine driller engaged in drilling holes for blasting in connection with the construction of the Celilo Canal, Columbia River improvement, at Big Eddy, Wasco County, Oreg.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6, page 1, strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five," so that it will read "$5,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentlemen interested in this bill how much they would be willing to put in the bill and pass it?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, this bill is right, in the judgment of the committee, and would suit me as the author of the bill. This young man Wade is a legal resident of the district of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. MANN. I suspected as much.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The committee cut down the amount that I put in the bill.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that surely the amount reported in the bill ought not to be considered as excessive in view of the fact that this man has lost the sight of both eyes, except that he is able to distinguish between night and day. His hearing in both ears is greatly impaired, and, practically speaking, the man is gone—almost dead.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, no amount that we will appropriate will compensate the man for his injury. Recently, in this House, I introduced an amendment to the Panama bill authorizing the President to provide for the adjustment of claims for injuries on the Panama Canal. It was agreed to in the House, and I am happy to say that the Senate overrode the committee, which suggested striking it out, and it remains in the bill.

I am in favor of making compensation to employees. We commenced only two or three years ago to make compensation based on one year's salary. I am perfectly willing to admit that this is wholly inadequate. That was the general law. Then immediately we commenced to have bills brought in to make compensation for one year's salary for accidents occurring before the general law took effect. That lasted for a few months, and then gentlemen commenced to bring in bills providing for a great deal more than one year's salary for accidents that happened before the general law took effect, until now the committee have commenced to bring in bills to compensate the estates of persons who were injured 25 years ago.

Is it to be the policy of Congress now, having adopted a provision to pay one year's salary where a man is injured or loses his life in the service, that because we have entered on that policy we shall go back and pay exorbitant sums to people who were injured a century ago, or a quarter of a century ago? I am not in favor of that and am not willing to accede to it. This, I think, is the largest amount carried in any bill reported by the committee. That the case is a hard case goes without question. In a little while the committee will not distinguish, much less will Congress distinguish, between very hard cases and those that are not very hard. After we commence to pay large sums, in a short time $5,000 will seem small.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the gentleman what amount he would be willing to allow this bill to carry to be considered without objection.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, pending that, I think, if the gentleman will allow, I want to make a brief statement. This young man, Wade, came to Oregon a little over a year ago from Iowa. He went to work on Government work on the Celilo Canal at The Dalles, Oregon River. He was sent to work drilling into a solid bank of rock, and he drilled into an old lode that had been there, I understand, for two years or more. He knew nothing of the danger, but the foreman ought to have known it. An explosion took place, with the result stated by the chairman of the Committee on Claims. He is ruined for life. His sight is gone, both eardrums have burst, and he is a charge on his relatives. Under these same circumstances a suit against a private contractor would result in damages far in excess of $5,000.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFFERTY. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, I will.

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. OLMSTED. It seems that this man drilled into the face of a rock where there had already been a shot placed. Could he not have discovered—must there not have been evidence of a drill hole and that a shot had been placed there before?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Many of these shots were put in from the top, and frequently the man could not see where he was drilling.

Mr. POU. I will say that the report shows that while he was engaged in this work his drill ran into an undischarged shot which had been placed in the rock and which it was supposed had been fired.

Mr. FOWLER. That is called a misshot.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would it not be contributory negligence to drill into an old shot without first finding out whether it had been fired?

Mr. POU. I do not know whether he could ascertain whether it had been fired or not unless he had dug away all the earth.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I can answer that question, because I investigated this matter very carefully.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There was abundant evidence before the subcommittee showing that there was no way in which this man could know anything about the shot hole that had not been fired. There was water pouring over the face of the cliff, and the shot holes had been drilled at an angle, and he had no way of telling that the drill was going into this place at all. The whole committee, after listening to the evidence submitted by the subcommittee, found that he was entirely without fault.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is the amount appropriated by the bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Five thousand dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I was trying to find out what the gentleman from Illinois would consent to agree to—what amount.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we ought to pass any of these claims for more than $2,500, and that would probably be two or three times what this man would have been entitled to under the general law.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, by consent of my colleague I desire to say that in mining it is absolutely impossible for a miner to detect or locate a "missed shot," unless he is familiar with it at the time when it failed to shoot or before the shot was attempted to be exploded, or unless he had been informed of it thereafter. I understand that this was an old hole, which had been in existence for two years, and that it was what is known in mining as a "missed shot." Probably the foreman knew nothing about it, and, so far as I understand, there was no knowledge on the part of this claimant whatever. That being the case, he was absolutely without fault on his part, and had he been working for a master he could have gone into court and recovered a judgment commensurate with the injury he sustained. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the injury is far in excess of the amount which is denominated in this bill.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is the injury?

Mr. FOWLER. Loss of both eyes and the destruction of the drums of both ears.

Mr. LAFFERTY. And he is a young man?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. May I ask what his earnings were?

Mr. FOWLER. A little over $600 a year. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, of the fact that we have not been allowing bills in as great sum as the injury would demand or warrant, but I would be very glad if my colleague would permit this claim to be considered by the committee in the sum of $4,000, under the unfortunate circumstances of the case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think my colleague is in error when he thinks that this man could have gone into a court, if the United States were a private individual, and have recovered anything at all. This was a pure case of accident. I do not think the man was to blame, and neither was the superintendent. Nor was the Government to blame. It is impossible always to know whether a shot has been discharged, and they could not know it in this case. I do not know what the facts may have been, because the committee did not give to the House the information it has secured from the War Department under which this work was being carried on. Doubtless if we had that information complete it would show that no one was really at fault, although the committee intimated that the superintendent was.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. Under the common law is it not the duty of the master not only to examine the place where he requires his servants to work, but to make such an examination as would be reasonable under all the circumstances to discover the danger before he puts the servants to work?

Mr. MANN. Oh, very likely; and I have no doubt that that was done. There is no evidence to the contrary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say that there was evidence before the committee which tended to show that this same foreman, who was engaged on the work at the time this undischarged shot was put in the rock, had knowledge of that fact, but the committee did not undertake to make that finding, not deeming it necessary under the well-known rule of law that it is the duty of the master to provide the servant with a reasonably safe place in which to work.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Where is the evidence that he was not so provided?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is patent to everyone familiar with mining explosions, and all that, that the master does not guarantee against damage by false or premature explosions or the explosion of what was unknown.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Or which he could not foresee.

Mr. MANN. Whether he could foresee it or not. That rule is in force in a thousand places in the country all of the time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, with all due deference to the gentleman, he has not stated it correctly, by a good deal.

Mr. MANN. I expect that is true.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have had experience in laying down this rule, and I would not ever have undertaken to put it in the way the gentleman states it and expect to be sustained by the Supreme Court.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that as far as I am concerned, as the author of the bill, I am willing to have the amendment the gentleman from Illinois suggests voted upon, and I would prefer to have the bill passed at $2,500 than not to have it passed at all.

Mr. MANN. If that is satisfactory to the committee, and that is understood, I am willing that it should be so.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the gentleman will make it $2,500, I shall have no objection, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, the difficulty about making it $2,500 is that the Committee on Claims has a number of other bills here for somewhat similar accidents, and has adopted somewhat the same scale. It would involve not only this bill, but a number of others.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Oh, each case must stand upon its own bottom.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but this is the most aggravated case of all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have seen committees of the House before when nearly every member present had a claim on the calendar, and I know how they vote.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I feel this way about it: If the man gets $5,000, 5 per cent interest upon that sum would just about keep him, give him a very meager support, and he is almost totally blind and helpless. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we ought to give these large sums as long as we have a general law on the statute books which fixes the compensation at one year's salary. I am in favor of the compensation act that is pending before the House. It makes a considerable increase, and I hope when that bill becomes a law gentlemen will not think that because it passed, if it does become a law, that it is to be extended back for 25 or 50 years to the heirs of the children or grandchildren or great-grandchildren of people who were injured years ago.

When the committee has a heart so big—I do not blame the head of the committee for his heart—that is brings in a claim 20 or 25 years old, I think it is my duty to prevent the putting in of large sums of money like this.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I understood the introducer of the bill to say that he was content to reduce the amount to $2,500. Is there any such amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no such amendment pending.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the introducer of the bill did not say $2,500 would be sufficient.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I understood him to say——

Mr. LAFFERTY. I said I would not raise any objection to the amendment, although it was not sufficient in my judgment.

Mr. MANN. Let us be perfectly candid about it. You might skin me on one bill, but you could not on the next bill. If you recommend an amendment of $2,500, then——

Mr. LAFFERTY. I prefer to leave it to Mr. GREEN, as he is a citizen of his district——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And I would leave it to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. POU. We are fully persuaded and emphatically of the opinion this man ought to have $5,000, but if it is to be $2,500 or nothing, of course we agree to the $2,500.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment by striking out the words "five thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two thousand five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "five thousand" and insert the words "twenty-five hundred."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish to say a few words in answer to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said in regard to an exorbitant amount being allowed for this claim. This was a claim of $5,000 for the loss of both eyes, the loss of hearing, and suffering for months, which the gentleman thinks is an exorbitant amount. This committee has never been very liberal in these amounts, but as a rule the amount carried has not been one-fourth of what a jury would allow if the case were presented to a court. It is not one-fourth in this particular case. If I am compelled to accept this amendment, I do it under protest, as I do not think it ought to be done.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] expresses the view that he does not think that the Government is responsible at all for this injury. If that were true, then, Mr. Chairman, it would be the duty of every man in this House not only to vote for the amendment to cut down the amount, but to vote against the bill itself. But, Mr. Chairman, under the evidence of the case as heard before the Committee on Claims and as is revealed here by the report of the Committee on Claims, it is perfectly patent on its face that the Government was exceedingly negligent, and that because of this negligence this young man is now in the unfortunate position of being both blind and deaf. Mr. Chairman, were this case before a court, tried by a jury under the common law of the land, there is no doubt in my mind but what he could recover a judgment at the hands of the jury commensurate with the injury which he has sustained. It is the primary duty of the master to exercise reasonable care to furnish his servant a reasonably safe place in which to work. That is a continuing duty that lasts as long as the relation of master and servant exists, and if the master refuses or neglects to discharge his duty toward his servant in this wise, he is responsible under the law to answer for such damages in whatever sum may be commensurate with the injury which the plaintiff has sustained by virtue of his negligence. The United States in this case stands in the attitude of a master employing its servants to discharge certain duties, and it is evident, Mr. Chairman, that in the performance of these duties, where it is the part of the master to see that the servant has a reasonably safe place to work, it is clear that the Government has not discharged its duty.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Another important legal proposition equally applies to the Government in this case, and that is it is the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care to inform his servant of the danger that is connected with his employment. The master did not do so in this case. Another proposition of law which is equally strong and equally applicable to this case is that it is the duty of the master to see that his servant is not exposed to unreasonable danger in the employment in which he is engaged. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. I desire to ask the gentleman if he thinks that the same duty of the United States to provide a safe place in which to work would apply to soldiers in the Army?

Mr. FOWLER. I do, sir; in so far as the business in which the soldier is engaged.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would the gentleman be in favor of giving the soldier, wounded as badly as this man was, $5,000?

Mr. FOWLER. I would, sir; and I would pay more than $5,000 if it were left to me.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He would get more than that.

Mr. FOWLER. And he would get more, because he would get a pension for life, and now you propose to give this helpless young man $2,500 as complete compensation for his injury.

Mr. OLMSTED. I am not proposing it. I am asking the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, with his long record in this House and his illustrious record from his standpoint of politics, to make an application of this character to this unfortunate young man. He ought to stand here in this House and vote for this bill for $5,000, as was reported from this committee.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman please, I am not opposing this bill; I am favoring the pension of the soldier who gets injured.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, the gentleman can not go any further in that direction than the gentleman from Illinois, because I voted for every bill before this House to pension soldiers, and I do not think there will be one proposed that is too big for me to support here in their behalf, because they saved this country by their devotion, exposing their lives while they were young men in defending the honor of this country, and they ought to be recompensed the balance of their days in a sufficient amount that will take care of them properly during the remainder of their days. [Applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. I would do the same thing for this young man. I would give him $5,000, which is a sufficient sum to give him a very meager support if he could lend it out at the rate of 5 per cent per annum.

Mr. Chairman, I know that my time has expired, and I beg the pardon of the House for having consumed so much time. I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, reducing the amount from $5,000 to $2,500. Is there objection? Without objection, the amendment will be laid aside with favorable recommendation. Is there objection to the bill? If not, it will be laid aside with favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

TRANQUILINO LUNA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19819) to authorize the payment of $2,000 to the widow of the late Tranquilino Luna, in full for his contest expenses in the contested-election case of Manzanares against Luna.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the widow of the late Tranquilino Luna, late a Delegate from the Territory of New Mexico in the Forty-eighth Congress, the sum of $2,000, to be in full for all claims for contest expenses and interest in the election-contest case of Francisco A. Manzanares against the said Luna.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an explanation of the bill made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be passed over. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM F. NORRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3668) for the relief of William F. Norris.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed, on application made by William F. Norris, late first lieutenant, Ninth Infantry, United States Army, to readjust the accounts of said William F. Norris and allow the sum thereon, in accordance with the principle of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Watson case, and to pay him whatever shall be found to be due thereunder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill upon what principle this bill is founded.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who made the report is not here. I know nothing further about it than appears in the report, that—

The claimant herein was an officer in the United States Army, having been appointed a cadet at the United States Military Academy July 1, 1868, and graduated therefrom and was appointed second lieutenant, Ninth United States Infantry, June 14, 1872, and resigned June 15, 1881. This claim is based upon the fact that longevity pay, computed on the basis that his military service began on his entering the Military Academy, was never paid to claimant, to which he is entitled under the rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Court of Claims found to be due the claimant the sum of $1,009.20, and decides that it is an equitable one against the United States, but because same was not filed for prosecution before any court within six years from the time it accrued, it was barred.

Mr. MANN. In that last statement, of course, the opinion of the committee is erroneous, because the Court of Claims does not find anything to be due to anybody in these congressional cases. They find that if Congress should apply a certain rule, then the amount involved would be so much.

It is all based upon this proposition: For many years paymasters of the Army and of the Navy, in computing longevity pay, construed the law to be that a man entered the service when he was commissioned in the Army or in the Navy. Subsequently, some years ago, the Supreme Court, in a case that went to that court, held that the service began when the man was appointed as a cadet—or midshipman, as they now call it—at Annapolis or as a cadet to West Point, and that before a man was commissioned in the Navy he was entitled to five years' longevity pay, which he could not commence to draw until a year after it was due him. That is, he would not be commissioned until six years after the beginning of his service or of his term of instruction at the academy. That is being paid now.

Mr. FOSTER. They are paying this longevity beginning with the entrance to the institution?

Mr. MANN. Yes. The longevity pay as now computed begins with the entrance at the academy, but it had not been so construed since the beginning of the longevity pay.

Now, these officers and the estates of the officers—and there are, of course, hundreds and thousands of them—insist that Congress shall waive the statute of limitations, because they are not able to file claims in the Court of Claims now on account of the statute of limitations. They insist that Congress shall waive the statute of limitations and pay them an amount of money which they did not understand they were to get while they were in the service and which Congress did not understand that we were to pay while they were in the service. No one supposed they were entitled to the amount then, while they were serving.

This particular bill is in behalf of one particular individual. A few years ago there was attached to one of the omnibus claims bills in the Senate page after page of these claims, two or three lines long in each case. Of course, if we are to pay one we ought to pay them all, and if we are to pay them all we ought not to commence by paying only one.

I am saying this for the purpose of directing the attention of the members of the Committee on Claims, because I think these cases have seldom come to the House from House committees. Whenever they have been brought before the House they have been brought by Senate amendments. Some of us in the House have had occasion to look into them a number of times. I think the sentiment of the House is very strongly against reopening all these old claims for the beginning of longevity pay and paying to the estates of these officers if the officers are dead, as most of them are, or to the officers themselves, if they are alive, these amounts based on longevity pay which was not contemplated at the time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, in view of the explanation of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I will ask that the bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be passed over. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM B. TAYLOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21760) for the relief of the estate of William B. Taylor.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $993.60 to pay the legal representatives of William B. Taylor, late of Morehouse Parish, La., for amount due for carrying the mail on routes No. 7987, Arkansas, and No. 8272, Louisiana, in the year 1861.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask for what reason—I do not recall—this man's claim before the Court of Claims was dismissed? Was it owing to the statute of limitations?

Mr. DICKINSON. There is none, except as shown in the report. The report sets out all the facts that the committee had in reference to it.

Mr. MANN. The statement is made twice in the report that Mr. Taylor filed his claim in the Court of Claims, and at the bottom of page 2 of the report it is stated that the claims were dismissed. I presume that was on account of the statute of limitations. It seems by the statement of the auditor that there is a balance due him.

Mr. DICKINSON. The amount shown in the bill appears to be due, as certified by the auditor. All the information that came to the committee is set out fully in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL BUTTER & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20511) for the relief of Samuel Butter & Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse in the sum of $19,732.91 to Samuel Butter & Co., of the city of Boston, Mass., the same being on account of an overpayment by the said Samuel Butter & Co., and in excess of the value of certain condemned property sold and delivered to them by the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask one question, and perhaps two, of the gentleman who introduced this bill.

The claim here is based, largely at least, upon statements made in the book referred to in the specifications, as I understand. This is a claim based upon the proposition that there was not as much copper, and so forth, in the dry dock which was sold at public advertisement, and where the purchaser took it only for the material that was in it, as I understand.

Mr. CURLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. One of the strong claims is for copper bolts, and it was stated in this book, I think, that the copper bolts in this dry dock were 2 feet long and 4⅞ inches in diameter, and that these people bid on the dry dock on the basis of getting a large number of copper bolts 4⅞ inches in diameter, which, of course, would contain a very valuable amount of copper. These people being engaged in this kind of business and certainly knowing something about it I should like to ask the gentleman if anyone has ever heard of a copper bolt 4⅞ inches in diameter? Even I, without any special knowledge upon the subject, as soon as I caught that statement, said to myself, "Nobody makes copper bolts of that size. That is clearly an error." No one ever heard of a copper bolt 2 feet in length and 4⅞ inches or nearly 5 inches in diameter, a copper bolt nearly one-quarter as thick as it is long. Copper is very expensive. Does the gentleman really believe his claimants were deceived by an error so gross and palpable as that?

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman I will state that I have here the only authoritative work there is on the subject of dry docks. It was published by Charles B. Stuart in 1852. In this particular connection, with relation to the length and character of materials in the bolts, I would state that this reads as follows:

They have 5-foot vertical scarfs, each scarf having 4⅞ inch copper bolts, 2 feet long.

Mr. MANN. I stated that that was in this book and that it was a palpable error. I have read a great many books and reports containing errors, but was not deceived by them. Does the gentleman really believe his claimants were so utterly ignorant that they could believe that the Government or anybody else would use copper bolts by the hundreds or thousands one-quarter as thick as they were long?

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I presume that the interested parties who bid on this contract had the same degree of confidence in a statement made by a Government official, after a careful and thorough examination made by that official, that every other individual has, and in this connection I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the Navy Department availed itself, not of one source of information, but of two sources of information concerning the quantities of metals in the dry dock—the estimate prepared by Stuart in 1870 and the estimate prepared by the board of survey in January, 1907 (see report of the Committee on Claims, No. 783, p. 8, par. 8). But information contained in the latter and more authentic estimate was withheld from the bidders. Stuart had estimated the iron at 152 tons, and the board of survey, by adding the iron that had been used in the extensive repairs to the dock, increased the estimate to 600 tons. Here the board of sale used the estimate of the board of survey. Stuart had estimated the copper at 146 tons. The board of survey, by deducting the copper which the survey had shown was not in the dock, reduced Stuart's estimate to 100 tons. But here the board of sale was silent. Stuart's higher estimate was held forth as a bait for higher bids, notwithstanding the report of the board of survey.

The report of the board of survey was made 37 years after Stuart had made his computations; it was made in response to directions from the Secretary of the Navy and was based on an examination of the dock itself by officers of the Navy familiar with the original plans and specifications and thoroughly informed as to the repairs and changes that had been made. But, as we have seen, this report was used where the value of the dock was enhanced and ignored where its value was impaired.

A private individual guilty of such conduct would be stigmatized as a deliberate cheat. It is only fair to say that the Navy Department, after first rejecting the claimant's demand for redress, promptly ordered an investigation when the preceding facts were discovered.

Turning now to the disclosures by the board of investigation: That board has shown how Stuart erred in his computations and how the accuracy of his computations was further destroyed by the Government itself; and also how the board of survey made an error in charging nearly 200 tons of iron to the dock which was afterwards taken from the dock and returned into the Government storehouses. The board shows that the Government's agents were guilty of gross carelessness, and that the bidders could not protect themselves against the mistakes that were made.

There were a number of errors in connection with the specifications providing for the sale of this particular dry dock. The Government at one stage of the proceedings sets forth in the specifications that the dry dock contained 600 tons of iron, but during the time that the dry dock was in existence it had undergone repairs at various times, and at one period, in consequence of those repairs, there was removed from the dry dock 200 tons of iron. I do not know what is a fair valuation for such iron, but if it were $12 a ton, there would be $2,400 that the bidders were, perhaps unconsciously, mulcted out of by the Government officials in their specifications.

Take first Stuart's mistake in computing the weight of the copper fastenings. He figured on certain bolts as 2 feet long and 4⅞ inches in diameter, whereas the bolts were 22 inches long and ⅞ inch in diameter. It has been said that a copper bolt 4⅞ inches in diameter is so absurd, and Stuart's error is so obvious, that the bidder himself is to blame for not detecting the error.

If, Mr. Chairman, the bidder's attention is directed to the dimensions of a particular article that he is going to purchase, he bases his judgment on the specifications as set forth in the book to which reference is made.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If I correctly understand the gentleman from Illinois, he was basing his objection to this claim on the ground that there were no such copper bolts as described. As I understand it, the difference in the size of the bolts actually found was not very great, but there was a difference in the number of bolts and something as to the weight of the bolts.

But the bolts as actually found approximated the size to which the gentleman from Illinois has referred to as impossible.

Mr. MANN. Just this little difference, that it was stated that the bolts were 4⅞ inches in diameter, and when they reached the bolts they were seven-eighths of an inch in diameter. My friend from Iowa thinks that was almost the same size.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Illinois is entirely in error if he has read the report——

Mr. MANN. I have read the report. Has the gentleman from Iowa read it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman has evidently forgotten it.

Mr. CURLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may continue. It has been plainly shown that the bidders were deceived in the specifications with reference to the quantity and character of the material in so far as it applies to copper, the most expensive material in the dry dock. It has been set forth that they were further deceived in relation to the quantity of iron in the dry dock, since 200 tons of it had been removed since the dry dock had been in existence.

Perhaps there is some reason for this criticism, but, nevertheless, the department, by holding forth Stuart's figures and description of the dock, committed the same error as Stuart did; and, furthermore, the Navy Department on March 4, 1852, forwarded to the President of the Senate a report which included a copy of the contract for the floating dock in question, wherein the specifications say that—

> They have 5-foot vertical scarfs, each scarf having 4⅞-inch copper butt bolts 2 feet long.

We should remember that this dock was built many years ago; that it was an immense, unwieldy structure, probably different from anything of the kind theretofore designed. Is it altogether just to hold the bidder blameworthy for an error which is now so obvious, but which was committed by Stuart, a former Engineer in Chief of the Navy, who had before him the plans and specifications for the dock and who says in the preface to his work that—

> Care had been taken to refer constantly to the official records of the Navy Department and the reports of the engineers in charge of the several docks during their construction for valuable and reliable information.

Take next the shortage in the weight of the copper sheathing. Here Stuart's computations were accurate, but the board found that during some of the numerous repairs to the dock a strip of copper sheathing about 4½ feet in width and running all the way around the dock had been removed by the Government. What would be thought of a private individual who held forth Stuart's figures to the bidders after tearing off this strip of copper? Of course, we know that the board of sale did not intend to cheat the bidders, but when it is recalled that the board of survey reduced Stuart's estimate of the weight of the copper in the dock by 46 tons and that the board of sale suppressed that information, how can any fair-minded man permit the Government to keep the money thus improperly obtained?

In other words, the board of survey, after investigation, discovered that this strip of metal of 46 tons had been removed in some stage of the repairing of the dry dock, and when the attention of the board of sales was called to it the board of sales made no reference to it in the specifications submitted and upon which bids were made and received.

Next, Stuart's mistake in describing brass nails as copper nails. The report of the board of survey shows that extensive repairs were made to the dock from time to time. Is it conceivable that these repairs did not disclose to the Government's agents the kind of nails used in the dock? Who, then, should be held responsible for Stuart's mistake? The Government, which held forth his description and thus impliedly warranted his accuracy? Or the bidders, who had no means of ascertaining the facts until after the dock was paid for and delivered?

At last, the iron. We have seen that the estimate of the weight of the iron was taken from the report of the board of survey. The board of investigation found that the board of survey based its estimate upon the records of iron drawn from the storehouse for making repairs, but failed to credit the dock with 394,889 pounds which had been charged to the dock and afterwards returned into the storehouses. Here, again, we ask how it is possible for a fair-minded man to say that the Government should be permitted to keep the money obtained through this mistake? Right here, it might be well to ask those persons who believe that the transaction was one in which neither party knew the actual weight of the metals in the dock, whether it was not the duty of the Government to ascertain those weights and to furnish accurate information to the bidders. That could have been accomplished in such a way as to secure almost accurate results. The computations could have been based on the original plans and specifications, and thus Stuart's errors in the size of the bolts and the quality of the nails would have been discovered. The report of the board of survey, which reduced Stuart's estimate of the weight of the copper by 46 tons, had already disclosed the tearing off of the strip of copper sheathing; and the same records that the board of investigation examined would have shown the quantities of iron taken from the storehouse for the dock and the quantities taken from the dock and returned into the storehouse.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, this matter was before the Committee on Naval Affairs in 1910, and received unanimous support from that committee. An investigation had been made by the Navy Department, and recommendation favorable to that claim was made by the committee of investigation. A similar favorable recommendation was made by the Secretary of the Navy, and a unanimous report for the payment of the claim by the Committee on Naval Affairs and then by the Committee on Claims.

The highest bid was in the vicinity of $11,000, and all that Mr. Butters asked is the difference between the highest bid submitted by some other person and the amount bid by himself.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman willing to make it $11,000 and call it square?

Mr. CURLEY. I fear the gentleman from Illinois has misunderstood me. The highest bid submitted by any other person than himself was $11,000. Mr. Butters asked for the difference between the highest bid by somebody else and the bid submitted by himself; that is, $19,000.

You have seen that Stuart on Dry Docks refutes the statement made in connection with the desire of the bidder to take advantage of the Government, and which plainly indicates that the Government has taken advantage of the bidder. Every person who has investigated the claim feels that it is a just one, and I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection and will allow the claim to pass.

I would like to state further that this matter has been under consideration for several years, during which time the bidder in this case has lost the interest on the money tied up unfairly and unwarrantably by the Government.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, still reserving the right to object, I would like to make an observation. The Government advertised for bids for a dry dock under water. No one could tell exactly what was there until it had been raised, or in some way the water gotten out of it or it gotten out of the water. In advertising for bids, among other things, this statement was made: The dock is built of wood, in one section, about 107 feet by 350 feet in size. It was built in 1851, and it is stated in Stuart's Naval Dry Docks of the United States, and so forth.

Stuart's Dry Docks of the United States was not an official publication, as I think the gentleman from Massachusetts erroneously stated. Reference was made to it as the best information the Government had on the subject. Now, I think that the gentlemen who bid did bid under an erroneous supposition as to the various matters—the amount of copper used in sheathing, the copper nails which they found to be brass nails, and the amount of iron and steel which had been carried away.

But a considerable portion of this claim is based upon the proposition that these bidders were deceived by estimating the amount of copper in the bolts, because it was stated in Stuart's Manual that the bolts were 4⅞ inches in diameter.

No one can make me believe that a man bright enough to bid on any kind of work did not know that that was a mistake. They put in a claim for that item for 57,271 pounds of copper fastenings, which they did not get because the bolts were seven-eighths of an inch in diameter instead of 4⅞. They estimated copper was worth 13.66 cents per pound, which would amount to $7,823.22. When men are bidding on work of this kind they use some care or else accept the responsibility for negligence. Often when they are bidding for something they think they can put in a bid so that if it does not turn out the way they think it ought, they can put in a claim against the Government.

These people knew that there were no copper bolts 5 inches in diameter in that dry dock. Nobody had ever built construction work anywhere in the world with copper bolts 5 inches in diameter and probably never will.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CURLEY. I desire to call to the attention of the gentleman from Illinois the report that has been submitted by the Secretary of the Navy, which touches on the possibility of ascertaining the veracity of the statements contained either in the specifications or in Stuart's Manual. The Secretary of the Navy said:

> At the time the dock was offered for sale it was filled with water, and was down so low as to make an examination of her useless for the purpose of ascertaining the probable defects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would state to the gentleman I just made that statement to the House.

Mr. CURLEY. I desire to call the gentleman's attention more particularly to the fact to show that the only method of ascertaining the amount or character of material was as set forth in Steuart's book, to which reference has been made by the board of sales.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman be willing to knock off that copper bolt item? The amount of the bill is $19,732.91. The copper bolts which they claim they lost figure up to $7,823.22, which would leave, if that was taken off, $11,909.69. That is all that they are entitled to.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel it would be fair where the company has lost this money and lost it unfairly, through no fault of their own but entirely through the fault of the Government, through misrepresentation on the part of the Government, for the gentleman from Illinois to submit a proposition of that kind, and I do not feel he is doing it seriously.

Mr. MANN. I am very serious, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman really is asking a good deal to have Congress pass a bill giving a man a lot of money where he has bid, knowing as much as anybody else did. He offered a higher bid and got it accepted, and now he crawfishes.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to take advantage of the time accorded me to the disadvantage of somebody else. I want to be absolutely fair with the gentleman from Illinois. I am not authorized to say that they should accept or not accept that offer. Personally, I believe they are entitled to the full amount, as set forth, and I feel that at heart the gentleman from Illinois agrees with me upon that proposition. I do not know whether it would be acceptable to the residents of my district, who have called my attention to this bill. If the gentleman desires to knock off $2,000, I would say let them take that.

Mr. MANN. It is a question whether they are entitled to anything, but I have no doubt in the world that they are not entitled to a claim for the copper bolts.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not an auction sale, is it, now?

Mr. MANN. Not with me.

Mr. CURLEY. How much is that item?

Mr. MANN. Seven thousand eight hundred and twenty-three dollars and twenty-two cents, which would leave a balance of $11,909.69. Which, if they get it, is like picking money off the street.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suppose under the circumstances the only thing I can do is to accept the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, and if it is not acceptable to the persons interested, use my endeavors to have the matter defeated in the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend by striking out, in lines 4, 5, and 6, the words "nineteen thousand seven hundred and thirty-two dollars and ninety-one" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "eleven thousand nine hundred and nine dollars and sixty-nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ROBERT F. SCOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17355) for the relief of Robert F. Scott.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Robert F. Scott, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $478.07, the amount due him for retracing and reestablishing old lines in addition to such retracements and reestablishments provided for by and under the notice of letting of contract for public-land surveys No. 416, Montana, July 28, 1902, but required by his special instructions and necessary to the acceptable completion of the work under said contract, but rejected because not covered by the letter of the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is not a legal claim, and there are a number of other claims like it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. That was several years ago, and they have all been closed up, I think.

Mr. MANN. I think not. I think that they are not only not all closed up, but there are some of them pending, and they are continually arising; and I would inquire if it is the expectation that we shall continue to pay these claims that are in violation of the law?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, this claim for Robert F. Scott was put in by myself at this session, because he is a resident of my district. He came to Portland from Helena, Mont., about two years ago. The bill had been introduced in the Senate six years ago, shortly after the work was done. It passed the Senate, with a favorable report setting forth all of the facts. At that time a letter from the Secretary of the Interior was addressed to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Claims, reciting the circumstances, saying that, while it was not a legal claim against the Government, the facts were submitted for such action as Congress might see fit to take, and a statement was also included that a number of other bills of the same character were pending. It seems to me that all of these other claims have been settled up. The facts in the case, admitted in the Secretary's letter, are as follows: Robert F. Scott took a contract for surveying a large tract of land. He was given a manual of instructions. When he arrived at the scene where the survey was to be made, he found that the marks of the base line or meridian, from which he was to project the lines, were obliterated. Referring to the manual of instructions given him by the Interior Department, he found that it was his duty to retrace these lines, which he did at an expense of $478, for which this bill proposes to reimburse him. Sending in his report with the field notes, the same was approved by the surveyor general in Montana. The Secretary's report incorporated in the House committee's report here shows that his work was satisfactory; that Scott did retrace these lines. Outside of the fact that he is a good surveyor, he is a hard-working man, and has gone on working to make a living for his family for six or eight years, thinking this bill would finally be taken care of by Congress. I took it up in the House, and the Committee on Claims has reported it favorably.

I trust the gentleman from Illinois will not see fit to insist upon his objection. If I thought it would open the way to a large number of other claims, I would not insist upon its being passed; but I think all the other claims have been settled, otherwise they would be here insisting on payment.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether they have been settled, since this report of Secretary Hitchcock shows that there are a number of others of the same kind.

Mr. LAFFERTY. That is in his letter of February 2, 1906.

Mr. FOSTER. Since this letter was written.

Mr. LAFFERTY. That is my impression. I am looking at this just as the gentleman from Illinois was a while ago, and that is that if these other claims had not been settled the claimants would be here clamoring for settlement.

Mr. FOSTER. Maybe they have not such a wide-awake Member of Congress for those claims that this claim has.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I presume any of them are wide enough awake. This was a serious matter of retracing the lines in this case. It is admitted that the man did the work. He hired men to do part of the work—chain carriers, axmen—and furnished their subsistence, and did this work six or eight years ago. The Senate committee at the time stated that he did this work and had not been paid for it. The manual of instructions which he carried into the field required him to do the work, and there were no specifications in the letting of the contract that he would have to do this extra work; but after having gotten out with his camp outfit and his survey crew he could not then afford to turn back. I know the man personally; he has been in Portland for about two years. He is a hard-working man, with a family, and while those things do not cut any figure with a court, I have simply stated them as the facts. This claim has been gone carefully into. I wish to make an observation here, that in the matter of this claim the Committee on Claims have made a favorable report, and while that should not be conclusive and final, it is entitled to great force here in this House. As I say, here is a unanimous report of the committee on this bill. If this bill should be passed over this time, it probably would not be reached again. There is every evidence that it is a just claim against the Government and a moderate claim, a claim coming from a man who works hard every day for his subsistence, and I think it ought to pass.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, I think, is not giving the man very great advertisement as a surveyor when he says he works by the day to get subsistence. A good surveyor, competent to do this work, ought to be well employed and pretty fairly well off and be working with his head.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I can guarantee that he is employed most every day, and even at that he does not make any more than a living.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

TO ADJUST THE CLAIMS OF CERTAIN SETTLERS IN SHERMAN COUNTY, OREG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 295) to adjust the claims of certain settlers in Sherman County, Oreg.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is rather a long bill, and I am going to object to it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not object. The bill is reported by the committee——

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say there are 29 other bills to be considered, and I think we ought to run on through them.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I am going to object to this bill. I would be very glad to reserve the objection if it were not for that.

Mr. POU. When we have finished the unobjected bills the gentleman can take it up very quickly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the chairman of the committee think there is any possibility of getting back to it to-night?

Mr. MANN. I should say to the gentleman there is not, but I am not speaking for the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a very meritorious measure which involves a number of small claims of some 205 people, who went on the land when opened by the Government, and who were encouraged by the authorities of the Government to remain and make their improvements. They were finally ousted as the result of a decision of the Supreme Court, and many of them obtained patents on their entries. The amount for each one is very small, although the total is somewhat large. They acted in entire good faith and under the encouragement of the Government officials.

Mr. MANN. I suspect soon we will have claims from gentlemen that because they have attempted to make homesteads under the Kinkaid Act on 640 acres and found they could not do it the Government ought to pay them back their railroad fares, subsistence, buildings constructed, and for the work they have done—but not yet.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think the cases are of the same character.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Has the Government made any misrepresentations under the Kinkaid Act?

Mr. MANN. The Government makes no misrepresentations of any kind to anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. POU. Has the gentleman read the report?

Mr. MANN. Yes; carefully; and I have it all annotated all the way through.

WILLIAM HANNUM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14748) to refund certain taxes paid by the heirs of William Hannum, deceased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $172.93 to the heirs of William Hannum, deceased, money paid by them as taxes upon distributive shares imposed thereon under the provisions of law, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there ofjection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

BOLOGNESI, HARTFIELD & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21403) for the relief of Bolognesi, Hartfield & Co.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

J. KENNARD & SONS CARPET CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4007) for the relief of J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to the J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co., of St. Louis, Mo., a corporation of the State of Missouri, the sum of $2,427.88, the same being the amount of penalties heretofore assessed against and collected from said company on account of customs duties in the months of April, May, July, and August, 1907.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

H. J. RANDOLPH HEMMING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21506) for the relief of H. J. Randolph Hemming.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be passed over. The Clerk will report the next one.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, if it is in order now before we pass on to the consideration of the next bill, an article containing an analysis of the Aldrich monetary plan. It is in line with data I am collecting on that general subject. It is a valuable article, and I hope there will be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an article on the currency question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPAYMENT OF THE RANSOM OF ELLEN M. STONE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2461) to provide for the repayment of the ransom of Ellen M. Stone.

The bill was read.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], who introduced this bill, is not present to-day, and he desired to have this bill laid over without prejudice, if that is acceptable to the Chairman of the committee.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have charge of the bill. I do not want it to be passed over unless somebody objects to it.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman object to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Iowa made a request, I think.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I made it on behalf of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], who introduced the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection to it will accomplish the same result, the Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Iowa will not object to the consideration of this bill. It has been passed twice by the Senate, and it has been reported to the House by a unanimous vote of the committee. It is a bill which has been agitating the people, not only in one State of the Union but in every part of this country and throughout the entire world.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] permit the Chair to put the request of the gentleman from Iowa? The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. FOWLER. I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill would take the remainder of to-day and probably all of next Private Calendar day, and therefore I object.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentleman will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I have objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The bill will be passed over. The Clerk will report the next bill.

L. D. HILDEBRAND, ADMINISTRATOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 567) referring the bill (H. R. 15207) for the relief of L. D. Hildebrand, administrator of the estate of John W. Hildebrand, deceased, to the Court of Claims.

The resolution was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, ordinarily it is a very easy thing for a committee, and a very proper thing, to refer a bill for a claim to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts. This resolution, by the way, is not in the form complying with the law under which bills are referred to the Court of Claims. We have no authority to refer a bill to the Court of Claims "to ascertain the amount due, if any." There is no such provision in the law, and hence the resolution would not be effective, if passed, if the Court of Claims followed the law.

However, this bill itself is a bill to reopen a claim of Mr. Hildebrand, who served as a delegate of the Eastern Cherokee Indians in 1876, after he had been paid for his services. I think the gentlemen who reported this bill ought themselves to have given it a little consideration. I do not think they would favor even referring the bill to the Court of Claims. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FRED FOX, JR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 568) referring the bill (H. R. 17123) for the relief of Fred Fox, jr., to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House resolution 568.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 17123) for the relief of Fred Fox, jr., together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims to find the amount due, if any, and report the same to Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not see the gentleman here who reported this resolution. I think I am not in error in the belief that the law provides for referring a matter to the Court of Claims only for a finding of facts and conclusions of law.

Mr. POU. Would the gentleman be willing to amend the resolution in that regard?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. I have no objection to the resolution at all.

Mr. POU. I would be obliged to the gentleman if he would make the proper motion.

Mr. MANN. The resolution should read "That the bill (H. R. 17123) for the relief of Fred Fox, jr., together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act," and so forth. If the Clerk will send for House resolution 629 he will find the form exactly. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert the provision that I have read. I think that is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. It is to insert, after the word "Claims," in line 3, the words "for a finding of facts and conclusions of law."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the resolution by inserting after the word "Claims," in line 3, the following: "for a finding of facts and conclusions of law."

Mr. MANN. Of course, all after the word "Claims," in line 3, should be stricken out. The amendment is to strike out lines 4 and 5 and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out lines 4 and 5 and inserting after the word "Claims," in line 3, the words "for a finding of facts and conclusions of law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ERSKINE R. K. HAYES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3459) for the relief of Erskine R. K. Hayes.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be passed, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

HENRY A. V. POST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17323) for the relief of Henry A. V. Post.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, here is a claim 30 years old, and no information is contained in the report. It proposes to waive the statute of limitations and the statutes in reference to the payment of duties under protest. Certainly, unless there is some reason for it, I shall have to object. There is no reason assigned here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be passed, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

SAM MANA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21195) for the relief of Sam Mana, owner of the schooner Moi Wahine, sunk in collision with a Government vessel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Sam Mana, owner of the schooner Moi Wahine, or his heirs, assigns, or personal representatives, which said schooner was injured and sunk by collision with the U. S. lighthouse tender Kukui on the night of the 27th of February, 1911, in the waters of the Pacific Ocean off the island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, for and on account of the total loss of said schooner Moi Wahine and consequent damages to the owner thereof, may be submitted to the United States district court for the district and Territory of Hawaii, under and in complaince with the rules of the said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said claim or claims and to render judgment thereon upon the same principles and measures of liability and damages as in like cases in admiralty: Provided, however, That the investigation of the said claim or claims shall be made upon the following basis:

First. The said court shall find the facts attending the loss and injury to the said schooner Moi Wahine and the resulting damages to her owner or owners.

Second. If it shall appear that the responsibility therefor rests with the said U. S. lighthouse tender Kukui, the court shall then ascertain and determine the amount which should be paid to the owner or owners of the said schooner Moi Wahine, or their heirs, representatives, or assigns, in order to reimburse him or them for the losses and damages so sustained, and shall render a decree accordingly.

SEC. 2. That should said decree be rendered in favor of the owner or owners of said schooner, or their heirs, representatives, or assigns, the amount thereof shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, would the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], who reported this bill, have any objection, or would it be proper to strike out the name of the owner, given here as Sam Mana, and simply provide that the claim of the owner be adjudicated?

Then this bill provides not only for an adjudication for the loss of the vessel, but the consequent damages to the owner thereof. We never have allowed that. The House has always declined to allow consequential damages. I notice the bill provides for findings of fact and conclusions of law. If it is to be submitted to the court as an admiralty case, I do not see why the court should not just as well render a judgment. I can not see upon what principle we should allow consequential damages or determine who was the owner of the vessel.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The word "resulting," to which the gentleman refers, was not considered by the committee to have the meaning which the gentleman from Illinois attaches to it; but I can see that there might be some misconstruction arising as a result of it, and I think it would be well if that word were stricken out, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman, and also the name of the owner. I think both the suggestions that the gentleman makes are good.

Mr. MANN. The question of damages comes in in two or three places. On page 2, lines 11 to 13, if the gentleman will notice, it says:

The said court shall find the facts attending the loss and injury to the said schooner Moi Wahine, and the resulting damages to her owner or owners.

Then below you change the finding of facts into a decree——

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I object to the consideration of this bill and the next one, as they will both take a good deal of time to consider.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be passed. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OWNERS OF CARGO OF SCHOONER "MOI WAHINE."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21043) for the relief of the owners of the cargo laden aboard the schooner Moi Wahine.

The bill was read.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] objects to the consideration of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement of the gentleman is correct. The bill will be passed. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CATHERINE GRIMM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4520) for the relief of Catherine Grimm.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Catherine Grimm, of Cleveland, Ohio, mother of Otto B. Grimm, late first lieutenant, Signal Corps, United States Army, the sum of $1,200, in full compensation of all claims or demands of the estate of the late Otto B. Grimm.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FRANK KLEIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5769) for the relief of Frank Klein.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Frank Klein, of San Francisco, Cal., the sum of $5,000, on account of the loss of an eye by the explosion of a box of percussion caps while loading the United States Army transport Sherman, in San Francisco Harbor, on the 22d day of September, 1900.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KAHN. I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a committee amendment which will first be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "one."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. I move to strike out in line 9, page 1, the words "nineteen hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "eighteen ninety-nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "nineteen hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "eighteen ninety-nine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WEST KENTUCKY COAL CO.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13016) for the relief of the West Kentucky Coal Co.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated the sum of $3,017.48 for the relief of the West Kentucky Coal Co., of Sturgis, Ky., to pay for one barge of coal, lines, and appurtenances destroyed at Memphis, Tenn., June 25, 1909.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES S. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20385) to reimburse Charles S. Jackson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $82 to Charles S. Jackson, late lieutenant, Eleventh Regiment United States Cavalry, to reimburse the said Jackson for the amount paid by him by deduction from his pay as such lieutenant for hire of a mount, equipments, and forage under the order of the chief quartermaster at Atlanta, Ga., dated the 5th day of April, 1910, which said mount and equipments were used by the said Jackson, under the order aforesaid, in connection with progressive military-map work in the Department of the Gulf, to which he had been detailed by proper authority.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

YNCHAUSTI & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the House resolution 643, referring the bill (H. R. 20377) for the relief of Ynchausti & Co. to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the House resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 20377) for the relief of Ynchausti & Co., together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of the facts and the amount due, if any, and that the same be reported to Congress.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I think this resolution is not in proper form; and I will object for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be passed over.

SAMUEL H. DONALDSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18894) for the relief of the heirs of the late Samuel H. Donaldson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of the late Samuel H. Donaldson, who died from injuries received in the performance of his duties under the appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York, the sum of $5,000.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 8 strike out the words "five thousand" and insert the words "one thousand five hundred."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I notice that the report does not indicate that this bill was ever called to the attention of the Treasury Department or that the department was asked for a statement concerning the accident. I will ask whether or not, as a matter of fact, they did have a report from the Treasury Department, and whether they have such a report here. It seems to me that where a man has been injured in the Government service and presents a claim for injury, that we ought to have a statement from the service in which he claims he was injured.

Mr. POU. This is one case in which there was no report from the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. I think I shall have to object.

Mr. POU. I will state that I have been informed that inquiry was made of the Treasury Department and they had no information about the matter. In all cases wherever a bill is introduced the matter is immediately referred to the department that is supposed to have the information in respect to it.

Mr. MANN. If this man was employed in the Treasury Department, of course they would have some information as to that fact.

Mr. POU. Let the bill be passed over.

LENA SCHMIEDER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23123) for the relief of Lena Schmieder.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lena Schmieder, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, in compensation for the loss of her husband, Joseph Schmieder, who came to his death on November 13, 1895, while in the employ of the United States Government, and as a result of such employment, and for the loss of her second husband, Frank Schmieder, who came to his death on July 5, 1907, while in the employ of the United States Government and as a result of such employment.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, strike out the words "five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand and eighty."

In line 10, after the word "employment," strike out the comma and insert a period; strike out balance of line 10, all of lines 11, 12, 13, and 14.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill proposes to compensate the lady for the loss of her first husband by accident and then for her second husband by accident. The loss of the second husband occurred in 1907. We might properly make compensation for that under the theory we have adopted, but it was found there was no accident there as far as the Government was concerned, for he was not in the service of the Government when the accident happened. The other loss occurred in 1895, 17 years ago. I think it is going back a little too far to allow these claims 17 years old, and therefore I object.

HENRY HIRSCHBERG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24081) for the relief of Henry Hirschberg.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $410 to Henry Hirschberg, of St. Louis, Mo., the same being balance due him on salary as inspector of leather goods and hardware for the Indian service.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN A. GAULEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17140) for the relief of John A. Gauley.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John A. Gauley, of Allston, Mass., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,200, and said sum is hereby appropriated as compensation for personal injuries suffered by said Gauley in the course of his duties as an employee of the War Department at the Watertown Arsenal, Watertown, Mass.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether this bill was referred to the War Department. I do not find any statement to that effect in the report.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have no recollection about it. I know we examined it pretty carefully.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me, with full respect for the committee, that where a man is injured in the Government service and a bill introduced to pay the claim that one of the natural things to do is to make inquiry of the head of that department to get information in regard to the man, and probably in reference to the injury; certainly if there is any negligence on the part of the Government alleged. For the present I object.

FELIX MORGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21849) for the relief of Felix Morgan.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Felix Morgan, of Wirt County, W. Va., out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, to compensate him for injuries received while in the employ of the Government on the Little Kanawha River, in Wirt County, W. Va.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 7 strike out the words "ten thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "two thousand five hundred," so that it will read "$2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this bill is to compensate for an accident that occurred 21 years ago. I think that is too far back and therefore I object.

ROBERT H. BURNEY AND C. J. FULLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23329) for the relief of the heirs of Robert H. Burney and C. J. Fuller, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to A. A. Burney, Annie Abernathy, D. E. Taylor, Frank Burney, Lillie Tomlinson, G. W. Fuller, and Beulah Fuller, sole heirs of Robert H. Burney, deceased, late of Texas; and G. W. Fuller and Beulah Fuller, sole heirs of C. J. Fuller, deceased, late of Texas, the sum of $557.55, the amount due the said Robert H. Burney and C. J. Fuller under their contracts Nos. 8749, 8763, 8766, and 8767, for carrying the United States mail prior to the Civil War in the State of Texas, as shown by Senate Document No. 92, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is one of the claims for carrying mail many years ago, before the war, I suppose. It was set out in a report submitted to the Senate in the Fifty-seventh Congress, and I would like to inquire of the gentlemen on the committee whether they know, if this claim is allowed, how much will go to the claimants, and how much to the attorney who has taken it up?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, there has been no attorney before the committee. The bill was introduced by Mr. RANDELL of Texas. It is like the Taylor claim, and it shows that there is that much to the credit of this man who carried the mail, and we have no information other than is set out in this report.

Mr. MANN. I suspect that the attorney did not appear before the committee. Of course I do not know whether there is an attorney or not.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think not.

Mr. MANN. I think there is. As this claim, with a number of others, was set out in a report to the Senate a great many years ago—10 years ago, or such a matter—it undoubtedly has been called to the attention of the claimants by some attorney, who has probably written the claimants that the attorney thought he could get a claim for these parties allowed if he was given 50 or 75 per cent of the claim; and the people, not knowing they had a claim, would do probably as you and I would do if some man would come to us and say if we would give him one-half he would get us some money that we did not know was due us but that he thought was. I think in these claims we ought to put in a provision that the money is guaranteed to go to the claimant and not to the attorney. I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEFLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1068. An act authorizing the extension of First Street east, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Undr clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 1068. An act authorizing the extension of First Street east, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WILLIAM H. WILLIS.

The committee resumed its session.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9129) for the relief of the estate of William H. Willis.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of William H. Willis, deceased, the sum of $36.57, in full settlement for transporting the United States mail in 1860 and 1861.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LEO MÜLLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22257) for the relief of Leo Müller.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Leo Müller, in full of all claims he may have against the Government for injuries received by him while employed by the United States Reclamation Service, as carpenter, at Leguna Dam (Yuma, Cal.) project, for the loss of a leg and other physical disabilities resulting from said injuries.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, in this case the claimant has already been paid the amount allowed by the Government under the general law—one year's pay. I am not willing, by unanimous consent or in any other way, if I can help it, to embark the Government upon the plan that it will entirely disregard the general law and make special compensation in every case. We passed a general law for the purpose of avoiding that, and I do not think we ought to start to change it now. I object.

G. W. WALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23253) to compensate G. W. Wall, of Cheatham County, Tenn., for damages sustained by him on account of the construction of Lock and Dam A on the lower Cumberland River.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to G. W. Wall, of Cheatham County, Tenn., the sum of $625 in full satisfaction of all damages which has been or may hereafter be sustained by him by reason of the overflow of his lands situated in said county and State, and the destruction of his crops on account of the construction of Lock and Dam A on the lower Cumberland River.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "six hundred and twenty-five dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "forty-nine dollars and sixty cents."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 8, by striking out the word "has" and inserting the word "have."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like now to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] whether he would object to an amendment on page 2, line 1, by inserting, after the word "him," the words "or by the farm occupied by him," so that it would cover the damages to the man and to the farm occupied by him.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No, Mr. Chairman; I shall not object to that amendment. This is intended to be in full compensation for all of the damages incurred.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "him," insert the words "or by the farm occupied by him."

Mr. MANN. There is no certainty here that he even owns the farm.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no objection to the amendment, as I have stated, except, of course, I was under the impression possibly that it might apply to other land, but I reckon not.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; this settles that it is his farm on which the damage occurred.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he own the farm?

Mr. MANN. Nobody knows.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He owns the farm.

Mr. MANN. The department did not find that he owned the farm, and I want to cover damages to the farm.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

J. E. STEWART.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23254) to compensate J. E. Stewart, of Cheatham County, Tenn., for damages sustained by him on account of the construction of Lock and Dam A on the lower Cumberland River.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. E. Stewart, of Cheatham County, Tenn., the sum of $1,400 in full compensation of all damages which has been or may hereafter be sustained by him by reason of the overflow of his lands situated in said county and State, and the destruction of his crops on account of the construction of Lock and Dam A on the lower Cumberland River.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lines 6 and 7, page 1, strike out the words "one thousand four hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four hundred and seventy-three."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 8, by striking out the word "has" and inserting the word "have."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on page 2, line 1, after the word "him," I move to amend by inserting the words "or by the farm occupied by him."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LOUISIANA DISTILLERY CO. (LTD.).

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12339) to refund certain taxes paid by the Southern Redistilling & Rectifying Co. (Ltd.), of New Orleans, La.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $194.40 to the Southern Redistilling & Rectifying Co. (Ltd.), of New Orleans, La., as a refund payment for excessive duty paid on importation of molasses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 6 and 7, and line 1, on page 2, strike out the words "Southern Redistilling and Rectifying Co." and insert in lieu thereof the words "Louisiana Distillery Co."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES A. DAVIDSON AND CHARLES M. CAMPBELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2199) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of Charles A. Davidson and Charles M. Campbell.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

ELIZABETH MUHLEMAN AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4041) for the relief of Elizabeth Muhleman, widow, and the heirs at law of Samuel A. Muhleman, deceased.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

C. PERSON'S SONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4032) for the relief of C. Person's Sons.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Daniel H. Person, William Person, and Frank P. Person, a copartnership doing business under the name of C. Person's Sons, in Buffalo, N. Y., the sum of $458.83, the same being the amount of duties paid by said firm upon certain whisky imported from Canada to the port of Buffalo on the 12th day of May, 1908, which said whisky was thereafter exported from said port by said firm, the said duties not having been refunded to them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to object——

The CHAIRMAN. Then the bill will be laid aside——

Mr. MANN. Just a moment. I would like to be heard on this bill. This bill is to refund some duties to a man in Buffalo who imported some whisky from Canada. I do not know what kind of whisky it was—probably some whisky with a special title. Under the pure-food law the Department of Agriculture seized the whisky on the ground it was not properly labeled or was misbranded or was adulterated; at any rate that it was not whisky, but ethyl alcohol doctored up to be called some particular brand of whisky. So the whisky was sent back, I believe, for that reason after the man had paid the duty. There is no reason why they should have to pay the duty on this whisky, and I think it is perfectly proper to pay them back. But one of those questions which has not yet been settled is, What is whisky?

Every once in a while, either in the newspapers or some statement from this man or that man, comes a statement that somebody else had dodged that question. I am inclined to think that probably the officials of the Government, possibly with the exception of Dr. Wiley, who is no longer an official, have largely attempted to dodge the question what is whisky. When we passed the pure-food law there was a decided claim on the side of people who were making whisky out of alcohol on the one side and people who claimed they were making straight whisky on the other side, and because of that we were compelled to insert in the pure-food law a sort of Delphic oracle utterance that left somewhat in doubt what the law meant. Ever since they have been trying to determine what is whisky. In this particular case the department determined that this whisky was not whisky, and it was sent back to Canada. Shortly after that, I think by the direction of President Roosevelt, that determination of the department was overridden. Dr. Wiley had started out to claim that whisky must be made from whisky, and that if you mix two kinds of whisky it might be called whisky, but if you mixed ethyl alcohol, pure alcohol, with whisky and added some burnt sugar and flavoring extracts to it it was not whisky and should not be called whisky. President Roosevelt overrode that decision, at least temporarily, I believe; maybe I may be mistaken about that. At any rate the people are still mixing burnt sugar, flavoring extracts, pure, white, tasteless ethyl alcohol, and out of that they make Canadian whisky, Scotch whisky, Irish whisky, rye and bourbon whiskies, and all other kinds of whiskies.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EUGENE J. O'CONNER AND J. B. SCHWEER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House resolution 651, a resolution in lieu of H. R. 4496, referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Eugene J. O'Conner and J. B. Schweer.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 651.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 4496) for the relief of Eugene J. O'Conner and J. B. Schweer, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims to find and determine the amount due claimants, if any, and report the same to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. POU. I was going to ask that this resolution be amended by making it read that it shall be referred to the Court of Claims "for finding of facts and conclusions of law" as amended in the other bill. I move to insert after the word "Claims" the words "for finding of facts and conclusions of law."

Mr. MANN. Usually they add to that the reference to the statutes, but probably it is not necessary. The amendment would be to strike out all after the words "Court of Claims" and insert "for finding of facts and conclusions of law."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out all after the word "Claims" and insert "for finding of facts and conclusions of law."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

REFUND TO NATIONAL CARTAGE & WAREHOUSE CO., NEW YORK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24137) to refund to the National Cartage & Warehouse Co., of New York City, excess duty.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to the National Cartage & Warehouse Co., of New York City, N. Y., the sum of $91.41 collected on two cases of majolica ware in excess of the actual duty thereon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 6, strike out the words "ninety-one dollars and forty-one" and insert in lieu thereof "ninety-five dollars and forty."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HANS PETER GUTTORMSEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 264) for the relief of Hans Peter Guttormsen.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Hans Peter Guttormsen, of the city of Kenosha, State of Wisconsin, said sum of $5,000 having been allowed him by the Court of Claims on the 4th day of December, A. D. 1905, as set forth in House Document No. 174 of the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. I notice in one case the committee reduced this sum from $5,000 to $1,500 and in another case they did not.

Mr. COOPER. I was told by the chairman of the committee that the amount had been reduced to $1,500. The chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MAGUIRE], is present.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the intention was to reduce the amount to $1,500.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. Yes; to $1,500, instead of $5,000.

Mr. MANN. As the printed bill reads it allows $5,000 and appropriates $1,500. If the intention is to make it $1,500 I shall not object.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. It is $1,500; and the committee also amended the bill further and put in a clause at the close providing that there shall be no attorneys' fees. I think that clause ought to go into all these bills where the claim is for personal injury and where the information relative to the claim is available in the departments.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman about that. Will the gentleman offer an amendment there?

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. I shall be glad if the gentleman from Illinois will offer an amendment. If not, I shall offer one, in lines 5 and 6, changing the amount from $5,000 to $1,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MAGUIRE].

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. That is a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, lines 5 and 6, by striking out the words "five thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof "one thousand five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported with favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. That does not include the other committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The Clerk will report the other committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 1, after the word "session," by inserting the following: "Provided, That no agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any person engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting this claim shall directly or indirectly receive or retain for such service in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim, or for any act whatsoever in connection with this claim any fee or compensation whatsoever."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment that the Clerk has just read.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question?

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. I could not catch the gentleman's remark.

Mr. COOPER. One of the attorneys in this case was at one time a former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Pratt, and another was Mr. J. C. Hitt.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. I know nothing about the attorneys in the case at all. I think we should insert this clause in regard to cutting out attorneys' fees in all these cases where the information comes directly from the department and an attorney or claim agent is not needed, and that is why it is inserted here. I think the pay should go to the claimants instead of to the claimants and the attorneys.

Mr. MANN. The attorneys did not secure any money for the claimants. It is true that——

Mr. COOPER. They have taken testimony, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. It is true that by some method, unexplainable to me, this matter was referred to the Court of Claims, which could have no jurisdiction to render a judgment, or even intimate what should be paid. Now, if we are going to pay money for the injury, I think—and I know the gentleman thinks—we ought to pay it to those dependent upon the persons injured, and not let this money be used to pay attorneys for services which, though they were rendered, could not have been of much value, however well they may have been rendered.

Mr. COOPER. I did not myself want the case to go to the Court of Claims, but the committee at that time having the bill in charge in the prior Congress insisted on its going there, and there was nothing else to do. It is a very meritorious case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

STANLEY H. KUNZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21324) providing for the refund of certain duties incorrectly collected on a certain horse.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Stanley H. Kunz, of Chicago, Ill., the sum of $75, being the amount incorrectly collected on a certain horse named C. W. Burt, returned from Canada to the United States through the port of Port Huron, Mich., and entered on entry No. 1772 on August 10, 1911.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with favorable recommendation. The Clerk will report the next bill.

REIMBURSEMENT TO CERTAIN EMPLOYEES, WASHINGTON NAVY YARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16449) to reimburse certain employees of the Washington Navy Yard for loss of mechanics' tools by fire.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the employees of the carpenter shop at the Naval Gun Factory, in the city of Washington, D. C., a sum not to exceed in the aggregate $928, for mechanics' tools destroyed in the fire of the said carpenter shop on February 6, 1911, the amount to be received by each individually to be determined by the commandant of the navy yard, and certified by him to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] whether he can state if it is the policy of the Government to insure the private tools owned by its employees in all of the Government shops?

Mr. POU. I will state to the gentleman in reply to that question that these persons were employed in the navy yard, and most of them were compelled to use tools of their own. I do not know why that was. My own judgment is that the Government should have provided these men with the tools necessary in their employment. But the Government not having provided them with tools, and they having been forced to use their own money in the purchase of tools, I think the Government ought to recompense them for the loss of the tools in the event they are destroyed. In other words, I believe the Government should do one of two things: Either provide the men in its employ with tools, or else pay for those tools if they are destroyed in a case like this. I do not know myself what the policy of the Government is, but I simply know that sounds like justice and right.

Mr. MANN. Journeymen mechanics usually have tools of their own, and the best mechanics usually prefer to have tools of their own. If they are employed in the Government service they are paid on that basis. Now, does the Government insure the safety of those tools, and is there any obligation on the part of the Government to recompense persons who lose their tools by fire, without any fault on the part of the Government at all? If we have to do it in one case, we would have to do it in other cases. In this case was it the fault of the Government?

Mr. POU. It was not the fault of the claimants.

Mr. MANN. Was it the fault of the Government?

Mr. POU. It was owing probably to the negligence of some other employees, not of these employees. In the carpenter shop down there the workmen are compelled to furnish their smaller tools. The larger machinery, of course, is furnished by the Government.

Mr. MANN. That is the custom all over the United States.

Mr. POU. The smaller tools must be furnished by the employees themselves.

Mr. MANN. That is in accordance with the usual custom in the trade everywhere.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. There is no insurance. I have inquired very carefully into the claims, and there is no insurance on the part of the claimants of these tools and they have received no money for them in any way.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that they had no insurance. If I had been one of them I would not have insured. I would have taken the chances on it. They could have insured their tools if they wanted to and they did not. But does the Government insure them, or is there any reason why the Government should insure them?

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. It would be difficult to insure them. Sometimes there are more of their tools there than at other times. They carry them back and forth. They are workmen.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there would be any difficulty in insuring them. I think this opens up an entirely new policy on the part of the Government, and therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LIBBIE ARNOLD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2628) for the relief of Libbie Arnold.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to pay a claim 16 or 17 years old, for personal injuries, and therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be passed. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CARL KRUEGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 104) for the relief of Carl Krueger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 to Carl Kruger, of Denver, Colo., on account of injuries received in the United States mint in the city of Denver, State of Colorado, on February 27, 1906.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand five hundred."

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask gentlemen if they will be willing to pass this Senate bill in the form in which it passed the Senate. The Senate bill provides that this man shall be paid $500. He is still working for the Government. The amount carried by the Senate bill would pay him all he would be entitled to under the general law. He was unable to do manual labor for 45 days. He now has a very good Government job, which he will probably keep for life.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. I will state to the gentleman that this is a very meritorious claim. The man was working in the mint at Denver, and was injured while in line of duty through no fault of his own. His arm was caught and ran in between a set of rollers, and the surgeons were compelled to amputate it. We think that $500 would be a very meager sum to in any way compensate a man for the loss of his arm.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt about that. I would not lose my arm for $1,000,000, and would not feel that I was compensated if the Government should contribute $1,000,000, but I would not get a million dollars if I lost both arms and my head besides. This man has a nice job, which he can probably keep as long as he lives.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. As far as I am concerned, I would not be willing to accept the small amount suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. All right; then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be passed, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

W. A. KELLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25264) for the relief of W. A. Kelly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50 to W. A. Kelly, postmaster at West Frankfort, Ill., to reimburse him for postal savings stamps stolen while in the custody of the post office at West Frankfort, Ill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, am I correct in believing that under the general law the Postmaster General is authorized to reimburse for losses by theft in a post office under the conditions named in the law, but that that does not apply to postal savings stamps and postal savings funds?

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. That is because the general law was passed before we provided for postal savings banks?

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. Because the law is not broad enough.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not broad enough to take them in.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARTIN A. L. OLSEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14770) for the relief of Martin A. L. Olsen.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Martin A. L. Olsen, postmaster of the city of De Kalb, Ill., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $515, which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose, to reimburse him for postal savings funds and postal savings stamps which were stolen when the post office at said city of De Kalb, Ill., was burglarized on the 25th day of July, 1911, and which sum was thereby lost without fault on the part of the said postmaster, and which sum has been made good from the personal funds of the said postmaster.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE HALLMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9125) for the relief of George Hallman.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

HENRY G. ROETZEL AND PAUL CHIPMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 998) for the relief of Henry G. Roetzel and Paul Chipman.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry G. Roetzel and Paul Chipman, partners doing business under the firm name of Roetzel & Chipman, contractors, of Evansville, Ind., the sum of $4,230, and said sum of $4,230 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in payment of the amount withheld from them as liquidated damages under a certain contract for the construction of concrete walls, etc., at the lock at Grand Rapids, on the Wabash River, entered into by and between the duly authorized officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, representing the United States of America on the one part, and the said Henry G. Roetzel and Paul Chipman, partners doing business under the firm name of Roetzel & Chipman, on the other part, and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated June 2, 1909.

The following committee amendments were read:

On page 1, line 7, strike out the words "five thousand two hundred and three dollars and" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four thousand two hundred and thirty dollars."

In line 8 strike out the words "twenty-two cents."

In line 8 strike out the words "five thousand two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four thousand two hundred and thirty dollars." Said sum being the amount the claimants paid as penalty for failure to finish contract in specified time.

In line 9 strike out the words "and three dollars and twenty-two cents."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the report in this case quotes the Senate report. There is no report apparently from the War Department in reference to the matter; at least there is no statement in the report from the War Department. There is no evidence in the report, or any statement upon which the committee bases its recommendation or amendment to reduce the amount, but I judge that the committee must have had information before it, which is not stated in the report, but upon which the amendment is based.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the committee made the reduction based upon the amount that the Government was required to expend to keep a man at the dam for the extra time over and above the time in which the contract was to be completed. In other words, the contract would have been completed something like three to six months before it actually was completed. Nature prevented its completion by low water. There was to be excavation in the bottom of the river at the dam and the débris and sediment which had accumulated there under the contract was to be carried above and put on the dam. When the low water set in it was absolutely impossible for the contractors to do any work, and they had to wait for high water in order to get the dredge boats in. Now, because of the extra time that the Government was compelled to keep a man there at the dam and was required to expend the difference between the $5,000 and the amount we allowed the deduction was made.

We had that computation made by the War Department and the expense to the Government was deducted.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand where you get the amount named in the committee amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. The War Department furnished that.

Mr. MANN. Where is that?

Mr. FOWLER. It does not appear in the report. We had the report of the War Department on that question, and the War Department submitted the figures and expenses that the Government was compelled to pay because of the extension of the time for the completion of the work.

Mr. MANN. Did the War Department practically recommend the payment of this amount?

Mr. FOWLER. I am not so sure that I can answer that question. It was a Senate bill, passed by the Senate, and the only thing the committee sought to do was to look into the matter and see whether the claim was a just one. We thought it was not just that the Government should pay for the extra man, for keeping the man there for the extension of time, and so we deducted that amount.

Mr. MANN. The contract was advertised for April 1, 1909. Bids were received on May 1, 1909, and the contract approved July 6, 1909, to be completed in 90 days. It was completed August 10, 1910, not 90 days, not quite 90 days over a year, but a good deal more than 90 days after high water, 1910. It did not look to me like a meritorious claim at all. Certainly it ought not to pass without being submitted to the War Department for a statement.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. The gentleman understands that this is only the remission of a penalty?

Mr. MANN. I understand the Government retained the money as liquidated damages.

Mr. FOWLER. The penalty under the statute.

Mr. MANN. It is provided in the contract. That is the case often that a man who advertises or contracts to do work in 90 days usually gets a good deal higher price than he would if he was to have it done in a year and 90 days.

Mr. FOWLER. If the gentleman will permit me, the contractors live on the Wabash River and never had any occasion to be engaged in this kind of business before. They are private men not skilled in the business.

Mr. MANN. Local people?

Mr. FOWLER. Local people not engaged in that character of business. They live in a community that I know, and I have known the Wabash Dam ever since it was completed, and I know about the high and low water there. I know it is absolutely impossible to do any work on the Ohio River or the Wabash during the low-water period.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that, but the high-water period occurs long, long before August.

Mr. FOWLER. But this was the low-water period.

Mr. MANN. They did not do the work by a long shot within 90 days after the high water of 1910.

Mr. FOSTER. They were required to take this dirt out and take it through the locks above the dam.

Mr. MANN. They had a high-water period for a good deal more than three months before August, 1910.

Mr. FOSTER. The first was the low water and then came the freshet.

Mr. MANN. But they did not do anything at all in 1909. I am not saying that the claim ought not to be paid. If the matter had been submitted to the War Department, who has charge of it, and they have not recommended against it—may I ask whether they sent any adverse report on it?

Mr. FOWLER. If they made any recommendation against it, I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. MANN. I have no knowledge about it.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. There is no adverse report. They simply make no recommendation.

Mr. FOWLER. It was a Senate bill. We tried to get at the facts in regard to it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished friend has stated several times that it is a bill that was passed by the Senate. I have considerable deference for the Senate, but, like all bodies in the world, once in a while the Senate makes a slip and passes something not quite the way it ought to be, and the fact that the bill has passed the Senate has no special weight with me.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. The gentleman notices that we improved on the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "five thousand two hundred and three dollars and twenty-two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four thousand two hundred and thirty dollars."

Page 1, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "five thousand two hundred and three dollars and twenty-two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four thousand two hundred and thirty dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

STEPHEN CAMPBELL AND ISAAC OVERDORF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6722) for the relief of Stephen Campbell and Isaac Overdorf.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Stephen Campbell and Isaac Overdorf, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300 each, and said sum, in all $600, is hereby appropriated as reward for their services in capturing three burglars who attempted to rob the United States post office at Jersey Shore, Pa.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one."

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM KAISER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16127) for the relief of William Kaiser.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Kaiser the sum of $570.47, the amount lost by him while postmaster at Faribault, Minn., through the failure of the First National Bank of that city.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 6, strike out the words "seventy dollars and forty-seven" and insert in lieu thereof the words "sixty-five dollars and four."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object to the consideration of the bill. Reserving the right to object, however, for a moment, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether he has any precedent for the Government paying back to the postmaster money which the postmaster has lost by reason of depositing it in a bank which failed?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have, and I will be glad to refer the gentleman to it. I read the following letter:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, March 2, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES R. DAVIS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry of the 1st instant, by phone, I beg to inform you that Congress, by the act of June 8, 1896 (ch. 373, 29 Stat. L., 295), authorized the Postmaster General to credit the account of William M. Masi, late postmaster at Cheyenne, Wyo., with the amount of Government funds which he had on deposit in the Cheyenne National Bank when it closed its doors and which was lost by him in the failure of said bank.

There may be other cases of this nature, but they can not readily be located.

Very truly, yours,

R. P. GOODWIN,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I have that reference. Is that the only one?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, that is the only one I called for, because the committee asked me if I had any precedent, and I called up the department and it referred immediately to this, and the committee seeming to be satisfied, I went no further. But the gentleman will notice that the Assistant Attorney General says there may be other cases. I conferred with one or two gentlemen who have had long experience on this committee, and while they could not inform me as to any particular case, they said to the best of their recollection there were other cases in recent years of the same kind.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am pretty sure that there has been no case of that sort passed since I have been in Congress, and at that I might be mistaken. I served the Post Office Department as a postmaster, and I distinctly understood that the money was deposited at my own risk.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit, I will explain what this postmaster understands and what I myself understand to be the law.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That a postmaster is prohibited, in fact it might be a misdemeanor, if he deposited his funds in any way other than a First National Bank.

Mr. MANN. Not a misdemeanor and not a First National Bank. The gentleman means a national bank.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. A national bank. As I say, the postmaster understands the law in that respect. He is a very intelligent man. There was not at that time any Government depositary in the city of Faribault, Minn., a city of considerable note, being the former home of Bishop Whipple. The nearest Government depositary at that time was at the city of St. Paul, between 50 and 60 miles away. There was a national bank in the city of Faribault, the First National Bank, considered by the residents, and had been so considered for forty or fifty years, as solvent as the Treasury of the United States. The other men having large business dealings used the First National Bank of Faribault in which to do their business. Mr. Kaiser, the postmaster, did the same. On the 3d day of January, 1905, the doors of the bank were closed. The department was informed of the facts. Almost immediately and within two or three days thereafter an inspector was sent and he investigated the whole situation and made a report to the Government. The reason why a claim was not put in sooner was because of dividends that were expected to follow. Dividends continued to follow until 65⅓ per cent of the $1,620.90, which he had on deposit there, was paid, leaving this balance which we now ask for. I say the law, as I understand it, and as the postmaster understands it, is that he is forbidden to deposit money in any bank other than a national bank. He is permitted where there is no Government depository to deposit in a national bank at his own risk. So says the law.

But the Postmaster General makes a recommendation, as you will notice, on page 2, where he says:

> Inasmuch as the postmaster appears to have complied with the postal laws and regulations, and as the loss appears to have resulted from no fault or negligence on his part, I know of no reason why the relief contemplated by this bill should not be granted.
> F. H. HITCHCOCK,
> Postmaster General.

Then, upon the suggestion of the committee, I hunted up the precedent for exactly this kind of case. There is certainly no negligence on the part of the postmaster. We are not asking interest; he had to borrow money and paid a large amount of interest to recoup the Post Office Department. This is a question for Congress to determine, and it is certainly an equitable case. The law also provides that in case he had kept this money in his safe, in case of burglary or fire or any other unavoidable casualty, the law permits the postmaster to be reimbursed. Now, a difference between a burglary and a loss in this case where he is guilty of no negligence, where for 10 years he had deposited money in this bank, and where nearly all of the business men did likewise, it can not be said that he was negligent, there being no Government depository.

Mr. MANN. You do not have a Government depository in every city in the United States.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. But usually in places of this size——

Mr. MANN. The postal laws and regulations forbid a postmaster depositing money in anything except a national bank——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is what I stated.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated it correctly, and he also stated it is deposited in a national bank at the risk of the postmaster.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. True.

Mr. MANN. And it so expressly stated. The gentleman also stated that if a man had kept the money in an unsafe place——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Or in a safe place ordinarily.

Mr. MANN. In an unsafe place in a safe in his own office where burglars could blow it up that the Government would reimburse him, but if he deposited it in a State bank that may be as sound as the United States if anything happens and he loses the money, or if he deposits it in a national bank, he does it at his own risk.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. But it is permissible to be deposited in a national bank under the law, but he is not permitted to deposit it in a State bank.

Mr. MANN. I was unfortunate enough to be in charge of a post office in a town where there was no national bank, where we always deposited money in the local bank, and I used to get notified about once every month that if I did not stop there would be a change in the post office.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, does not the gentleman believe, inasmuch as the national bank is under supervision of the same Government as the branch which this postmaster was serving, and inasmuch as he was using his discretion, and that the loss having occurred in that institution without any negligence on his part, he having done his full duty, there is a distinction in that that would inure to his benefit against a case in which he was depositing funds in a State institution?

Mr. MANN. I do not think anything of the kind. A man ought to be permitted to deposit his money where he pleases and take the chances, and where he does so he places it at his risk. If the Government is to guarantee deposits, then it had better commence with the ordinary citizens who are poor and lose all they have got.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That would hardly apply to a man acting in an official capacity——

Mr. MANN. Who is well paid——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Who is not well paid for a loss occurring in this manner in a United States institution or a quasi United States institution.

Mr. MANN. I mean to say a postmaster in towns like these are the best-paid Government officials with less work of any class of service that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CAPT. JOSEPH HERRING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 67) for the relief of Capt. Joseph Herring, United States Army, retired.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $402.30 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of Capt. Joseph Herring, United States Army, retired, said sum having been paid out of his own personal funds by the said Capt. Herring into the Treasury on account of errors in his returns during his incumbency as acting commissary of subsistence in the year 1900, said error having occurred as set forth in the accompanying documentary evidence, and according to circumstances over which said Capt. Herring had no control.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not object, but I move to amend, if the gentleman has no objection, by striking out, in line 11, the following language:

> Said error having occurred as set forth in the accompanying documentary evidence, and according to circumstances over which said Capt. Herring had no control.

Of course, there is no accompanying documentary evidence.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. That is really useless, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 1, line 11, strike out the following:
> "Said error having occurred as set forth in the accompanying documentary evidence, and according to circumstances over which said Capt. Herring had no control."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that there is to be a night session, and it will take a little while to pass these bills in the House.

Mr. POU. If the gentleman will agree to take up just one more of these bills where a man lost his life trying to save the lives of two little children——

Mr. MANN. Well, it is a case of a man serving as driver for the Secretary of War. I do not know there is any obligation upon the part of the Government to recompense the claimant.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills to the House, some with amendments and some without amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAINEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, some with amendments and some without amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills as amended be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House reports that that committee has had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar, and has considered favorably certain bills with sundry amendments and others without amendments, and that he has been directed to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills as amended do pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know but that I am taking advantage of the Chair in making it. If the previous question should be considered as ordered on all of these bills, would they come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. They would come up to-morrow unless there is some privileged matter which would interfere. Does the gentleman from North Carolina move the previous question on these bills or not?

Mr. POU. I move the previous question on the bills and amendments thereto to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] for the previous question on these bills and the amendments thereto to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William J. McKeever, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HANNA, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HUGHES of Georgia, for the balance of the week, on account of sickness.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, MAURER AGAINST BARTHOLDT.

Mr. KORBLY. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the Committee on Elections No. 2 I desire to present a report in the case of Maurer against Bartholdt and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. KORBLY], from the Committee on Elections No. 2, presents a report in the contested-election case of Maurer against Bartholdt.

Mr. MANN. Let the resolution be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 681 (H. Rept. 1168).

The Committee on Elections No. 2 has had under consideration the contested-election case of Charles J. Maurer against Hon. Richard Bartholdt, from the tenth congressional district of Missouri, and begs leave to report as follows:

The allegations of fraud made by contestant were not sustained by the evidence adduced; in fact, no evidence whatever was presented to substantiate the charge.

The allegation that contestee was not a naturalized citizen was not sustained. On the contrary, contestee furnished incontrovertible proof by the presentation of his naturalization papers, legally issued on May 23, 1877, that he is and has been a legal citizen of the United States since that date. Therefore we beg to submit the following resolution for adoption:

Resolved, That Hon. Richard Bartholdt is entitled to his seat as a Representative of the tenth congressional district of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. KORBLY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Dr. BARTHOLDT is entitled to his seat.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, GILL AGAINST CATLIN.

Mr. KORBLY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 2 I am directed to serve notice to gentlemen on the other side of the Hall that on Monday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the report on the contested-election case of Gill against Catlin will be called up by the chairman of the committee.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow I may proceed for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one hour to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman going to discuss?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I am going to discuss the activities of the present House in connection with labor measures.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] wants 15 minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] concludes, I may have 25 minutes. I have not taken up any time at this session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that immediately after the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] concludes to-morrow, he shall have 25 minutes in which to address the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask both of the gentlemen a question for his own information and the public good. Would the gentlemen prefer to go on immediately after the Journal is read in the morning, or wait until the House has passed the bills on which the previous question has been ordered?

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the bills be passed first. But that can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. POU. I will agree to that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, was the request of the gentleman from North Carolina granted?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] may have 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks that after the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] concludes his remarks to-morrow the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] shall have 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECESS.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, for the purpose of discussing the reports from the committee investigating the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. MANN. That is fixed by the rule.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and nothing else is to be done. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] to preside at the evening session.

The motion of Mr. STANLEY was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At the expiration of the recess, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., resumed its session, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CANDLER.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we take a recess for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to take a recess for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly, at 8 o'clock and 1 minute p. m., the House took a recess until 8 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.

STEEL INVESTIGATION.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the question under consideration before the House is one of the most important questions that has been up for consideration in this Congress. It is a question in which all of the people are interested and we ought to have a full representation on this floor, and I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina will state it.

Mr. PAGE. Was there not an agreement in the House when the order was made for this night session that it was to be for debate only; and, whether or not it was so expressed, was there not an understanding that there was to be no call of the House?

Mr. JACKSON. No other business.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there was no understanding that there was not to be a call of the House. It was understood that this was to be a regular meeting of the House, and there ought to be a quorum present, particularly in view of the importance of the question under consideration.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of no quorum. It will take considerable time to call the roll, and if we can notify the Members by the bell signals we can get the full number here, I think, to listen to the speeches; and, in any event, most of the Members will read the debate. I think the fact that they are not here to-night does not indicate that they are not interested.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, so far as the debate is concerned, all those who have anything to say on the subject might just as well insert their remarks in the RECORD as speak to empty benches. I insist upon my point of no quorum.

Mr. JACKSON. That is true, but there was quite a good audience last evening, and there will be more Members come in shortly.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. There will when we get a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Twenty-eight Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] moves a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIS) there were 9 ayes and 15 noes.

So the motion was lost.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is to proceed with the discussion.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that you can not proceed with the discussion when it has developed that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the motion for a call of the House was not understood by those voting on it, and I move a call of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I raise a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. No other business has intervened since the call of the House was voted down, and the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not now in order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the call of the House was voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves to reconsider the vote whereby the call of the House was refused.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 9, noes 11.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the last four or five motions have been dilatory, and gentlemen ought not to have a filibuster going on with the galleries full to hear the oratory. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House can not proceed without a quorum.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was lost.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The House has twice refused a call of the House, and I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is dilatory and not in order.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. There has been an intervening motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all these proceedings be vacated and that we proceed as if it was now 8 o'clock. I offer my apologies for being so late, and I am sorry the House did not take a recess as it did last night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that a recess of 10 minutes was taken.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to vacate all previous proceedings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to vacate all proceedings up to the present time. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he desires to proceed at this time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That was the understanding with the gentleman from Kentucky when the House adjourned yesterday.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and on request of the gentleman from Massachusetts all proceedings up to this time are vacated.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, before beginning my address, which is going to be more of a discussion of remedies than a consideration of what has taken place in the past, I am going to beg the indulgence of the House if I read merely the summary of the minority report. This is the entire minority report which I hold in my hand, and the summary occupies less than two pages.

First, we divide our summary into two divisions—the findings of fact and the recommendations.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

The four Republican members of the committee are substantially unanimous as to the facts.

We find that J. P. Morgan & Co., underwriters of the syndicate, received sixty-two and one-half million dollars for organizing the United States Steel Corporation.

We find that the corporation was capitalized at fourteen hundred million dollars, of which about one-half was "water."

We find that the average annual earnings of the corporation have been from 11 to 12 per cent on the actual value of its assets.

We find that the corporation controls a little over one-half of the crude and finished steel business of the United States.

We find that the average wholesale price of steel products has fallen off slightly since the corporation was organized.

We find that the corporation and all the independents have an understanding as to prices.

We find that the system of interlocking directorates has insidious consequences and facilitates inside management and the stifling of competition.

We find that the situation as to the iron-ore supply is grave and may become menacing.

We find that labor conditions in certain departments of the steel industry are bad.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. By what process does the gentleman arrive at his conclusions of the earnings of the Steel Corporation upon the actual value of its investment? Does the gentleman include the reinvestments out of the earnings, the purchases of bonds to be placed in the sinking fund, and items of that kind?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. We take exactly the same course as is taken by the Commissioner of Corporations, Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, in his report. The gentleman is undoubtedly familiar with the method. The method is this: He takes the actual value of the property in the year 1901 and ascertains the earnings for that year. He then calculates the percentage of increase for that year. The next year he revalues the property, adding all increases in assets, whether they come from increased value of ore lands or from profits turned back into the plant in the previous year. Thus he arrives at the percentage of profits for the second year. He proceeds through the whole 10 years upon that principle and then strikes his average. The Commissioner of Corporations reports an annual average of 12 per cent earnings. We thought it somewhat less, because we thought he had somewhat undervalued the ore lands.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Then the Commissioner of Corporations does not include in the profits of the corporation that portion of the profits which the corporation uses for reinvestment purposes and consequently the showing of net earnings would be much less than they actually are.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The commissioner professes to include all actual earnings. He finds an average of 12 per cent on the valuation for each of the years—that is, on the actual tangible property for each year.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit me, I would say that I took occasion about a year ago to go over all of the reports of the corporation and made an analysis of them for myself. I found that including the earnings, the reinvestments, and purchases of bonds, which had been made for funding purposes, the actual net earnings of the corporation for the nine and three-quarters years of its existence up to that time were a little over $1,400,000,000, more than 10 per cent interest upon the entire stock of the corporation, common and preferred, including the water.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That would be about 10 per cent?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; not on the actual value of the property, but upon the face value of the stock, making about 20 or 25 per cent upon the actual value of the property.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That all depends. The gentleman of course can take his figures. I carry no brief for Herbert Knox Smith. As you all know, he is a leader in the Progressive Party. I am not attempting to defend him; but I say that in spite of the gentleman's bookkeeping on his own account I am inclined to accept the findings of the Commissioner of Corporations.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I have not done any bookkeeping of my own. I have taken the report of the bookkeeping of the corporation as given in its annual reports, and there is no getting away from that conclusion.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And for all that, the Commissioner of Corporations arrived at an entirely different conclusion.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. I will say that the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] is supported by Mr. McRae, a certified accountant.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes; and anybody who figures in that way and omits compound interest and puts the valuation the gentleman does on the property will arrive at that conclusion. Where we differ is as to the value of the property. I think that the valuation of the Commissioner of Corporations is sound and that the gentleman's is unsound.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I shall proceed if the gentleman will permit me. He can ask me all of the questions he chooses after I get through.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I wanted to bring out the points at this particular time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman once more.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I wanted to state at this point that according to the gentleman's own conclusions about one-half of the face value of the stock represents water.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Precisely.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. And if the face value be $1,400,000,000 and the earnings be $1,400,000,000 in 10 years, then there can be no getting away from the fact that 20 per cent has been earned upon the actual value.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Oh, I think the gentleman has forgotten compound interest on reinvested earnings. I prefer to take the statement of the Commissioner of Corporations to that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The commissioner had all of the material at hand that the gentleman had. We have given a great deal of study to these figures. In saying that I do not mean to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not been giving study to them, but I think on the whole I should rather take the opinion of the recent Commissioner of Corporations, Progressive though he be, than that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I submit two tables of figures prepared by the Commissioner of Corporations.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now proceed with the recommendations which we, the minority, make. We divide our recommendations into three classes. First, constructive legislation. We recommend that all corporations exceeding $50,000,000 in capitalization or valuation must become United States corporations before entering interstate commerce. For smaller corporations United States charters are voluntary.

All United States corporations must be recapitalized at their actual value.

An Interstate Commission of Industry, like the Interstate Commerce Commission, is to be established. Publicity is to be provided for.

When the price fixed by a United States corporation has been found to be unreasonable, the Interstate Commission of Industry must publicly declare that fact and recommend a reasonable price. Interlocking directorates and "holding companies" are forbidden, except when permitted by the Interstate Commission of Industry.

If the foregoing recommendations shall prove insufficient to meet the trust problem, the Interstate Commission of Industry ought to be given a carefully guarded power to decree maximum prices when necessary.

With regard to the proposed palliative legislation, we approve it; but, in our opinion, it does not go to the root of the trust question. Industrial corporations ought not to own common carriers. "Unreasonable restraint of trade" must be defined by law—and we give our approval to the definitions in the Stanley bill, presented with the majority report. The burden of proof of "reasonableness" should be transferred to the defendant when a restraint of trade has been shown to exist. Individuals and States ought to have the opportunity to intervene in Government suits. Provision should be made for extensive powers and instructions for courts when combinations are adjudged illegal. The Stanley bill provides for increased powers, or at all events for powers which have not yet been exercised by the courts. Whether the courts already have those powers or not is a question on which lawyers disagree. The Stanley bill, however, omits to give the court instructions.

We make the recommendation to the United States Steel Corporation that in the blast furnaces and rolling mills three shifts of men working 8 hours each ought to take the place of two shifts of men working 12 hours each.

DEFINITION.

I do not propose to split hairs over the meaning of the word "trust." When I say "trust" I mean a gigantic business organization of some sort. I do not mean a coalition of separate concerns more or less loosely bound together by some probably illegal agreement as to prices or as to other matters. If a combination among the packers really exists, as alleged, I should call it "the beef pool" rather than "the Beef Trust."

GENESIS OF A TRUST.

Just a few words by way of explanation of the evolution of pools and trusts.

In modern business so-called overhead charges are large. Such charges as insurance, rentals, superintendence, renewals, and depreciation run on whether factories are running full time or half time. The cost of a pattern or a mold is no greater whether it is intended for the production of 1,000 pieces or 10,000 pieces.

The practical experience of many branches of the steel business in the eighties and nineties is illuminating. A number of competitive manufacturers were conducting, for example, the steel-plate business at a fair profit over the cost of production. For one reason or another prices fell. To save his profit each manufacturer tried to meet the situation by increasing his output. Obviously enough, if his overhead and general expenses were not increased, the more articles he could produce the less each article cost him. The inevitable result was a tremendously overstocked market and unremunerative prices. Inevitably a combination to fix prices and apportion sales resulted. From this simple beginning has developed the finished product of the trust.

As Prof. Macrosty puts it:

Starting from the simple combined refusal to trade at a loss and leading up to a position of dominance of an industry scarcely distinguishable from a monopoly.

MARKING TIME.

We have been marking time on the question of the trusts for over 20 years. We are not really dissolving them, nor are we really recognizing them. We are still hesitating at the parting of the ways. Now and then we move a few timid, halting steps one way or the other, when public opinion has so overheated our stance that our tender political feet can no longer bear it.

If we wish to dissolve the trusts, the time has come to say so. If we wish to recognize the trusts, the time has come to be definite about it. Do not misunderstand me as adversely criticizing the bills presented by the Democratic majority of the Stanley committee. In my opinion, substantially all the practices at which those bills are aimed are unfair and ought to be suppressed. Moreover, I entirely agree with the majority that industrial enterprises ought not to own railroads and that interlocking directorates ought to be curbed.

But if every one of the majority's bills introduced by Mr. STANLEY were to be enacted into law to-day we should be no nearer the settlement of the trust question. The majority bills do not spell dissolution. The stock market tells us so plainly enough. If we really wish to break up the trusts, all we have to do is to forbid the concentration of more than a given amount of capital under a single management and then instruct our courts to dissolve existing trusts into corporations within the prescribed size. That will break up the trusts fast enough, but it will not prevent the surviving subdivisions from arriving at a price understanding in a very short time.

MAKE THE TRUSTS BEHAVE.

I do not believe in dissolution as a remedy for the trust problem. I believe that every trust ought to be made a "good" trust. Trusts ought to be made to behave themselves, and they can be made to behave themselves the moment that we have the pluck to recognize them instead of shilly-shallying around the outskirts of the question.

What we need is good, drastic recognition of large industrial units. We have fooled too long with genteel dissolution.

I grant you that in my opinion the American people are not ready for the recognition even of partial monopolies. It is none the less my duty to point out my reasons for coming to the opposite conclusion.

OLD AND NEW STYLES IN BUSINESS MEN.

Most men, if it were possible, would like to see a return of the old system of competition; yes, even of the old system of cut-throat competition. I confess that I am such a man myself. But will dissolution restore old-fashioned competition?

The mere fact that the dissolutions hitherto decreed have been unsatisfactory to the people may, perhaps, be no argument. As I said just now, it is easy enough to draft a law which will really dissolve the trusts; but the soup house is a good deal more likely to follow than is old-fashioned competition. You can lead the modern big business man to competitive conditions, but you can not make him compete.

The pioneer manufacturer would rather fight than eat. His modern successor would rather eat than fight. Formerly the manufacturer armed himself with a tomahawk before he dealt with his rivals. Perhaps in those days one rival lived in Pittsburgh and the other in Chicago. They glared at each other but seldom met, except when one or the other of them wished to buy out at a bargain sale the slaughtered remains of his competitor. To-day big business rivals belong to the same club in New York and call each other "Old man" over the long-distance telephone.

THE HORIZON FOR AMBITION.

Most people believe that the trust system stifles the ambitions of young men; that under modern industrial conditions the employed are more numerous and the masters fewer. To satisfy ambition with the mere prospect of a lordly salary is as difficult a task as to reconcile the lion to captivity with a surfeit of juicy mutton. What man is there who does not hope some day to be his own master? What man is there who is not the better for that hope?

And yet day after day as we listened to the witnesses in the steel investigation, more and more I realized that the owners of these great corporations are not their true masters so much as are the strong-minded, clear-headed men who run the chief departments. The managers of the steel corporation, to be sure, are the servants of 125,000 stockholders and are accountable to those stockholders, just as we Congressmen are the servants of our constituents and accountable to our constituents. For all that, to be the manager of one of the great divisions of the United States Steel Corporation is worthy of any man's ambition, just as it is worthy of any man's ambition to serve 200,000 people in the great historic House of Representatives of the United States.

THE SPUR OF DESIRE FOR GAIN.

You tell me that the recognition and regulation of a monopoly, whether partial or entire, checks at once its desire for improvement and progress. Clearly enough, if a corporation is allowed to earn a certain percentage and no more, it will be a matter of indifference to that corporation whether it clings to old-fashioned ways or whether it seeks to keep pace with the times. Even if adequate regulation should in the future necessitate a limitation on dividends, I can not admit that the dilemma defies solution. Profit-sharing devices, under which corporations and the public both participate in increased earnings, are entirely practicable. The prospect of increased profits surely supplies a motive for improvement. Moreover, it is hardly supposable that the percentage of the annual dividend of a corporation would be more than one of the many lamps which would illuminate the Federal authorities in estimating the reasonableness of any given price.

THE COMPETITIVE FETICH.

Competition, old-fashioned competition, what brutalities have been committed in thy name! The groceryman in the small town, who undersells his competitor till the latter is bankrupt, and the Tobacco Trust, which gives rebates to exclusive purchasers until the small independent surrenders, each of them is but following the practices of mankind ever since competition began.

The majority of the steel investigating committee calls for the restoration of old-fashioned competition, and yet it proposes laws to prevent the incidents of that very competition. Quite rightly, too. These unfair competitive practices are unworthy of the modern business man and ought to be checked; but woe betide the Government which tries to ride two horses going in opposite directions. For years, we have been preaching competition and practicing cooperation. The steel hearings revealed to us officially a series of facts which everyone already knew, to wit, that railroad traffic agreements exist in defiance of the letter of the law; that the Interstate Commerce Commission is aware of those agreements and utilizes them, and that no living man in the country objects. Why? Because those agreements are reasonable and have the tacit approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Is there no lesson in favor of recognition and regulation to be drawn from all that?

WILL DISSOLUTION REDUCE PRICES?

Some people believe, or pretend to believe, that the dissolution of the trusts would ultimately mean lower prices. I believe the contrary, but can not prove it. Prices of steel products such as are sold by the trust have fallen off during the very decade in which the prices of most commodities have rapidly increased. That the Steel Trust has made on an average 12 per cent annually on the actual value of its assets, I think is fairly proved. Enormous as were the profits of promotion and handsome as the corporations earnings have been, I feel that the economies of production consequent upon consolidation have far outstripped the profits to the promoters and owners. In other words, the large profits which the corporation has devoured offset but a limited part of the beneficial economics consequent on consolidation.

ENGLISH MASTERS OF ECONOMIC THOUGHT.

For over half a century Adam Smith and John Stuart Mill have ruled the world. They taught us that competition is the cure for all evil; that the best way to govern is to leave enterprise to work out its own salvation, and that the mere size of an industrial undertaking can not in itself present a monopolistic feature. The economic truth of one age is the exploded fallacy of the next. Economic laws based on assumptions as to the normal size of families are dissolved by a single wave of race suicide. It is a long distance from the "laissez faire" doctrine to the decree of the circuit court in the case of the United States v. The General Electric Co. The old laws of competition stand respectfully aside at a family meeting of modern capitalists.

THE NEW SCHOOL.

A new school of economic thought has arisen. I take a little pride in the consciousness that I have a desk in that school, even though Dr. Osler has decreed that my time of life condemns me to wear the foolscap. With very sincere regret I have torn many a page out of Adam Smith and John Stuart Mill. I no longer believe that the nation which is the least governed is necessarily the best governed. I no longer believe in the unlimited freedom of contract between employer and employed. I am definitely of the opinion that the mere bigness of a modern industrial undertaking often gives it a monopolistic character.

Many persons of a conservative turn of mind are to-day hoping against hope that the removal of all unfair advantages and special opportunities out of reach of the trusts will in itself restore competition. They believe that the man with small capital working for his own interests will hold his own, and more too, against the giant corporation managed by salaried officials, if only unfair competitive tactics are eliminated. Ten years ago I shared that belief. To-day I assert that sometimes it is true and sometimes it is not true.

Adam Smith and Mill taught us that unusual profits in any business must necessarily invite competitive capital into that business. Clearly, that was so in the days of small corporations and copartnerships. It is so to-day in industries like cotton manufacturing and shoemaking. But is it true, for instance, in the business of making agricultural machinery, or of producing crude steel?

Mr. STANLEY. Would it interrupt the gentleman if I should ask a question on that point? Does the gentleman believe that it is true in all industries to-day where there is no control of the natural resources; that is, where the combination is open at both ends, that enlarged profits will invite competition?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not think so. I think in shoemaking, for instance, that mere size would not produce a successful trust unless perchance the packers and leather dealers should take up the business. Every shoemaker has his specialties, one makes ladies' high-class shoes, another makes men's welts, and so forth. If you can not find a market for an unlimited number of shoes from the same patterns, I think it would be difficult to establish a successful trust——

Mr. STANLEY. But there do you bring in the question of patent?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; I said "pattern."

Mr. STANLEY. Excuse me, I thought you said "patent."

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I believe that even when there is no limited natural resource at the foundation of an industry, even if there is no unreasonable restraint of trade, even if there are no unfair practices, nevertheless a monopoly more or less complete may be created. Take away the control of natural resources, remove all unfair advantages, forbid the industrial ownership of transportation companies, give the small corporation an even start with the big corporation; even then I do not believe that you can restore competition. Mere bigness, I believe, may result in a more or less perfect monopoly.

I know more about the General Electric Co. than about any other of these large combinations which have been under fire. Its Lynn plant is in my county. It has advantages through patents; but I think the fact that it can occupy practically the whole field in certain lines results from the mere bigness of the company.

Demonstrate to the world as much as you choose that the profits of the United States Steel Corporation or those of the International Harvester Co. are unusually large, prove that fact to every capitalist on earth, and do you think that men can be found who will supply the capital to create great competitors in the same fields? The mere fact that the field may supply rich pasture for one elephant by no means indicates that it will supply sufficient pasture for two. In modern business you must fight one elephant with another elephant. [Laughter and applause.] Oh, I know what you are going to say. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOWMAN. The same statement would apply to donkeys. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Of course, a deluge of demagoguery about "the Money Trust" has been poured out upon us. For all that, ask yourselves how far you think a promoter would get in trying to raise the money to parallel some mammoth enterprise of J. P. Morgan & Co. Very likely Mr. Morgan's miraculous power can not be bequeathed to any heir or be grasped by any ruthless successor. Probably his power will die with him. Be that as it may, even the most ardent economist of the old school finds himself strictly on the defensive in the discussion of present-day questions of competition.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to excuse me for interrupting him, but I want to ask my friend from Massachusetts a simple question. Does he believe that J. Pierpont Morgan's miraculous power would be miraculous one hour after the law was honestly and fearlessly executed?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes; I think it would. I will put it this way: I remember very well, when I was in business myself, before the Spanish War, that brokers used to come into the office to get us to subscribe to new enterprises or to take part in the underwriting of reorganizations. Local brokers or correspondents of the various New York houses would bring into your office some proposition, and say, "Would you care to take $10,000 or $20,000 underwriting for your people?" You would look the list over to see who was taking the underwriting and who was managing it. In those days it was most important to us in Massachusetts to ascertain what Boston people had their names on the list. For instance, if we saw the name of some conservative old investor, we would say, "That must be a pretty good thing, or he would not go into it."

That is all changed now I am told. People in Boston and everywhere else look to see whether Morgan's name is connected with a new undertaking. The reputation which he has secured of making things a success is the force which carries them through with the investing public.

Mr. STANLEY. That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly the crux of the question between us. Would his name have that miraculous power if he operated under the law instead of in defiance of the law?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think it would. Suppose that somebody said to you, "Jones says that the supply of mackerel is increasing," and somebody else said to you, "GARDNER represents the mackerel fisheries, and he says the fish is disappearing." You would be apt to take my opinion. The average Member would say, "On the matter of mackerel, GARDNER'S judgment is generally pretty good. I do not care to invest in a mackerel schooner."

On the same line of reasoning, I think that Morgan's name would carry marvelous weight under any circumstances, irrespective of the stringency or laxity of the law's enforcement. However, that is merely my own opinion, and it is not a question to which I have given more than casual thought.

Probably, I say, Mr. Morgan's power will die with him.

THE REMEDIES OF THE REPUBLICAN MINORITY.

The minority of the steel investigating committee has not thought it well to complicate the trust problem by discussing at the present time the questions arising from price associations, pools, sales' associations, or, indeed, any of the systems embraced under the German word "kartel."

COMPULSORY NATIONAL INCORPORATION AND RECAPITALIZATION.

Leaving out of consideration the palliative legislation offered by the majority—most of which we, the minority, approve—we offer a comprehensive and far-reaching plan of constructive legislation affecting mammoth corporations. We recommend that corporations exceeding in valuation the amount of $50,000,000 shall be compelled to take out an United States charter, first recapitalizing at the actual value of their assets. Fifty millions of assets is the amount suggested tentatively as the standard for compulsory United States incorporation. Perhaps the annual volume of business might be a better standard than the actual valuation.

AN INTERSTATE COMMISSION OF INDUSTRY.

Next we propose the creation of an Interstate Commission of Industry, to be modeled largely on the Interstate Commerce Commission. This commission is to be intrusted with the oversight of all questions relating to the capitalization and accounting of United States corporations. It shall require such publicity in all matters as the public interest shall require, giving as much regard as is possible to the preservation of trade secrets.

It shall be clothed with the power to regulate interlocking directorates, to the end that the baneful practice of one corporation being operated in the interest of some other corporation may come to an end.

THE SIMPLEST ORGANIZATION IS THE BEST.

The minority is strongly of the belief that deception and chicanery in business have been strikingly facilitated by complexity of organization. Any man can readily understand the mechanism of a corporation which has outstanding a million shares of stock of $100 each, all paid in. With very little financial knowledge he can fairly estimate such a company's soundness as an investment. If the company in question is a public-service corporation, the problem which faces the legislator or the commissioner is vastly simplified. Contrast the simplicity of the machinery of such a company with the impenetrable jungle of a "holding" company.

There are plenty of sound reasons against "holding" companies. There are some sound reasons for their existence, especially for temporary purposes of organization, but the verdict must be against them.

We believe that the directors of a corporation ought to be responsible for every act of that organization.

I for one believe that Judge Gary spoke the truth when he said that he was ignorant of the wire pool to which the American Steel & Wire Co. was a party. The American Steel & Wire Co. has its own board of directors, but all its stock is held by the United States Steel Corporation, and the directors of the United States Steel Corporation once a year vote the directors of the subordinate company in and out of office. Unquestionably, the subordinate managers wished to make a strong showing, and probably they concealed their performances for fear that they would be stopped. The point we emphasize is that the United States Steel Corporation could not without the knowledge of its directors have joined in that wire pool, if it had not been a "holding" company.

A mammoth corporation, whose mechanism every man can understand, will not so much excite the public mistrust as a smaller corporation whose construction and operation is shrouded in a web of intricacy.

We therefore propose to clothe the interstate commission of industry with the power to issue permits to "holding" companies only for temporary purposes.

THE FIXATION OF PRICES.

We now come to the question of the fixation of prices by a Government commission. We, the minority, do not contend that this power must necessarily be given to the commission; but we feel that we ought not to shrink from that step if the trusts can be controlled in no other way.

As a matter of fact, we are not far away from price fixation to-day. The price of gas, electricity, and transportation is already fixed by legislatures or commissions. The price of water power will probably soon be controlled in the same way.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the gentleman draw no distinction in the fixing of prices between public and quasi-public corporations and strictly private concerns?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes, indeed; but between quasi-public corporations and private concerns there are many intermediate grades. It is very hard to draw the line.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, may I interpose a question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes. But I am coming to this question that the gentleman from Kentucky has asked.

Mr. JACKSON. Under the common law and our practice, does not an institution that becomes a monopoly become in a sense a public corporation?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Now, it is not such a long step from the kind of control exercised by a water power, which is monopolistic in its nature, to the kind of control exercised by an organization which owns or leases 50 per cent of the highly metallic ore resources of this country. There is a strong monopolistic feature in that situation also. I take it that the principle involved is simple enough. The people are content to let competition fix prices so long as competition can perform that function. When, on the other hand, industries become monopolistic in their nature, as railroads are, for instance, the people refuse to sit quiescent and permit private enterprises to charge all which the traffic will bear. At this point the Nation steps in and puts a commission in control. Obviously, in cases where competition is no longer operative, the people will insist that prices shall be kept within bounds by a governmental agency.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission at the present time fixes railroad rates?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In lieu of those found unreasonable.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Is it not a fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission in its last three annual reports has recited that it is unable to fix basic rates, because it has not been given the power to make physical valuations, and can not therefore——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Oh, if the gentleman from Oregon will please not interrupt me with that kind of a question.

Mr. LAFFERTY. If the gentleman can not answer it——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I can answer it. Physical valuation is——

Mr. LAFFERTY. Why does not Congress give the Interstate Commerce Commission that power?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I can not tell you.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Are you willing to vote for it?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes; and I have said so on the floor of this House.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I agree with you.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am certain that under present circumstances many of the trusts are more or less monopolies. I am strongly of the opinion that gigantic size, apart from everything else, gives a substantial degree of monopoly to any enterprise. If so, and if it is impossible to dissolve these monopolies or partial monopolies without detriment to the efficiency of our national production, then let us squarely recognize them and mold them into conformity with the public weal.

The Massachusetts railroad law does not give the railroad commissioners the right to fix rates, but only the right to recommend rates. For two decades the system has proved satisfactory. I can not recollect that the railroads ever disregarded a recommendation of the commissioners. Accordingly, the minority proposes that whenever the price charged for any article by an United States corporation shall have been found to be unreasonable, it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commission of Industry to make public announcement of the fact, simultaneously recommending a reasonable price to be charged in its stead.

As to what may ultimately be necessary in the direction of price fixation, it will be well to quote the exact words of our minority report:

> Should the powers which we suggest prove insufficient to enable the Interstate Commission of Industry to exercise a salutary control over United States corporations, we recommend that further legislation be enacted bestowing on the commission a carefully guarded power to fix a maximum price in lieu of any price adjudged to be unreasonable.
> We, the minority, are fully alive to the fact that this recommendation runs counter to the time-honored doctrines of the greatest English-speaking political economists of the past. It even runs counter to much historical experience. Nevertheless, we are also aware that the great political economists of the past contemplated no situation such as now confronts us. In this twentieth century combinations, international in their scope, have, by their immense preponderance of power, distorted the operation of general economic laws.
> After the most serious deliberation, with a profound consciousness that this doctrine will offend many a deep student of public affairs, with a sincere hope that such a step may not prove necessary, nevertheless it is our belief that we ought not to shrink from violating our traditional policy if experience shall convince us that the trust problem can not otherwise be met.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. With pleasure.

Mr. HARDY. Did the minority consider the proposition of the advisability of legislation which would forbid these vast enterprises to kill competition by underpricing instead of fixing the maximum price, requiring that they should not be allowed to undersell competitors for the purpose of driving them from the market?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. We did, indeed. We thought of establishing the power to set maximum and minimum figures, between which extremes the price must fluctuate.

Mr. HARDY. Then, did you think of the idea of requiring the sales of commodities by these vast concerns to be uniform over the whole country?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes; we approved the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], which fairly meets the question. As to the fixation of a maximum and minimum price, I think I am perfectly at liberty to say that we decided not to discuss that question in our report. There was some difference of opinion amongst ourselves. If I recollect rightly, the House of Representatives struck out the provision for a minimum rate when the railroad rate bill was before the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARDY. They substituted, or rather inserted, a provision that if they did reduce the rate they should not be allowed to raise it without permission later.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have forgotten the exact provision.

Mr. HARDY. I think that was the provision.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It may be better to move wrongfully than not to move at all after 20 years of marking time.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion—that you have your choice in this matter of moving wrong or of not moving at all.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not quite understand the gentleman's suggestion.

PHANTOM BOUNDARIES.

We, the minority, believe that State boundaries have been obliterated by mammoth business. We draw the line sharply which separates us from those public men of a bygone school who still believe that the trusts can be controlled or ought to be controlled by the strange entanglement of statutes which issue from the legislatures of 48 different States.

SEEING GHOSTS.

The minority is by no means satisfied that its own proposals are flawless. It believes them to be constitutional, but would not stand aghast if they are otherwise. The trust problem is of sufficient importance to demand a constitutional amendment if necessary to its settlement.

Logicians can easily point out a succession of evils or at least perplexities which must inevitably flow from the adoption of our views. The ink is hardly dry which printed those same prophecies when the Interstate Commerce Commission was created. To him who calls our plan semisocialistic, we might retort by comparing the policy of dissolution to an attempt at turning backward Old Time in his flight.

CONCLUSION.

It may be that civilization is in a cycle of evolution during which socialism's dismal creed must have a trial. It may be that government control will ultimately lead into collective ownership and out of it again. The science of statesmanship requires us to solve the pressing problem, not to stand dumbfounded and inactive because in no direction is the future clear.

The law of change is that men must move. If we can foresee the ultimate goal of each step, so much the better. If we must leap in the twilight, let us strain our eyes to the utmost, and then, trusting to the Almighty, fearlessly choose the direction which seems the best.

That was the way of the fathers.
That shall be the way of the children.

APPENDIX.

INVESTIGATION OF UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts, from the Special Committee to Investigate Violations of the Antitrust Act of 1890 and Other Acts, submitted the following views of the minority:

SUMMARY—FINDINGS OF FACT.

That J. P. Morgan & Co. and the underwriting syndicate received $62,500,000 for organizing the United States Steel Corporation.

That the corporation was capitalized at $1,400,000,000, of which nearly one-half was "water."

That the average annual earnings of the corporation have been from 11 to 12 per cent on the actual value of its assets.

That the corporation controls a little over one-half the crude and finished steel business of the United States.

That the average wholesale price of steel products has fallen off since the corporation was organized.

That the corporation and all the independents have an understanding as to prices.

That the system of interlocking directorates has insidious consequences and facilitates "inside management" and the stifling of competition.

That the situation as to iron-ore supply is grave and may become menacing.

That labor conditions in certain departments of the steel industry are bad.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

1. Constructive legislation: All corporations exceeding $50,000,000 in capitalization or valuation must become United States corporations before entering interstate commerce. For smaller corporations United States charters are voluntary.

All United States corporations must be recapitalized at their actual value.

An interstate commission of industry, like the Interstate Commerce Commission, to be established. Publicity to be provided for.

When the price fixed by a United States corporation has been found to be unreasonable, the interstate commission of industry must publicly declare that fact and recommend a reasonable price.

Interlocking directorates and "holding" companies forbidden except when permitted by interstate commission of industry.

If foregoing recommendations shall prove insufficient to meet the trust problem, the interstate commission of industry ought to be given a carefully guarded power to decree maximum prices when necessary.

2. Palliative legislation: Industrial corporations not to own common carriers.

"Unreasonable restraint of trade" defined and burden of proof of "reasonableness" transferred to the defendant.

Individuals and States to have the opportunity to intervene in Government suits.

Extensive powers and instructions for courts when combinations are adjudged illegal.

3. Recommendation to the United States Steel Corporation: That in the blast furnaces and rolling mills three shifts of men, working 8 hours each, ought to take the place of two shifts of men working 12 hours each.

PART I.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

We dispute the findings of fact of the majority without attempting to deal specifically with their allegations. By singling out unusual incidents and unusual evidence, selecting unusual years, unusual prices, and unusual practices as a standard of comparison the majority has created an overdrawn picture portraying diabolical ingenuity and sinister malevolence as the characteristics of the United States Steel Corporation officials.

J. P. MORGAN & CO.

The fact is that a very sharp line of discrimination ought to be drawn between the conduct of the banking house which promoted the United States Steel Corporation and the conduct of the exceedingly competent, although perhaps not altruistic, managers who have subsequently made it a success.

In return for promotion services and risks the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. exacted $62,500,000 in compensation for itself and the underwriting syndicate which it managed. Such a sum bore no relation whatever to the service rendered, the risk run, and the capital advanced. We do not hesitate to say that this transaction of J. P. Morgan & Co. must stand condemned before the more enlightened business ethics of later years.

HERBERT KNOX SMITH'S REPORT.

For statistical statements and for close analysis of figures the minority mainly relies on the report of Herbert Knox Smith, until recently Commissioner of Corporations. We have examined each table prepared by the commissioner, and with slight variations we are convinced that his figures are correct. Only in the matter of our iron ore resources, as hereinafter noted, do we take serious issue with him.

CAPITALIZATION AND "WATER."

In substantial agreement with the commissioner we find that the United States Steel Corporation was organized in April, 1901, with about $1,400,000,000 capital of which approximately $600,000,000 to $700,000,000 was "water."

AVERAGE EARNINGS.

In substantial agreement with the commissioner we find that the earnings of the corporation for the decade from 1901 to 1910, inclusive, averaged from 11 to 12 per cent annually on the actual value of the property.

PROPORTION OF OUTPUT.

In substantial agreement with the commissioner we find that in 1901 the Steel Corporation produced about 42⅓ per cent of the total output of pig iron of the United States. It produced about 43 per cent in 1910. In 1901 the Steel Corporation produced about 60 per cent of all the crude and finished steel output of the United States. By 1911 its percentage of that output had dropped to a little over 50 per cent.

WHOLESALE PRICES.

The Commissioner of Corporations has as yet published no findings as to the course of wholesale prices for steel products since the organization of the corporation in 1901.

For our facts in this division of the question we rely on the figures given in Hearings Nos. 6, 36, 52, and 63, on the annual reports of the American Iron & Steel Association, on the Iron Ore Manual, and on the Statistical Abstract of the United States.

We find that in the decade from 1901 to 1910, inclusive, the wholesale price of eight representative steel products fell off from an average of $38.80 per ton to an average of $36.11 per ton.

We subjoin a table of Pittsburgh wholesale prices for each year of the decade.

Year.	Steel rails.	Ship plates, Pittsburgh.	Wire nails, Pittsburgh.	Steel bars, Pittsburgh.	Beams, Pittsburgh.	Tin-plate mill.	Bessemer iron, Pittsburgh.	Steel billets, Pittsburgh.	Average.

COALITIONS IN THE TRADE.

We find that there is a complete accord as to prices between the United States Steel Corporation and all the independents. In general, the United States Steel Corporation sets the prices and the independents follow suit.

Although from time to time so-called "Gary" dinners have been held, we regard these functions as the gastronomic shadow of the price understandings rather than as their substance.

As a matter of common sense, it is obvious that in times of prosperity no "Gary" dinners are necessary to bring about uniformity of steel prices. When orders are satisfactory no independent, unless secretly, would lower prices for the purpose of getting more orders. Obviously, the Steel Corporation could readily distance any independent in a price-cutting race. It needs no interpreter to explain that situation to all concerned. It is equally plain that no independent can raise prices so long as the corporation refuses to do so.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES.

The system of interlocking directorates has insidious consequences which no man can gauge. Yet we venture to say that the evil is not so great to-day as it was five years since. "Inside management" is a term used to express a certain reprehensible practice which a few years ago was all too prevalent in the business world. When in administering the affairs of any corporation, the directors pursue a policy more favorable to their own financial interests than to those of the corporation which they are chosen to represent—to characterize such practices men use the expression "inside management."

Interlocking directorates facilitate "inside management." Interlocking directorates often have been used for the purpose of stifling competition. Yet in many communities it is a distinct advantage not to limit the sphere of usefulness of any business man. We believe that interlocking directorates, like so many other human agencies, are fit subjects for regulation rather than for destruction. We doubt the wisdom of their absolute prohibition unless regulation shall fail to abate the evil.

THE IRON-ORE SUPPLY.

The situation with regard to the iron-ore supply of this country is very serious. Since Herbert Knox Smith made his report, however, two changes for the better have occurred. The Steel Corporation has given notice of the cancellation of its lease of the Hill ore lands, containing approximately 250,000,000 tons of iron ore. Moreover, the most recent report of the Minnesota Tax Commission shows that the quantity of high-grade Lake Superior ore has hitherto been underestimated.

Commissioner of Corporations Smith found that the United States Steel Corporation by ownership or lease controlled about 75 per cent of the high-grade ores of the Lake Superior region. The estimate was made prior to the notice of cancellation of the Hill leases. The commissioner made no estimate of the corporation's proportional holding of southern ores.

Omitting the Hill ore lands, we find that the United States Steel Corporation owns or leases from 50 to 55 per cent of the Lake Superior high-grade ores and owns from 35 to 50 per cent of the ores in the Birmingham district.

This ore situation is grave to-day and in the future may become menacing. Who can doubt that the strength of its position as to ores will prove a potent lever, if used by the corporation, for the exclusion of future competitors from the field of steel making?

THE LABOR SITUATION.

The labor situation in certain manufacturing departments of the steel industry has always been bad, and to-day is bad. As a rule, in the plants of the corporation conditions are better than in the plants of the independents. In the rolling mills and blast furnaces men often have been required to work, or, at all events, remain on more or less exacting duty for 12 hours a day for 7 days in the week. Incredible as it may seem, the fact is indisputable. It is true that a blast furnace must be kept going night and day. If it is extinguished, it is ruined. We believe that the corporation is substantially improving this situation; but we can not forbear from uttering the suggestion that three shifts of 8 hours each ought to take the place of two shifts of 12 hours each. Although, strictly speaking, beyond the scope of our report, we feel that this recommendation to the corporation may with propriety be made.

THE TENNESSEE COAL & IRON CO.

Without injecting into this report a political dispute about former President Roosevelt, it is imposible adequately to discuss the absorption of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. by the United States Steel Corporation. As the matter has but little practical bearing on the serious issues of which we are treating, the minority will confine itself to the general statement that its findings relative to the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. are not in accord with those of the majority.

PART II.

CONCLUSIONS.

We dispute the conclusions of the majority primarily because they are based on the tenacious but antiquated assumption that the true remedy for the evils of industrial combinations lies in their dissolution into greater or lesser subdivisions. Secondarily, we dispute the majority's conclusions in that they fail to suggest adequate means for carrying out their own views. To advocate the present national policy of dissolution while neglecting to suggest appropriate legislation compelling it to be fundamental and thorough is to invite the recurrence of dissolutions unsatisfactory to the people.

TRUE REMEDY LIES IN FEDERAL CONTROL.

While we, the minority, are definitely of the opinion that the true remedy for the trust problem lies in Federal control and in compulsory Federal incorporation, with an unwatered recapitalization, nevertheless we are prepared to admit the possibility, or even probability, that the American people have by no means as yet come to our conclusion.

ONE MORE TRY FOR OLD-FASHIONED COMPETITION.

On the assumption that the American people will insist on one more attempt to restore the competition of bygone days, we sincerely believe that they ought to demand a thorough revision and strengthening of the Sherman Act.

In case the Nation decides to continue the existing policy looking to the dissolution of the trusts, we recommend that instructions to the Federal courts be so extended as to insure the thoroughness and completeness of these dissolutions.

Of the legislation proposed by the majority we have little unfavorable criticism to make other than of its inadequacy to meet the situation. The Nation gasps for the permanent trade wind of constructive measures rather than for the summer zephyr of palliative devices.

However, the principles contained in the bills drafted by the majority are distinctly worthy of commendation, and we give them our approval. But if the policy of dissolution favored by the majority is to be pursued, much additional legislation is required before proper dissolution can be obtained. This legislation the majority has scarcely outlined.

CONSTRUCTIVE LEGISLATION.

If, on the other hand, as we hope, the country should be favorably impressed by the views of the minority, then a series of fundamental legislative changes must be adopted. To the far-reaching constructive measures which we advocate the legislation proposed by the majority may well be added as a desirable embellishment.

(1) We recommend that all corporations or combinations equaling in valuation or in capitalization the amount of $50,000,000, or such other sum as may be determined upon, shall be compelled to acquire a United States charter before engaging in interstate commerce. We recommend that voluntary Federal incorporation shall be provided for lesser organizations. The day has gone by when any niceties of historical policy should be permitted to blind us to the economic obliteration of State lines.

(2) We recommend the establishment of an Interstate Commission of Industry, which shall have control over all corporations operating under a United States charter. This control shall be similar to that which is exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission over the railroad companies, and shall insure the requisite publicity.

(3) Whenever the price charged by a United States corporation for one of its products shall have been found to be unreasonable by some competent authority, to be determined hereafter, we recommend that it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commission of Industry to make public declaration of the fact and to recommend a price in lieu of that found unreasonable.

(4) We recommend that all corporations when they acquire a United States charter shall be required to recapitalize at an amount not to exceed the true value of their assets. In the valuation of their assets, we recommend that nothing be reckoned for so-called "monopoly" value, or value which arises merely from their exclusive, majority, or substantial control of the industry in which they are engaged.

(5) We recommend that interlocking directorates in United States corporations shall be forbidden except when licensed by the Interstate Commission of Industry.

(6) We recommend that so-called "holding" companies shall be forbidden except when licensed for temporary purposes of reorganization by the Interstate Commission of Industry.

(7) Should the powers which we suggest prove insufficient to enable the Interstate Commission of Industry to exercise a salutary control over United States corporations, we recommend that further legislation be enacted bestowing on the commission a carefully guarded power to fix a maximum price in lieu of any price adjudged to be unreasonable.

We, the minority, are fully alive to the fact that this recommendation runs counter to the time-honored doctrines of the greatest English-speaking political economists of the past. It even runs counter to much historical experience. Nevertheless, we are also aware that the great political economists of the past contemplated no situation such as now confronts us. In this twentieth century combinations, international in their scope, have by their immense preponderance of power distorted the operation of general economic laws.

After the most serious deliberation, with a profound consciousness that this doctrine will offend many a deep student of public affairs, with a sincere hope that such a step may not prove necessary, nevertheless it is our belief that we ought not to shrink from violating our traditional policy if experience shall convince us that the trust problem can not otherwise be met.

PALLIATIVE LEGISLATION.

(8) We concur in the recommendation of the majority that industrial corporations shall be forbidden to own common carriers.

(9) We also concur in the recommendation of the majority that parties injuriously affected by combinations should have access to the courts and the benefit of adequate and sufficient remedies for wrongs. Individuals or a State ought to have the opportunity to intervene in a Government suit.

(10) We also concur in the view of the majority that the legal expression "unreasonable restraint of trade" must be defined, that certain obnoxious practices shall be held to be conclusive evidence of "unreasonableness," that in certain other cases the burden of proof of "reasonableness" must rest with the defendant, and that the courts shall have extensive powers when combinations are adjudged illegal. The majority presents a bill covering these questions. When redrafted so as to attain the ends which it seeks to accomplish, we give it our approval, except as regards section 14. Section 14 seeks to create a rebuttable presumption of "unreasonableness" in cases where a combination controls 30 per cent of the domestic trade in a given article. It may perhaps be true that this bill defines as "unreasonable" a number of acts which the common law already interdicts; but it is well to crystallize these definitions into the form of a statute.

EXTRANEOUS LEGISLATION.

(11) As to the recommendation of the majority to the effect that the Commissioner of Corporations should be required to report to Congress as well as to the President, we forbear to express an opinion until we have had an opportunity to hear the question adequately discussed.

AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER.
HENRY G. DANFORTH.

I concur in the above report except that I believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission and the railroad commissions of the several States are clothed with sufficient power to remedy all evils growing out of the ownership of common carriers by industrial corporations. To forbid such ownership would tend to decrease economy and efficiency on the part of the industrials. Furthermore, I am not convinced that the power to fix prices is necessary to the efficiency of Federal control. Should experience, however, demonstrate that I am wrong in this conclusion I should unhesitatingly favor the granting of such power.

H. O. YOUNG.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCGILLICUDDY] such time as he may desire. [Applause.]

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Speaker, I am very seriously impressed with the importance of the issues involved in this report. I have listened with unusual interest to the debate upon it on both sides. It is a serious responsibility that faces the membership of this House and Senate, and if you solve the questions that are now before the people of this country you will render a service rarely equaled in its history. [Applause.]

The simple, plain truth about this matter, gentlemen, is that the plain people of this country have been investigating these matters on their own hook, and they know a good deal more about them than some gentlemen seem to think. [Applause.]

They have learned something of the truth in the last few years. Hence the discontent, the unrest that is now plainly manifest throughout the length and breadth of our country. It is not confined to any particular locality or to any particular party. I was much impressed when my friend from Massachusetts said that they had come to the parting of the ways. I should think they had. [Applause.] We have not; we are doing business at the same old stand. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The truth of it is that the people of the country feel that they have been tricked and cheated by some sort of legerdemain that possibly they do not understand, but they feel it just the same. I know that it is a matter that must be approached with candor, fairness, and deliberation, and I am impressed with the idea that it is a matter concerning which no delicacy of sentiment will restrain honest men from laying the naked truth bare to the whole country. [Applause.]

The people of this country have been led to believe that it was a country of equality of opportunity and of privilege, and that was the one reason that made our country what it is. If it had not been for that idea it would be now what it was a hundred years ago—a barren waste.

Now, instead of being a country of equal opportunity and equal privilege, our people find this to be true: that 50 men—mark my words, for they are true—50 men in your great, free American Republic to-day own 40 per cent of all the wealth in our entire United States of America.

When this particular Steel Corporation was established the people soon found out that the directors of that one corporation alone represented one-twelfth of the entire wealth of the United States. It is further true that 5,000 men at that time represented one-sixth of the entire wealth of our country, and 200,000 men out of a population of 90,000,000 own 70 per cent of all the property in the United States, which left 30 per cent to be divided between the other almost 90,000,000 of people.

I remember in the debate here in the special session that some gentleman on this side of the House was talking along these lines, and our distinguished friend, the ex-Speaker of the House [Mr. CANNON], arose and asked a question—which has gotten to be a very prevalent practice in this House, and I do not think a very good one—and he said:

> I want to remind the gentleman that in 1860 the entire wealth of this country was $16,000,000,000, while now it is $125,000,000,000.

The way he said it you would think that we all had an equal share of that $125,000,000,000. But to the average man in this country the truth of it is that it is not so much a question of how much money there is in this country as it is of who has it. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, take the incomes of the people. One family in 20 has an income of only $3,000 throughout the whole country. That is a very modest sum. Two-thirds of the families in the country have less than $900 income. More than one-half have less than $600 a year, and more than 4,000,000 families, or almost one-third of our entire population, have to get along on less than $400 a year. I tell you, these things set the common people to thinking. You can not fool them about it.

Now, I think the report of this committee and the facts inside the covers of the testimony have some relation to these matters. The United States Steel Corporation was formed and began business April 1, 1901. It was capitalized for $1,402,000,000. If you say that quick it does not seem to amount to a great deal; but what does it really represent to me and to you and the country? Why, to me, when I figure it up, that immense capitalization represents all the property, real, personal, and mixed, there is in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont put together. Now, that is an awful capitalization for one corporation.

How much of that capitalization was water? I am going to be very conservative, because that is my nature. The evidence taken before this committee by competent witnesses seems to show that there was three-quarters of it water, but I am going to be more conservative than that. I am going to take the figures of the Commissioner of Corporations, and his figures were that one-half of it was water. That is $700,000,000 of water in one corporation. What does that mean? Why, gentlemen, it means that a valuation equal to all the property in my State, including cities and towns and everything we have, went into that one corporation as water—as watered stock.

Mr. RAKER. And poor water at that.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Poor water at that, unless you had some of it. Now, then, what was the proposition when they formed a company like that? It was to turn that $700,000,000 of water into money. That is what these trusts are doing. They are making money out of watered stock. If anybody can do that they can make money. They have done it. For doing that, for promoting that corporation, J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. received, according to the figures given by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to-night and by the Commissioner of Corporations—and I am again going to be conservative—my friend, Mr. STANLEY, will not agree with me, because he thinks it is more, but I think it is enough to open the eyes of the people of the Republic—J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. received as a commission for promoting that corporation $62,500,000.

What does that mean? Why, it means the valuation of the largest city in my State, the beautiful, progressive, and prosperous city of Portland, with 65,000 people in it, all turned over at one moment to the mere promoters of one corporation.

Now, the proposition was to make that water into money. How were they going to do it? There is only one way to do it—you can not fool the people—it was to charge higher prices, extortionate prices, and that is what they have done.

Some of my friends say to me, "The United States Steel Corporation have some independent competition." There is no independent competitor to-day that the United States Steel Co. could not put out of operation as quick as you would snuff a candle when you go to bed, if they wished to. Why did they not put them out of business? Herbert Knox Smith, the Commissioner of Corporations, tells you the reason why. In his letter of submittal giving his report he says this:

> The competition of the independents with the Steel Corporation, so far as prices are concerned, has been modified by the policy of cooperation.

What does the United States Steel Corporation care how many of these weak competitors there are in this country so long as that great corporation can control prices by the policy of cooperation? Just as soon as cooperation ceases benevolent assimilation will take place, and that mighty quick.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Is it not altogether possible that the Steel Trust would not permit of the existence of these alleged independent companies if they were not taking toll from them by way of high prices for their raw material and for their railway freights and in a way making them subordinate to and subservient to the Steel Trust itself?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the gentleman ask the question, because it shows he has been looking into the proposition and understands it intelligently; and that is precisely the fact.

Mr. HARDY. In other words, they are simply working for the Steel Trust.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. They are working for that corporation, because they can not do anything else. They would like to, but they can not. When the United States Steel Corporation absorbed the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., thereby getting control of the iron ore in this country, they controlled not only this country but they proposed to control the world. That is what you will hear next. That will be the next move.

Somebody said last evening, "What has the tariff to do with this?" Why, the tariff has got everything to do with it. The tariff is where the foundation was laid. That is where the millions were made in the seventies and eighties and nineties, when the inordinate profits were being made under the high protective tariff of those years, when the American people were asleep and did not know what was happening to them. These trusts are just as legitimate growths from the tariff as the fruit is from the blossom on your trees. Before 1870, the duty was 45 per cent, under the head "Manufactures of steel not otherwise provided for." In 1870 it was changed to 1¼ cents per pound, or $28 per gross ton, 100 per cent on the foreign price—away back in 1870. What was the result? Enormous profits for anybody who went into the business. There is where your cutthroat competition came in that my friend GARDNER speaks about, and kept up. There was such an inordinate profit from it that everybody wanted to go into the steel business and see if they could not get a piece of it. Then, of course, they began, like everybody else that is avaricious and greedy, to cut one another's throats; and they were doing it up to the time when they found it necessary to form the pooling agreement, and I will come to that in a moment. But while they were enjoying those inordinate profits in this country from the great masses of our people what were they doing with the foreigners? In 1880 the price of rails in England was $36 a ton; in America, $67 a ton. Who could not make money? In 1881 in England the price of rails was $31 a ton and in America $61 a ton, a profit of almost 100 per cent.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Always delighted to.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is not the gentleman forgetting that at that time we were not on a gold basis and that the English prices were in gold and ours in currency?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Oh, the gentleman can not lead us back to that "cross of gold." [Laughter.] The profits at that time under your tariff law that your party made were 100 per cent, and that is where Carnegie and the rest of the steel barons made their money. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Those were the days when they made it, and afterwards they mingled it with the water of J. P. Morgan, and now propose to bleed the American public.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to suggest that we were on the gold basis in 1880.

Mr. LOBECK. We were practically on the gold basis from 1875. We resumed on the 1st of January, 1879.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Eighteen seventy-eight was the date of the resumption.

Mr. LOBECK. The 1st of January, 1879.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that we were on a gold basis long before that?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I should say not until the resumption bill was passed.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. As a matter of fact, all of our currency was at par.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not think the gentleman is right.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Speaker, I will let the gentlemen fight that out to-morrow evening, when I have gone home.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman says that the profits were $30 a ton on account of the duty. What was the duty; how much?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I am coming to that in a moment. Just be patient and the gentleman will get the whole of it. Listen. Merchant bar iron, English price, $30; United States price, $48.10; tariff duty, $13.44.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I asked the gentleman about rails.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Wait a moment. The gentleman will get the whole of it. He should be patient. Bessemer billets, $20 in England, $30 here; duty, $6.72, in order to protect the infant industry and help the laboring men here. Bessemer pig iron, $14.36 to England, $19.35 to our people; duty, $4. Bar foundry iron, $11.40 to England; $19.75 to our people, with a duty of $4.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Gray forge iron, $11.25 to England.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. No; $11.25 to England, $19 to our people; duty, $4. Tank plates, $30.91 to England and $38.08 to our people, with a duty of $13.44. Back plates, $50.40 to England, $72.80 to our people; tariff, $29.12.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be worth while. [Laughter.] I have a table here that was brought out in the gentleman's own hearings, but it is too long for me to read and I will insert it in my remarks at this point.

Mr. John R. Dunlap, writing to the Evening Post of New York, under date of September 8, 1904, says of sales by the United States Steel Trust in England and the United States:

In the spring of 1903 I had occasion to get exact market quotations for various iron and steel products in free-trade England and "protection" America. The quotations were supplied by one of the oldest and most reputable New York firms engaged in iron and steel, and they were as follows, the quotation in each case being for a long ton of 2,240 pounds f. o. b. at Middlesboro and Swansea, England, and f. o. b. Pittsburgh, Pa., the prices being those current during the first half of May, 1903:

	England.	United States.	Tariff duty.
Merchant bar iron	$30.00	$48.10	$13.44
Bessemer billets	20.00	30.00	6.72
Bessemer pig iron	14.36	19.35	4.00
No. 3 foundry iron	11.40	19.75	4.00

Tank plates	30.91	38.08	13.44
Black plates	50.40	72.80	29.12

The differences referred to above are shown in the following table, which compares the average mill prices f. o. b. of some of the principle products exported by the United States Steel Corporation since 1906 with the average f. o. b. These tariffs were put on for two reasons only. I remember them well, because I was brought up under high protection. I was fed on it from my boyhood up in Maine.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has apparently prospered.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I not only got my eyes opened, but the rest of the people in that State did, and for the first time in 53 years a Democrat was sent here as a Member of Congress from the district that I now have the honor to represent. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You can not fool the people of Maine any more. I am going to say this, however, in justice to our statesmen, that when Blaine and Frye and Dingley advocated a high-protection tariff against the foreign countries they never believed that it was possible to create a monopoly on this side of the tariff wall and destroy home competition. I believe they were honest in what they advocated. But, as I say, the whole idea was to protect the infant industry, mind you, and just think of it! They have kept that infant sucking at the teat ever since, and now the Senate will not allow it to let go of it.

Now, the second class of men that they appealed to was the American laborer, and as long as I have been a voter, and before that ever since I knew enough to go to the political meetings, I used to hear Republican leaders in my State pleading, with tears in their voices, for a high tariff in order to keep up the standard of living and save the wages of the laboring man. Now, let us see. Just as soon as the flower of protection had come into its full blossom in the United States Steel Corporation in 1901 the directors—I do not know they called them directors; they have fancy names for those people, but the executive committee, that is the name—met in New York within six weeks after the company was organized and this is what they said with reference to American labor, and I take it from the records of the United States Steel Corporation. If there are any laboring men here or anybody in sympathy with them let it burn into their hearts forever, the humbug of American labor getting anything out of protection. Here is what a gentleman by the name of Steele, very appropriately named, brought forward as a proposition, and he was a member of the firm of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., which is still very appropriate. He brought forward this proposition at that meeting within six weeks after the United States Steel Co. was organized, to wit:

That we—

That is, the executive committee of the United States Steel Corporation—are unalterably opposed to any extension of union labor and advise subsidiary companies to take firm position when these questions come and say that they are not going to recognize it; that is, any extension of unions in mills where they do not now exist; that great care should be used to prevent trouble, that they promptly report and confer with this corporation.

That was what was handed out to union labor as a result of high protection after they had it perfected in a trust. Now, the laboring people of this country understood what that meant. They knew it well when the United States Steel Co. put it out through Mr. Steele, a member of the firm of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. "that we are unalterably opposed to any extension of union labor"; the union-labor boys in these mills knew what it meant. [Applause.] And, as my friend STERLING said here last night, and I listened with great seriousness and attention to what he had to say, it is the power they have to crush, and just as soon as they sent that ultimatum out every union laboring man in the United States Steel Corporation understood what it meant, and to-day if there are any of them working in that association they are there still, and mighty still at that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not the gentleman know since that time by despicable methods they have practically destroyed every labor union working for them in the United States?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I know that; of course I know that. Every man who has any sympathy for the laboring man in this country knows it, and with good reason; and we know the result of it, and if I were a laboring man I would do just as the laboring men did there. I would rather give up my life than give up the right and privilege to organize so long as capital claimed the same privilege. [Applause.] When the workingmen give up that right they will become little more than slaves so long as this trust organization continues, and I think they understand it. Now, what is the next step? They had to have somebody and they got somebody, the least part of somebody. These people who in the seventies, eighties, and nineties were going through every Republican State telling the American laborer to vote their ticket; what did they do? What did they do? They put advertisements in the papers reading like this, which appeared on the 14th day of July, 1909, in the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times, as appears in the evidence:

Wanted.—Sixty tin house men, tinners, catchers, and helpers to work in open shops; Syrians, Poles, and Roumanians preferred. Steady employment and good wages to men willing to work; fare paid and no fees charged for this work. Central Employment Bureau, 628 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Not our Pennsylvania Avenue, thank God, but Pittsburgh's.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. That should be Penn Avenue instead of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Following the elimination of union labor, and the introduction of foreign laborers, an investigation was made as to the conditions of laborers, hours of labor, home life, etc. As to the hours of labor, the evidence before the committee was conclusive that long hours prevailed in the iron and steel industry, especially in the unskilled departments. Under the direction of the United States Commissioner of Labor, a very careful and thorough investigation as to the hours of labor in the steel industry has been made. From this official report we quote without comment:

During May, 1910, the period covered by this investigation into the steel industry, 50,000 persons, or 20 per cent of the 153,000 employees of the blast furnaces, steel works, and rolling mills covered by this report, customarily worked seven days per week, and 20 per cent of them worked 84 hours or more a week, which, in effect, means a 12-hour working day every day in the week, including Sunday.

This hardship of 12-hour days and a 7-day week is still further increased by the fact that every week or two weeks, as the case may be, when the employees on the day shift are transferred to the night shift, and vice versa, employees remain on duty without relief either 18 or 24 consecutive hours, according to the practice adopted for the change of shifts. The most common plan to effect this change of shift is to work one shift of employees on the day of change through the entire 24 hours, the succeeding shift working the regular 12 hours when it comes on duty. (See page 2837, hearings.)

While we deem it unnecessary to quote the testimony of other witnesses, it is true, as the testimony shows, that they fully corroborate these statements of the United States commissioner, and, in fact, some of the witnesses are much stronger in their statements.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the gentleman know who paid for having that advertisement inserted in the Pittsburgh papers for more than a month?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Why, of course, I do; the United States Steel Corporation. I did not think it necessary for me to go into all of these details, but, of course, such is the fact; we all know it. Now, there was a famous French philosopher and political economist that I read when I was a boy, and the words that he said burned into my mind, and they were these:

To rob the people it is first necessary to deceive them; to deceive them it is necessary to persuade them that they are being robbed for their own advantage.

And that has been the policy of these gentlemen. Now, the result in wages may be of interest, and I have a table here, prepared in Pennsylvania—and there certainly will not be any suspicion that Pennsylvania was getting up a table that was favorable to the majority of this committee. Pennsylvania in 1902 to 1909 published through the report of the secretary of internal affairs a table which I will not read but will insert; but I will say this: It shows that in 1909 14,921 men produced 10,721,024 tons of pig iron as against 8,000,000 tons produced in 1902 by 17,000 men.

A most illuminating piece of reliable information on this point is the report of the secretary of internal affairs of the State of Pennsylvania on the production and cost of pig iron, which we quote for the years 1902 and 1909, in order that comparison may be made:

Pig iron in Pennsylvania.

[Report of secretary of internal affairs, 1902, p. 403; 1909, pp. 255–256.]

	1902	1909
Production, gross tons	8,111,642	10,721,024
Realized value	$126,857,231.00	$186,963,842.00
Average realized value per ton	$15.64	$17.44
Value of basic material; ore, scrap ore, cinder only (fuel, limestone, and other expenses not considered)	$61,634,972.00	$89,144,483.00
Same per ton	$7.60	$8.31
Average number of days in operation in 1902	314	300
Total number of workmen employed	17,101	14,921
Aggregate wages paid	$10,191,759.00	$8,762,304.00
Average earnings per year for each man	$595.97	$627.20
Average daily wage	$1.89	$2.09
Cost of labor per ton	$1.25	$0.82
Tonnage per man per day	1.51	2.39

It will be seen from the above report that in 1909, 14,921 men produced 10,721,024 tons of pig iron, as against 8,111,642 tons produced in 1902 by 17,101 men.

Who got the benefit of this enormous increase in production? True, there was some increase in the wages. In 1902 the average earnings per year for each man was $595.97, while in 1909 the average earnings per year for each man was $627.20, an increase per man per year of $31.23. Or, to put it in daily wages, an increase of from $1.89 in 1902 to $2.09 in 1909—an increase of $0.20 per day.

But observe the increase in production and the decrease in cost of labor per ton, "the true measure," according to Mr. Schwab.

In 1902 the cost of labor per ton was $1.25, while in 1909 it was only 82 cents.

Again, observe the tonnage produced per man in 1902 and 1909.

In 1902 the tonnage per man was 1.51 tons, while in 1909 it was increased to 2.39 tons per man.

In other words, not only was the cost of labor per ton reduced from $1.25 to $0.82, but at the same time the tonnage per man produced was increased from 1.51 tons to 2.39 tons.

In 1902 the manufacturers produced 8,111,642 tons of pig iron at a cost of labor per ton of $1.25, while in 1909 they produced 10,721,024 tons of pig iron at a cost of labor per ton of $0.82.

In 1902 the aggregate wages paid to produce 8,111,642 tons of pig iron was $10,191,757, while in 1909 the aggregate wages paid to produce 10,721,024 tons was $8,762,304, a saving to the manufacturers in labor cost of $1,429,455.

Furthermore, the realized value of the 8,111,642 tons produced in 1902 was $126,857,231, while the realized value of the 10,721,024 tons produced in 1909 was $186,963,842, an increase for the manufacturers of $60,106,611 in realized value.

On the other hand, what did labor get in the same period? In 1902 the average earnings per year for each man was $595.97, while in 1909 it was $627.20, an increase per man of $31.23 per year, and, as the table shows, an increase in average daily wage from $1.89 to $2.09, or $0.20 per day. This shows a slight increase per man in wages between 1902 and 1909. But how about the total? In 1902 there were employed 17,101 men; in 1909, 14,921 men, a decrease of 2,180 men employed. In 1902 the aggregate wages paid were $10,191,759; in 1909 the aggregate wages paid were $8,762,304, a decrease in wages paid of $1,429,455.

That these statistics of the report of the secretary of internal affairs are correct is corroborated by Mr. Schwab, former president of the Steel Corporation, by his sworn testimony, on page 1356, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The average daily wage in 1902 was $1.89. Is that about the rate for men working around pig iron?

Mr. SCHWAB. Yes; I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. In 1909 it was $2.09?

Mr. SCHWAB. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that about your average wage?

Mr. SCHWAB. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The cost of labor per ton, then, in 1902 was $1.25. Is that about right?

Mr. SCHWAB. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And in 1909 it was 82 cents. Is that about right?

Mr. SCHWAB. I should imagine that was about right.

The CHAIRMAN. The tonnage per man per day, which you say is a true measure of the value of a man's work, in 1902 produced 1.51 tons of pig iron and in 1909, 2.39 tons of pig iron. Is that about right?

Mr. SCHWAB. I should judge that was about right.

It is difficult for you, perhaps, to get the point of these figures, but the table will show them, and they are important, because they try to fool the people by making them think that by giving them a few cents extra per day or per month they are giving them higher wages. Work it out by the table.

Now, the average earnings per year for each man in 1902 was $595.97. In 1909 the average earnings of each man was $627.20, an increase of $31.23 cents a year, or 20 cents a day. But observe the increase in production—and there is the point—and the decrease in the cost of labor per ton, not per man. Per ton is the proper basis for figuring. In 1902 the cost of labor per ton was $1.25. In 1909 it was 82 cents.

Now, then, in 1902, the tonnage per day per man was 1.51 tons, and in 1909 it was 2.39 tons per man. You will readily see by a computation that the manufacturers made a saving of $60,106,611. Think of that! Sixty million dollars' difference between 1902 and 1909 in the production of the same number of tons of iron!

What about the laboring man? What does he get? Why, instead of what he got before he gets 20 cents a day more. He got $31.23 a month more. But in the aggregate, by the reduction of force, they received $1,429,459 less than they did before, and the company got $60,000,000 more.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman means they got $31.23 a year more, instead of a month?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. How does the gentleman figure that 20 cents a day and $31.23 a month?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. It is 20 cents a day and $31.23 a year. There can not be any mistake about it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The fact is that labor is receiving a much smaller percentage of what it produces than ever before in that industry?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The labor cost of the product is very much reduced.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Yes. One thing that I have heard that exists in my country to a great extent is this: The small business men get timid and frightened because the big fellows in Wall Street send out word that there is going to be a panic or a disturbance if you injure business—that is, if you injure big business, and that is the only business they recognize.

Now they do not confine themselves to their own business. They go into other business. For instance, wherever they locate a plant they start a supply store. That is known as the "company's supply store." I do not want to go through all of the figures, but I do want to call your attention to this fact, that wherever they have established those little supply stores, beginning in 1893 with a little subsidiary corporation of $500,000 capital, they have made enormous profits. In the year 1904 that corporation declared a dividend of $250,000, with a capital of $500,000. In 1905 it declared a dividend of $405,000. In 1906 it declared a dividend of $805,000, and in 1907 a dividend of $500,000; in 1908, $320,000; in 1909, $440,000; in 1910, $520,000; or a total dividend in eight years on retail supplies to its employees of $3,490,000.

Now, here is another thing: They say, "We ought to keep business out of politics and politics out of business," and I agree with that. But why don't they do it? That is the very thing that has been raising "Ned" in this whole country.

Now, previous to 1900 the attorneys of the great Carnegie Co. were Knox & Reed. Do you recognize them? Philander C. Knox was the head of the firm. Judge Reed was his partner. Clear up to 1901 they were the attorneys of the Carnegie Co.—the principal subsidiary company of the United States Steel Corporation. Well, in 1900 Mr. McKinley was elected President of the United States. In 1901, March 4, he looked around to see whom he would have for Attorney General. Under the Sherman antitrust law the only man who could prosecute the trusts was the Attorney General. It was mighty important to this proposed Steel Trust, that was going to be formed in about 30 days, who was going to be Attorney General of the United States. It depended on him to prosecute. Who was appointed? Mr. Knox, Mr. Carnegie's former attorney. Mr. Reed, on the same day that Mr. Knox went into the Cabinet, went into the directorate of the United States Steel Corporation. Do you think there was very much danger of any prosecution from that time on? Such is the fact. No prosecution, of course, took place.

I do not want to follow up these political matters, but I shall call attention to just one thing that took place. After that Mr. Roosevelt was a candidate for President, in 1904. He was around, soliciting subscriptions——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Campaign contributions——

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Yes; campaign funds. I find this as a part of the testimony that was taken in our hearings:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., September 19, 1904.

UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION.

MY DEAR SIRS: I inclose herewith the Republican national committee's receipt for your subscription to the campaign fund.

Respectfully, yours,

E. T. STOTESBURY, Chairman.

Who was he? He was a member of the firm of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. [Applause.]

I find the next is:

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
Madison Square, New York, September 17, 1904.

Received from United States Steel, $10,000.

C. H. DUEL, Assistant Treasurer.

The next that we heard in that testimony of Mr. Roosevelt was when, in 1907, Gary and Frick left New York and came to Washington to tell Mr. Roosevelt about the securities that were in a bank in New York—securities that belonged to the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. Mr. Roosevelt heard what they had to say in a 20-minute interview, and when they got all through he said he could not see the least possible objection to their taking it over.

Just think of it! And I thought of that last night when I heard my friend from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] talking about the power that these great steel magnates have, that these great trusts have. The idea that two men could leave New York and come to the White House to see the President of the United States and say to him, "We want to take over the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. as a matter of patriotism." [Laughter.] "We are going to pay for it 100 cents on the dollar, although we do not think it is worth more than 65 cents." And that is the testimony. And do you know that in 20 minutes Mr. Roosevelt surrendered to the trusts and gave them absolute power to take it, so far as he was concerned—the most humiliating surrender that was ever known in this country. He gave himself up to them, heels, skin, and teeth. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have taken more time than belongs to me in these matters, but before closing I must inject into the RECORD the following illuminating table showing the extent to which the pernicious system of interlocking directorates has grown. There is much more to be said, but I will allow my friend, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], to close the debate, thanking the House for its attention. [Applause.]

The capital account of the Steel Trust and its interlacing directorates is more than $30,000,000,000, or little less than one-third of all the wealth of the country.

The same committee ascertained the positions held by its directors in other corporations, together with the capital of these corporations, from which the following deductions and résumé are made:

George F. Baker was a director. He was also either president, manager, or director of 49 other corporations, having a combined capital of $6,072,000,000, or nearly one-eighteenth of all the wealth of the country.

Edmund C. Converse held some of these positions in 16 other corporations, having a combined capital of $624,000,000.
William E. Corey had no position in any company outside the trust.
Henry C. Frick was a director in 10 outside companies, having a capital of $2,526,000,000.
Elbert H. Gary had 15 positions in other corporations, having capital of $1,585,000,000.
Clement A. Griscom, 11 corporations, with capital $1,133,000,000.
William H. Moore, 12 other corporations, with capital $1,349,000,000.
J. Pierpont Morgan, 41 companies, with capital $2,289,000,000.
J. P. Morgan, jr., 6 corporations, with capital $1,224,000,000.
Samuel Mathers, 10 companies, capital $216,000,000.
Gardiner M. Lane, 11 companies, capital $481,000,000.
James A. Farrell held no position in any other corporation.
George W. Perkins, 14 corporations, capital $1,959,000,000.
Henry Phipps, 1 other corporation, capital $44,000,000.
Norman B. Ream, 18 corporations, capital $2,289,000,000.
Percival Roberts, jr., 3 companies, capital $777,000,000.
Charles Steele, 19 corporations, capital $2,830,000,000.
Daniel G. Reed, 14 companies, capital $1,070,000,000.
Henry Walters, 23 companies, capital $880,000,000.
Peter A. B. Widener, 7 companies, capital $635,000,000.
James H. Reed, 9 companies, capital $224,000,000.
Alfred Clifford had no position in any other corporation.
Robert Winsor, 18 companies, capital $491,000,000.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think I have about 24 minutes remaining. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON] be allowed to proceed for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON] be allowed to proceed for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, there is no more vital question before this Congress than the question of regulation of trusts and monopolies. I take it that there is no lack of interest on the part of the membership of this House on this question, and the fact that so many Members prefer to sit in the galleries rather than in their seats during this debate is only because it is an evening session. and the galleries are so well filled.

This discussion has certainly been a very interesting one. I hope I shall be pardoned if I say that the only thing that troubles me is that I have been wondering during all of the eloquent speeches that have been made here—and they have been eloquent and learned—how much good was going to result from this investigation. I have been wondering how many important, substantial facts this investigation has revealed to the country that were not known before the investigation began.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JACKSON. A slight one.

Mr. STANLEY. A very slight one. Before this investigation began the Interstate Commerce Commission had never asked the railroads for a division of their rates. It was never known how much was made by this device. This investigation has developed that by means and under the cover of a division of rates the United States Steel Corporation is to-day receiving not less than $40,000,000 a year in rebates.

Mr. RAKER. Right now?

Mr. STANLEY. Right now.

Mr. JACKSON. Of course, I presume that is more or less a matter of judgment.

Mr. STANLEY. No; it is a matter of record.

Mr. JACKSON. The Interstate Commerce Commission has certainly been one of the most active and efficient governmental bodies that we have ever had.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but this was a matter that had not been investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission—a matter that it was not the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the law to investigate.

Mr. JACKSON. I hope the gentleman will allow me to proceed until I get my statement fully before the House. The Interstate Commerce Commission, of course, can not do everything at once.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman has been very kind to me, and I hate to refuse to yield.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the gentleman mean to maintain that under the law as it now exists the Interstate Commerce Commission has jurisdiction of a division of rates?

Mr. JACKSON. I was not discussing the Interstate Commerce Commission, except in reply to what the gentleman has said. I merely had started to say that this seems to be about the third investigation that has been made of the United States Steel Corporation at Government expense. I do not doubt that some additional evidence has been uncovered, and yet the Government has not taken its evidence in its prosecution against the trust, and it will be in its finality only a matter of degree rather than a matter of guilt. It is a little bit like the man who was sentenced in a certain court on a two-count indictment for murder and burglary. The judge sentenced him to be hanged on one count and to be imprisoned 20 years upon the other count; and when the attention of the court was called to the ambiguity of such a sentence the judgment was recalled and the prisoner stood up again and was sentenced upon the first count to be hanged. He politely thanked the judge for having cut 20 years off his sentence. [Laughter.]

The Steel Trust were guilty enough. It makes little difference whether my friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is right when he says that their property was worth something over $300,000,000 and was capitalized for a billion and a half, in round numbers, or whether Mr. Herbert Knox Smith was correct when he said that the real value was $683,000,000, or whether the other estimates that have been been given here are correct. The whole thing was illegal. It was a crime under the laws of the country and the corporation should have been prosecuted.

But I am only regretting that some of the time and the money which has been given to this investigation during this session was not employed by the same gentlemen as a committee appointed early in the session to draft and bring before the Congress, at a time when it could have been passed, a bill which might have enacted into law some of the things that we will agree should be enacted upon this trust question. But the truth is that some of the mistakes of this present Congress have been the great number of investigations in which we have been engaged.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JACKSON. I can not yield any more, Mr. Speaker. I should like to pursue my argument in my own way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JACKSON. Perhaps I am as guilty as the rest of you. I think I have voted for all these investigations. I see now that we ought to have spent more time in actual legislating upon this subject and others.

My friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY], our modern Paul, who comes from Thomasville instead of from Tarsus, has preached to us some about the immigration bill. I think the bill which passed the Senate, after full debate, with only 9 votes against it, should have passed this House, instead of being cut up into smaller bills, which still remain upon our calendar without action.

We should have passed the workmen's compensation act, an act which would have gone far to cure many of the present abuses of trusts and combinations of the country in caring for their helpless victims. We should have passed the antigrain-gambling statute, giving the northern farmer the same relief that we sought to give the southern farmer. We should have given honest consideration to the parcel-post bill at this session, and it could have been done if we had not taken so much time in the investigations. We almost passed some of these. We have been told time and time again by some of these gentlemen that the Democratic caucus was a good thing, so far as it legislated.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JACKSON. Not right there, but in a moment. The trouble is the Democratic caucus has failed to legislate upon these important measures that all of the people of the country are interested in. They almost did so, but when they came face to face with this proposition, like Felix of old, they trembled and said, "Go thy way for this time; when I have a more convenient season I will call for you." The record does not show that Felix ever found a more convenient season, but I trust that the Members of this House will be more fortunate than he.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman spoke in regard to the investigations, and drawing from that the inference that certain legislation named by him has not been enacted. Can the gentleman think of any time when this House was ever delayed by reason of the Members participating in these investigations, at any time or on any occasion?

Mr. JACKSON. I do not care, at this time, to engage in any colloquy with the gentleman, but I remember that the gentleman who manages things on that side brought the Money Trust investigation into the House three times, and each time there was a very lengthy debate on it, when this side was willing to give it all the authority they desired in the first place. But I can not yield any more.

The gentleman who last spoke seemed to intimate by his criticism that ex-Presidents of the country, including President Roosevelt, were to blame, and that the Democratic record upon this trust question was entirely clear. I did not intend to engage in any partisan controversy this evening, but I do want to say that the sins of omission and commission on this question have not been one-sided; that the records of the two parties, so far as trust legislation and trust transactions are concerned, compare very favorably for the Republican Party.

I think I mentioned on one other occasion here the fact that in 1890, when the first trust legislation was enacted, that the Congress preceding that had been a Democratic Congress. There had been an investigating committee for the purpose of determining what the best thing to do with the trust question. While that committee was sitting a Republican Congress was elected, and that committee reported at the end of the session that they submitted the question for the consideration of the Congress that was then convening—a Republican Congress—showing the confidence that the Democrats always have in the Republican Party.

Mr. LOBECK. Did the Republican Party do anything?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes; the Republican Party, under the leadership of John Sherman, passed the Sherman law, which the Democrats did not have the courage to place on the statute books. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Here is the record of the transaction. I read from the Tribune Almanac, which is taken from Government documents. It gives in detail all of the prosecutions that have been begun under all the administrations since the enactment of the Sherman law.

Summing it all up, we find under Harrison's administration, after the enactment of this law, there were three suits and four bills of equity begun. In Cleveland's administration there were four bills in equity, two indictments, two informations for contempt, or nine suits in all. Of these nine suits, four were suits against labor organizations, commonly referred to as the Debbs suits, leaving five suits begun under the Cleveland administration for prosecution under this law. One of them was the Hopkins case, which was not a trust case at all, but was for the purpose of testing the legality of the live-stock exchange at Kansas City and Chicago. So really only four suits were begun under the Cleveland administration.

There were three suits begun under the McKinley administration following it, and then we come to the administration of President Roosevelt, and under that administration there were 45 suits begun, most of which were successful prosecutions under this law. There were 37 suits begun under the Taft administration.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. No; I will not yield. I think I will fully satisfy the gentleman as to what he has in his mind. I will not yield. It is astounding, Mr. Speaker, to me, that all of these gentlemen who have proclaimed so loudly their devotion to the Sherman law, and commend so vigorously and eloquently the prosecutions under it, should have taken so much of their time in abusing the only man who ever did anything to enforce the law. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. JACKSON. I will not yield. The truth is that there never was any consistent, energetic, earnest effort to enforce the Sherman law until Theodore Roosevelt became President of the United States. You might just as well admit it, just as well acknowledge it, as to spend your time trying to throw insinuations and innuendoes and slanders against the man who commenced these suits.

It is no new thing for Mr. Roosevelt to live by the commandment "Thou shall not steal." He dinned it into the ears of officialdom when he was first elected to office in the city of New York. He told the policemen under him about it, and they had a different kind of government in New York City then from what they have to-day. He lived the commandment of "Thou shalt not steal" when he was governor of New York, and he dinned it into the ears of the Army and Navy officers as an officer of the Federal Government. He even dinned it into the ears of Members of Congress until the Nation had a revival of public sentiment that it had never known before.

These prosecutions had been pushed to the limit. No one complained that in 1906 and 1907 the trust laws were not being enforced. These very gentlemen who are to-day criticizing the ex-President for not enforcing the law were traveling over the country abusing him for causing the panic by prosecuting men who were engaged in business, and, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] suggests, riding on railroad passes. I remember the speeches. I remember a prominent member of my own party, a man who should have supported the President, speaking in what is now my own district, telling about the number of cars that had been busy, the number of engines that had been busy, when Roosevelt began his unreasonable onslaught upon honest business, and how many were idle during the panic of 1907—all because the President had enforced the law. Those were the facts, and, as I say, we had come to the point where prosecutions were endangering the prosperity of the country. The situation was similar to that when another prophet of righteousness arose to trouble those who had forgotten the ways of the Lord.

So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him: and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

And it came to pass, when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel?

And he answered: I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim.

Roosevelt said, "Do you expect me to put a ticker in the President's office to run your business?"

Mr. Speaker, these were the conditions that obtained in this country during the panic of 1907. Frequently the charge has come from that side of the House that Roosevelt caused the panic. If he did, he caused it because he prosecuted the men for violating the law, prosecuted until the country trembled, because they threatened to destroy business, and under those conditions we find gentlemen criticizing him because they say he approved the purchase of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. stock by the Steel Trust. He did. No one ever disputed that proposition; but somehow or other in all of these discussions I have not heard anybody read what the colonel himself said about it. I want to read that now:

From the best information at my disposal I believed, and still believe that the addition of the Tennessee Coal & Iron property would only increase the proportion of the steel company holdings by 4 per cent, making them about 62 per cent instead of 58 per cent of the total value in the country——

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. I would rather not yield now while I am reading this extract.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman yield when he gets through?

Mr. JACKSON. Perhaps I may.

An addition by itself which, in my judgment, concurred in, I might add, not only by the Attorney General, but by every competent lawyer with whom I talked, worked no change in the status of the steel corporation.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman inform us from what he is reading?

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JACKSON. To continue:

In my judgment, I would have been derelict in my duty, I would have shown myself a timid and unworthy public officer if in that extraordinary crisis I had not acted as I did act. In every such crisis the temptation is to indecision and nonaction, for excuses can always be found for nonaction, and action means risk and the certainty of blame to the man who acts; but if the man is worth his salt, he will do his duty, be will give the people the benefit of the doubt, and act in any way which their interests demand, and which is not affirmatively prohibited by law, unheeding the likelihood that he himself, when the crisis is over and the danger past, will be assailed for what he has done. Every step I took in the matter was open as day, and was known in detail to all the people. The press contained full accounts of the visit to me of Messrs. Frick and Gary and heralded wildly and with acclaim the results of that visit. At the time the relief and rejoicing over what had been done was well nigh universal. The danger was too imminent and too appaling for men to be willing to condemn those who were successful in saving them from it, but I fully understood and expected that when there was danger no longer, when the fear had been forgotten, attack would be made upon me.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. JACKSON. In just a moment. It is very easy to criticize, it is very easy to say that this thing or that thing was done which should not have been done, but what would these gentlemen have said if the panic had been allowed to continue and the Steel Trust not have been compelled, because the testimony shows in a measure that it was compelled, to buy this stock at at least the market value if not more, and if the President had turned around and prosecuted the men for doing the thing which was preventing the panic?

I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the gentleman know that the record shows that the market value of that stock immediately preceding the time it was bought was between 150 and 160? Does the gentleman know that by Herbert Knox Smith's report and by the report of Mr. Young, who defended the action of Mr. Roosevelt, instead of increasing the steel holdings 4 per cent, as claimed by Mr. Roosevelt, it increased its fee-simple ore holdings by nearly 100 per cent. The record shows that, undisputed by anybody.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, those are matters largely of opinion. The 58 per cent and the 62 per cent he speaks of is of the amount of the product that the corporation controlled. So far as the market value of the stock is concerned, the testimony shows unequivocally that it did not have any market value; that the sales had been merely nominal; that it was a wrecked concern that was threatening not only to pull down the men who held it, but that the wreck would have been such that Mr. Morgan himself trembled when he was told that the Schley firm was about to fail.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I want to make what I think is a fair statement. I think it is true that the share of the business of the United States Steel Corporation was not increased more than 4 or 5 or 6 per cent by the acquirement of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. On the other hand, what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] says is also true, though I should limit his figures somewhat. The value of the Tennessee Coal & Iron——

Mr. STANLEY. I said freehold.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Was more on account of that which was under the ground, to wit, its coal and iron reserves, than what was above the ground, and would add to its productive capacity.

Now one word more. I agree with the gentleman from Kansas as to the price at which the United States Steel Corporation bought the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. Trying to weigh the evidence as best I could, I came to the conclusion that in all probability, if the United States Steel Corporation at that time had been willing to invest that same amount of money in some other way, they could have done it at fully as great a profit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be allowed to continue until 11 o'clock, the hour of adjournment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be allowed to continue until 11 o'clock, the hour of adjournment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, it is a serious responsibility when the President of the United States, under our present system, right or wrong, is charged with stopping or allowing a panic to progress, and the gentleman who has just spoken here and criticized very bitterly the conduct of the different administrations and the campaign funds which have been collected by one party, I would like to call his attention to the fact that it was only a short space of time since this panic occurred when a Democratic panic had been on and a Democratic President undertook to stop it. And how did he proceed to stop that panic? Why, I do not need to repeat it here. You all know that he sold bonds out of the Treasury of the Government of the United States, and not only that, but this same man—Morgan—and Belmont got them at a profit of from 10 to 15 per cent, which went out of the Treasury of the United States. I ask to extend in my remarks here an article, which was published at that time, from the New York World, a great Democratic paper, upon that bond issue, showing that this profit went to those men—Morgan and Belmont—one of whom had but recently been a business partner of the President, or connected with him. Now, compare the different manners in which these two Presidents stopped the panic—one practically forcing the Steel Trust, because the officers of that company claimed that they did not want to purchase this stock. I was told by a man from that side of the House, who knows what he is talking about, within the last two or three days, if Mr. Corey had been placed upon the stand in this investigation he would have testified that the United States Steel Corporation was practically forced to take this stock for the purpose of preserving the credit of the country.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JACKSON. I will.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman tell us who forced the Steel Corporation to take this stock?

Mr. JACKSON. The testimony, I think, the gentleman has incorporated here shows clearly that if the panic had been allowed to proceed, in all probability they would have bought the stock, not at 100 or at 90 cents on the dollar, but at 30 or 40 cents on the dollar.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but the record shows that the majority of this stock Mr. Gates and others testified was in the hands of men who were not financially embarrassed at all, and the record shows that Mr. Ledyard, who financed the deal, who negotiated with Morgan and with Steele, stated that the men who were holding this stock did not want to give it up; that they were begged and they gave it up with great reluctance.

Mr. JACKSON. I think the testimony fairly shows that there was some objection to their giving it up, and it also fairly shows that it was absolutely necessary that they should give it up, and Mr. Morgan advanced a considerable sum of money, or saw it was advanced to them, when they were making the deal.

Mr. STANLEY. The record does not show Mr. Morgan ever advanced anything.

Mr. JACKSON. I do not mean individually.

Mr. STANLEY. Not by the firm of Morgan & Co.; no intimation of it.

Mr. JACKSON. But he did use his influence, and they received a considerable sum of money, and the gentleman will find that in the evidence.

Mr. STANLEY. Can the gentleman tell me who testified to that effect?

Mr. JACKSON. I can not find it in the record now, but I can take time and I will find it and show it to the gentleman. It is here.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman means Mr. Oakleigh Thorne.

Mr. JACKSON. But, Mr. Speaker, we are a long ways from the millennium on this trust question yet, almost as far, I believe, as before this committee was appointed, and that is no criticism upon the committee. We have been traveling over the question, as gentlemen can state, and I think for the most part doing the best we could, but the trouble is we have not made any progress; we have not made any progress really because our methods have been wrong, and while it is perfectly natural for my friend from Kentucky, who has given a great deal of time and earnest study to this matter and enthusiasm to the remedies that he now proposes, I fear we have a long ways yet to go before competition is restored and the evils of the trusts and combines of this country wiped out of our commercial life. I want to call the attention of the House for just a few moments to the headlines of the newspapers of more than 20 years ago. They are published in a book of Prof. R. T. Ely upon the trust question, and here is the way they read, and I want you to read them or listen to them and see if you can recognize them. Here is the way they read:

Black eye for the trusts—Important decision handed down in Chicago. The Standard Oil Trust has resolved upon dissolution.

Pools are hit hard—United States Supreme Court upholds Sherman Act—Decision is a surprise—Virtually declares all traffic agreements illegal—Competition will be open—Managers greatly concerned.

Trusts in a panic—Tobacco combine makes the first important surrender, etc.

Trusts busted—Far-reaching effects of the Supreme Court decision.

Then the professor says:

Familiar friends these, are they not?

Then he adds:

Comment on these utterances of the press is scarcely necessary today. If there is any serious student of our economic life who believes that anything substantial has been gained by all the laws passed against trusts, by all the newspaper editorials which have thus far been penned, by all the sermons which have been preached against them, by all the speeches of politicians denouncing them, this authority has yet to be heard from. Forms and names have been changed in some instances, but the dreaded work of vast aggregation of capital has gone practically as heretofore. The writer does not hesitate to affirm it as his opinion that efforts along lines which have been followed in the past will be equally fruitless in the future.

But there are more recent chapters of history in the Democratic Party on this trust question; the letter of your candidate for President has just been issued, and I beg to introduce on record some of his utterances upon this question.

The general terms of the present Federal antitrust law, forbidding "combinations in restraint of trade," have apparently proved ineffectual. Trusts have grown up under its ban very luxuriantly, and have pursued the methods by which so many of them have established virtual monopolies without serious let or hindrance. It has roared against them like any sucking dove. I am not assessing the responsibility; I am merely stating the fact. But the means and methods by which trusts have established monopolies have now become known. It will be necessary to supplement the present law with such laws, both civil and criminal, as will effectually punish and prevent those methods, adding such other laws as may be necessary to provide suitable and adequate judicial processes, whether civil or criminal, to disclose them and follow them to final verdict and judgment. They must be specifically and directly met by law as they develop.

Then he goes on to describe the Money Trust, which he calls confederacies of credit, and says:

There is nothing illegal about these confederacies, so far as I can perceive. They have come about very naturally, generally without plan or deliberation, rather because there was so much money to be invested and it was in the hands, at great financial centers, of men acquainted with one another and intimately associated in business, than because anyone had conceived and was carrying out a plan of general control.

But summing up his entire conclusions of trusts and combines, he further says:

BUSINESS MEN NOW IN FAVOR OF CHANGES.

Let me say again that what we are seeking is not destruction of any kind nor the disruption of any sound or honest thing, but merely the rule of right and of the common advantage. I am happy to say that a new spirit has begun to show itself in the last year or two among influential men of business, and, what is perhaps even more significant, among the lawyers who are their expert advisers; and that this spirit has displayed itself very notably in the last few months in an effort to return, in some degree at any rate, to the practices of genuine competition. Only a very little while ago our men of business were united in resisting every proposal of change and reform as an attack on business, an embarrassment to all large enterprise, an intimation that settled ideas of property were to be set aside and a new and strange order of things created out of hand. While they thought in that way, progress seemed impossible without hot contest and a bitter clash between interests, almost a war of classes. Common counsel seemed all but hopeless, because some of the chief parties in interest would not take part—seemed even to resent discussion as a manifestation of hostility toward themselves. They talked constantly about vested interests, and were very hot.

It is a happy omen that their attitude has changed. They see that what is right can hurt no man; that a new adjustment of interests is inevitable and desirable, is in the interest of everybody; that their own honor, their own intelligence, their own practical comprehension of affairs is involved. They are beginning to adjust their business to the new standards. Their hand is no longer against the Nation; they are part of it, their interests are bound up with its interests. This is not true of all of them, but it is true of enough of them to show what the new age is to be and how the anxieties of statesmen are to be eased if the light that is dawning broadens into day.

Here we have the latest official utterances of the Democratic Party on the regulation of the trusts. Can it be that this gentleman whom you have named for your candidate, and who is the author of these statements, claims the credit for having discovered the Money Trust? Can it be that while our Brother STANLEY is charging the octopi in all their various lairs on the theory of dissolution and assumed prosecution, and we, his colleagues are shouting our applause and crying "On, STANLEY, on!" that your candidate at Seagirt, with the ocean breezes fanning his high and noble brow, has concluded that all we need is peace and harmony, and calmly gives us the assurance that henceforth the captains of big industry have concluded to "be good" and there will be no more trouble. This has been our difficulty from the first. As soon as we or any other party had selected an official, charged with the duty of enforcement of the law, it seems in too many cases he weakens and takes counsel from the enemy. I except from this charge, as I have said, Theodore Roosevelt, and him only. The courts, the officers of the law, and even those who claim to be independent in trade and industry refuse to do anything to the trusts that really amounts to anything. They are perfectly satisfied to slap the wrists of the offenders and offer a polite request for better conduct in the future. In the name of "good business" the courts have been careful to leave uninterrupted all the opportunities and means for the continuance of the old combinations and the formation of new ones.

After 20 years of experience with antitrust legislation we find ourselves forced to admit that every great interstate industry of the country is trust controlled and monopoly formed. The startling thing about this is that it is true only of the commerce controlled by the Federal Government of the United States, every other great commercial nation, even to the colonies of Great Britain, have monopoly under control, and State governments succeed fairly well when not hindered by the interstate commerce clause of the United States Constitution in destroying their local commerce. More than a third of all of the wealth of the country is at present settled in combines of some degree or class. I assert the fault in that we do not as the result of our legal procedure attempt to restore competition or to prevent the formation of new trusts. I believe this can be done. The solution lies in the legal principle that any business which attains a monopoly, or seeks to do so, becomes legally charged with a public interest and a subject of public control; the degree and nature of this control is subject to the will of the legislative department of the Government. It may stop at dissolution and control through receivership, or in the case of legal monopoly, though based upon the ownership of the majority portion of the raw materials of any commodity of the country, it may be necessary to regulate by fixing the prices and controlling the practices of the business proceeded against.

I have my ideas about how this can be accomplished; I have discussed them at length before the Judiciary Committee and on another occasion in this House, and it is not necessary to repeat them now, but I will place in the RECORD a recapitulation of the things I think could be done to remedy the situation in the same language I employed upon these other occasions.

To recapitulate, then, legislation to preserve the kind of competition our present industrial development demands should embody all of the ideas I have mentioned. I shall hope that an administration measure of Federal incorporation will be enacted at the coming session, and that Senator LA FOLLETTE'S amendments to the Sherman law will also be passed. In addition to these I shall, by a bill introduced to-day, ask Congress to enact the following measures:

First. To make discrimination in prices and all other favoritism in interstate trade a criminal offense, and to provide that any person injured by such discriminations shall have the right to recover civil damages to the same extent and in the same manner as is provided for the recovery of damages under the trust law. I have been informed that my colleague Mr. CAMPBELL has introduced such a bill at several sessions of Congress, and I hope it will be passed.

Second. To establish procedure by which any citizen injured by a monopoly or combination in restraint of trade may upon complaint made under oath have such monopoly or combination investigated in a summary manner by a board of arbitrators chosen in part each by the complainant, defendant, and the court, and to extend Government control over all industries so investigated when the preliminary report finds the existence of the restraint of trade or a monopoly and such report is approved by the court. Such control shall continue as provided in the next paragraph.

Third. To make every combination in restraint of trade or virtual monopoly in the production or sale of any commodity subject to control as to all its prices and practices by the Interstate Commerce Commission or by the United States district court of the proper district as shall be ordered by the court trying the case until it shall be described by a competent court that such combination or monopoly has been dissolved.

Fourth. The district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney General, shall prosecute criminally all persons connected with the organization or maintenance of any trust, monopoly, or combination revealed by such investigation, and shall institute and prosecute suits in addition to the proceedings provided for in paragraph 2, if necessary to dissolve the trust or monopoly.

Fifth. To provide for an investigation by the President of the effect of customs duties in maintaining unreasonable prices or in tending to monopoly in the commodities produced or sold by any firm found guilty in a preliminary report provided for in paragraph 2, and authorizing the President, if he finds such duties assist such firm in maintaining unreasonable prices or higher prices at home than in foreign markets or in promoting a monopoly, to suspend the collection of such duties and open competition with all the commerce of the world in such commodities. The President should also immediately report his acts under the authority of this trust law and his recommendations to Congress.

Finally, then, what effect will the so-called new rule of reasonable restraint of trade have on such a plan of control?

If a combination, trust, or business of any kind tending to monopoly is ever found which results as a mere incident of a lawful and normal contract undertaken by the parties to it with legal intent—for such was the definition of reasonable restraint of trade set forth by the court—for goodness sake, let us preserve it under porper governmental care and control, for it would be the most notable commercial phenomenon of the century.

The plan of control I suggest would not destroy such restraint of trade, but it would control "good" and "bad" trusts until the courts determined their legality.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I see the gentleman has been making a study of the trust question. Is it not a historical fact that trusts existed for a great many years in free-trade England before we ever heard of their actual existence in America?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes; trusts and monopolies.

Mr. SLOAN. Trusts. Is it not a fact that the two large items of anthracite coal and oil, constituting the basis of two of the greatest so-called trusts of this country, for a great many years have been on the free list, or practically so?

Mr. JACKSON. It is.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it not a fact from the record made that the articles produced by the trust referred to here—the Steel Trust—from its organization in 1901 up to the present time have gone slightly downward in price?

Mr. JACKSON. That is my understanding of the testimony.

Mr. SLOAN. Does the gentleman know of any articles produced by nontrust institutions, for instance, farm products or kindred articles constituting the products of the largest part of American industries that have not manifestly advanced through the same time?

Mr. JACKSON. I think we must all admit that is true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, of course we can not prolong this colloquy, but I will say to the gentleman that he is much more familiar with the testimony than I am, and all the statements I have made I have got from his own report. I will be glad to read some of it here, if he will care to listen to it.

Mr. STANLEY. I should be glad to have unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas desires unanimous consent to proceed for how long?

Mr. JACKSON. Long enough to read this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON. I am reading from page 313 of the majority report:

On the return of Messrs. Frick and Gary from Washington the deal was closed, on the basis of par for the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. stock, which was paid for in second mortgage 5 per cent bonds of the United States Steel Corporation, at their market price at that time, namely, $0.84 of their face value, or figuring the bonds as worth par, about $119.75 for the stock. Messrs. Hanna, Schley, and Gates insisted that the minority stockholders should have the right to turn in their stock at the same price. This was acceded to—all of the minority stockholders took advantage of this option.

Before agreeing to pay par for the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. stock Mr. Gary offered 90 for it. This Mr. Schley refused, on the ground that it would not be sufficient to help him out and that nothing less than 100 would save him.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, not to interrupt the gentleman, he is reading from the report of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG], the only man alive, I presume, who will defend that merger. He is not reading from the majority report.

Mr. JACKSON. Are not the facts stated here true?

Mr. STANLEY. They are not. I do not mean to charge the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG] with stating what is not true, but I think he is absolutely in error. The gentleman from Kansas should not state that he is reading from my report when he is reading from the views of the only man on the committee who differs materially with me on the Tennessee Coal and Iron proposition.

Mr. JACKSON. They were published in the same volume, and that was the reason for my error, if I am reading from the views of Mr. YOUNG. I did not know that I was.

Mr. STANLEY. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG] makes a clean issue with me. I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] does.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The minority stated that they did not think it was necessary to discuss the Tennessee Coal and Iron question in order to arrive at the conclusions that the House ordered us to arrive at. I am more inclined to agree with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON] than I am with the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is absolutely right when he says that Oglesbay had practically no interest in the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co.; that is, that the Trust Co. of North America had practically no interest.

Mr. STANLEY. I did not mean to say that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] agreed with me. I meant to say that the only member of the committee who makes a clean issue with us on that question is the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman is correct on that. I think Winfield Scott Schley, in contradistinction to the firm of Moore & Schley, was very much more involved than the record shows, and that a good many people were more involved that the record shows. I think probably $11,000,000 or $12,000,000 worth of stock in the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. was pledged in one way and another. I believe that if the panic had not been stopped that way, it could have been stopped in some other way, but that it would have required some very large capitalists to put their hands very deeply in their own pockets, instead of finding a plan by which there was at all events a silver lining to the cloud. I think the absorption of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., while it was not sought by anybody connected with the United States Steel Corporation particularly, on the other hand was greeted by some of them with more or less satisfaction. I do not believe it was necessary to permit this merger in order to stop that panic. I think it could have been stopped by the actual loan of money. I do not know that there is any reason to say that anybody should have put up that money. On the other hand, in justice to President Roosevelt—and I am not especially anxious to do justice to President Roosevelt—I think that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG] is right in saying that he did a courageous thing, from the highest motives. [Applause.]

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, what I was objecting to was having the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON], under a misapprehension, read as the conclusions of the majority the conclusions of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. JACKSON. I was mistaken in saying I was quoting from the report of the majority. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I will read the rest of the quotation.

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. JACKSON. The two reports are published together, and I did not notice that what I was reading from was from the views of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. STANLEY. It was a very natural mistake.

Mr. JACKSON. He says:

In addition to the stock owned by Schley, or Moore & Schley, or pledged with Moore & Schley, Col. Payne had altogether 25,000 shares of the stock of the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co., with a par value of $2,500,000. As soon as the sale went through, this stock was converted into United States Steel Corporation bonds and the proceeds loaned to Moore & Schley, so Moore & Schley obtained an additional $2,500,000 through that deal.

In order to make it certain that Moore & Schley would not fail, Mr. Payne and Mr. Baker, president of the First National Bank of New York City, and one other gentleman tendered $1,000,000 each of first-class securities, to be placed in the hands of Mr. Morgan as security for further loans in aid of Moore & Schley should such further aid become necessary. Mr. Morgan did not find it necessary to draw upon this fund.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Does the gentleman find any conflict in the majority's statement, as to the facts stated in Mr. YOUNG's views?

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] says there is a conflict. I take his word for it.

Mr. SLOAN. Is there a direct conflict there in that statement?

Mr. STANLEY. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. SLOAN. As to these particular facts stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG]?

Mr. STANLEY. There is no evidence before the committee that Mr. Morgan ever loaned Mr. Schley any money. That is a conclusion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. SLOAN. What I want to know is whether the things read by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON] are in detail or specifically or in substance denied in your majority report?

Mr. STANLEY. Absolutely, categorically, intensely, vehemently——

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman can extend his adverbs at his leisure.

Mr. JACKSON. I will read one more statement here.

Mr. Oglebay says that he was not forced to sell and was willing to sell under the conditions that existed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will just say this, that I do not care whether this broker's firm was a gambling concern or not. If it were, so much the worse; but it is evident to my mind, both from this report and the report of the gentleman from Kentucky himself, so much as I have read of it, that the high financiers of Wall Street thought it was important that this firm be not allowed to fail, and that because it was not allowed to fail, the panic was stopped then; not three weeks afterwards, not three days afterwards, but at once.

If the gentleman had been in our western country and seen the herds of cattle that were driven into Kansas City and Omaha and sold at one-tenth and one-quarter of their value, representing, in many cases, the earnings of the farmer and the herdsman for years, because of lack of money, he would not have been willing to split hairs about the millions of tons of ore in the ground that might fall into the hands of the Steel Corporation, as long as the trust, admitted by everybody to be illegal, did not have its legal status changed by the arrangement made.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the gentleman know of any high financier not connected with the Steel Corporation, except Mr. Schley, who has ever stated that the purchase of this Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. stock and the relief of Schley stopped any panic?

Mr. JACKSON. I think we all have a common knowledge that it stopped the panic; it was published in the press at the time, and Mr. Morgan was given the credit of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, August 10, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 10, 1912.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT MOLINE, ILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 25073) to authorize the Moline-Bettendorf Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Moline, Ill., and Bettendorf, Iowa. It will take no time except the reading.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire demands the regular order, which is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withhold it for the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I understand he desires to present a request.

Mr CHAMBERLAIN. I wish to suggest a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish the Senator from New Hampshire might withdraw his suggestion for the regular order. I should like to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 24224, to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has demanded the regular order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish he might be induced to reconsider that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withdraw it that the Senator from Oregon may make a request. I do not know what it is, but if it is a matter going to lead to discussion——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It will not lead to discussion, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be presented, then.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask for the unanimous-consent agreement, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business to-day the Senate will proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills upon the calendar under Rule VIII, and will continue such consideration through the entire calendar: Provided, That nothing in this agreement shall interfere with the presentation of conference reports, the naming of managers on the part of the Senate, or the offering of amendments that they may be printed and referred.

Mr. BOURNE. I did not catch the first part of it. May I request that it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary again read the proposed agreement.

Mr. BOURNE. I do not feel like objecting to the proposed agreement, and yet it is of the utmost importance that consideration should be given to the Post Office appropriation bill that it may go into conference as soon as possible, in case we expect to adjourn at an early date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter is not open to debate except by consent.

Mr. BOURNE. I will not object, but I give notice that on Monday I shall move to take up the Post Office appropriation bill, and I shall ask the Senate to continue the consideration of that bill until its passage.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he ask unanimous consent that it shall be taken up immediately after the routine morning business on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is now a request for unanimous consent, and that must be disposed of before another can be presented. Is there objection to the agreement proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, unless I can get unanimous consent later to vote upon the Department of Labor bill I will object to this request.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks for the regular order, which is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN JUAN, P. R. (S. DOC. NO. 908).

REGISTRY OF CERTAIN VESSELS.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 5958) to provide for the register and enrollment of vessels built in foreign countries when such vessels have been wrecked on the coasts of the United States or her possessions or near-by waters and salved by American citizens and repaired in American shipyards, and I submit a report (No. 1028) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks for the present consideration of the bill he has just reported. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will venture to ask the Senator whether this bill broadens the matter of giving registry to wrecked vessels in a particular way?

Mr. NELSON. It is a reenactment of the old statute with much more rigid restrictions. We had a full hearing, and all the shipbuilders and other interests were agreed about the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have great confidence in the Senator's judgment about those matters. I do not object.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was to strike out, beginning in line 6, page 1, the remainder of the bill, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 4136. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may issue a register or enrollment for any vessels wrecked on the coasts of the United States or her possessions or adjacent waters, and when purchased by a citizen or citizens of the United States and thereupon repaired in a shipyard in the United States or her possessions, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, through a board of three appraisers appointed by him, that the said repairs put upon such vessels are equal to three-fourths of the appraised value of the vessel: Provided, That the expense of the appraisal herein provided for shall be borne by the owner of the vessel: Provided further, That if any of the material matters of fact sworn to or represented by the owner or at his instance to obtain the register of any vessel are not true there shall be a forfeiture to the United States of the vessel in respect to which the oath shall have been made, together with tackle, apparel, and furniture thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the register and enrollment of vessels built in foreign countries when such vessels have been wrecked on the coasts of the United States or her possessions or adjacent waters and salved by American citizens and repaired in American shipyards."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 7445) granting an increase of pension to Edward F. Larock (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 7446) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURNHAM:

A bill (S. 7447) for the relief of Mary A. Shufeldt; to the Committee on Claims.

SETTLERS ON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. BORAH. I introduce a bill, and I wish to say a word in regard to it before it goes to the committee.

The bill (S. 7444) to create a commission on Government reclamation projects was read twice by its title.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a word in regard to the purpose of the bill that it may not be misunderstood at the time of its introduction.

There has been considerable discussion here in the Senate and a great deal of discussion elsewhere as to the items which have been charged up against the settlers upon the different reclamation projects, and as to whether or not all the items which have been charged up have been properly charged under the law.

There has been, as I say, so much discussion about it that it seems to be necessary to know whether or not it has been properly attended to under the terms of the reclamation act.

This bill creates a commission composed of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, the chairman of the House Committee on Irrigation, and a civil engineer, to audit these accounts and statements and to ascertain whether there have been charges made against the settlers which ought not to have been made.

What I desire to say principally, however, in introducing the bill is that it is not introduced by way of criticism upon the department; it is not to be construed as a charge of malfeasance upon the part of the department.

It is simply for the purpose of ascertaining what charges have actually been made, what charges should be made, and what charges should be eliminated, if any, from the price which has been assessed against the settler.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

RELIEF OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, and I accompany it with a telegram. I ask that the joint resolution and telegram be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) appropriating the sum of $20,000, out of money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, for subsistence of American citizens now in Arizona fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That out of the money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, providing transportation for American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated for the subsistence of such American citizens as are now in Arizona, with no home except in the Republic of Mexico and from which they have been driven to the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the telegram sent to the desk by the Sentaor from Arizona will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THATCHER, ARIZ., August 8, 1912.

Senator MARK A. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Your two wires received. We have relief committees who are taking care of refugees by private contributions. Chairman committee on finance could be placed under bonds to account for any funds that might come into his possession. It is a matter of food and clothing. At this time the situation is so unsettled in Mexico that none seem to want to go to other parts of the country until they are assured that they can not go back to their homes. The burden will get heavy for us soon, as it will cost at least $4,000 per month to house, clothe, and feed these people that we already have. Hope you will be successful in getting relief.

W. W. PACE.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the joint resolution is passed, as I recall it the former joint resolution provided transportation, and I should judge from the telegram that these people do not want transportation. They say they want to get back to their homes in Mexico.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the very purpose of the joint resolution—to provide for them while hungry and helpless by reason of the acts and outrages against them by armed soldiers in Mexico.

Mr. GALLINGER. To send them back to Mexico?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No, sir; to give them subsistence until they can get back to Mexico in peace and safety and recover the property of which they have been despoiled.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the former joint resolution, as I recall it, did not provide for giving them sustenance. It provided for transportation alone.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It did provide for transportation alone, but there are a great number of these refugees with no place to go to at all. There is no use in transporting them from the places where they are if they can find work there. That they are attempting to do. These people are not mendicants or paupers. They have been driven from Mexico by violence and arms. They are American citizens. They are in exactly the same attitude, as far as surroundings are concerned, as were the sufferers from the floods of the Mississippi River, whose subsistence was bountifully provided for by appropriations from the Federal Treasury. These refugees were driven from their residences by dangers as imminent, as merciless, and as implacable as the unpent waters of that great river. We have done all possible to control the river, but nothing has been done to prevent further outrage on American citizens in Mexico. Of this I will have more to say before adjournment of this session if time can be reasonably secured for that purpose. These refugees are now a charge on the good people of the Gila Valley, as shown by the telegram just read, an expense too great for even their generous charity.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are all, of course, solicitous about people who are in distress, but I have sometimes wondered whether it is a function of the General Government to come to the rescue of all people who are in distress in our great country.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. So have I.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have grave doubts about it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. So have I, Mr. President, as to the general principle, but not in this peculiar case; but the Senator will permit me to say, though I do not like to go into that question at this time unless I find it necessary to give the sad history——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will not detain the Senate with the recital of the circumstances, I am willing to accept his general statement and I will make no objection to the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. All right.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the joint resolution passed the stage of objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has passed the stage of objection for consideration, as unanimous consent was given that it be considered. It has not passed the stage of discussion or amendment.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 25970).

Mr. O'GORMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,911.64 for damages to the launch Winninish, owned by Le Grand C. Cramer, intended to be proposed by him to the

He also (for Mr. DILLINGHAM), for the committee to investigate the election of William Lorimer, submitted an amendment proposing to pay to the persons therein named certain sums for services rendered the committee of the Senate making investigation of the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 5879) granting an increase of pension to David Crockett Collins, Sixty-second Congress, second session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. KENYON was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That Mr. KENYON be assigned to service on, and to the chairmanship of, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

DISEASES AMONG INDIANS (S. DOC. NO. 907).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The present conditions of health on Indian reservations and in Indian schools are, broadly speaking, very unsatisfactory. In many parts of the Indian country infant mortality, tuberculosis, and disastrous diseases generally prevail to an extent exceeded only in some of the most insanitary of our white rural districts and in the worst slums of our large cities.

The death rate in the Indian country is 35 per thousand, as compared with 15 per thousand—the average death rate for the United States as a whole. The average death rate in some of the healthiest of our cities is as low as 12 per thousand. No exact figures are yet available for infant mortality among Indians, but field studies now being made show that while proportionately more Indian babies than white babies are born, very many more Indian babies die.

Last year of over 42,000 Indians examined for disease, over 16 per cent of them had trachoma, a contagious disease of the eye, frequently resulting in blindness, and so easily spread that it threatens both the Indian communities and all their white neighbors. It is a disease so serious that at no port of entry in this country is the immigrant with trachoma allowed to land. On the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservations 71 per cent of the school children have trachoma. The curing of this disease frequently requires years of constant care. Of the 40,000 Indians examined, 6,800 had tuberculosis. On the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota, a house-to-house canvass in 1910 and 1911 revealed that of 3,300 Indians, 600 had tuberculosis. An examination of half the Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation, Mont., shows that one-third of that number have tuberculosis. Of the total population of the Colorado River Reservation, Ariz., 20 per cent have tuberculosis. At the school of the Mescalero Reservation in New Mexico, where climatic conditions are ideal, 5 per cent of the children in school have tuberculosis. Of the 7,000 Indians of the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak., over one-fourth have tuberculosis. Even in southern California at least 10 per cent of the Indians have this dread disease. In addition to these scourges and the special lowering of vitality which exists in these sections where the Indians can procure intoxicants, they are more subject than the average white man to the whole list of acute diseases. Few Indian homes anywhere have proper sanitary conditions, and in many instances the bad condition of their domestic surroundings is almost beyond belief.

As guardians of the welfare of the Indians, it is our immediate duty to give to the race a fair chance for an unmaimed birth, healthy childhood, and a physically efficient maturity.

The most vigorous campaign ever waged against disease among the Indians is now under way. It began in 1909. Prior to that time little attention had been given to the hygiene and health of the Indians. On some reservations, equal in area to a State, there were not more than two physicians, frequently only one. In 1909 tens of thousands of Indians were substantially without any chance to reach a doctor. The Government was startled into a reform in this matter through the discovery that at the Phoenix Indian School, Arizona, more than 65 per cent of the children were infected with trachoma. In response to the showing then made, Congress immediately appropriated an emergency sum of $12,000. Physicians sparsely scattered over the Indian country were then organized as the nucleus of an efficient fighting force, and the fight has been conducted not only on curative but on preventative lines. As the need for this work has become more apparent, congressional appropriations have steadily increased, but even to-day the effective fighting force of the service is so disproportionate to the ground to be covered and the problems to be met that it is impossible to make even a medical survey of the whole field.

The Indian service has under its general supervision 296,000 Indians, and of these it is a conservative estimate to say that 160,000 are still entirely dependent on the Federal medical service. This service has 160 physicians, over a third of whom under their terms of employment devote only a part of their time to Indians. When it is remembered that Indians are so scattered that a physician frequently has to drive a day or more out and a day or more back to reach one family, the inadequacy of such service is plain. While there are many efficient and self-sacrificing physicians in this service, the smallness of the salaries, which average only $1,186 a year, necessarily affects the qualification and ability of the physicians engaged. In spite of adverse conditions thousands of cases of tuberculosis and trachoma are being systematically treated, and serious epidemics of diphtheria, measles, cerebrospinal meningitis, and other infectious diseases have been checked. Hundreds of lives have been saved, and a distinct start has been made in getting fresh air and generally better sanitary conditions into the homes.

The Indian medical service should, therefore, be substantially increased in size, and should be lifted into efficiency through the better men whom as a rule only better salaries can command. Of course this change should take place along carefully planned business lines and without extravagance and after a comparative study of other medical services, National, State, and local.

Through the proper channels is now submitted to Congress an estimate for the Indian medical service for $253,350, accompanied by a detailed statement of the expenditures required. This sum, together with an addition to the amounts which will probably be available in the Indian appropriation bill for the current year, and which were asked for in that bill before all the data now available were at hand, will enable the Indian service to make a complete medical and sanitary survey of the whole field, with a view to curing existing troubles and to the prevention, so far as may be, of their recurrence. With this additional appropriation, if granted by Congress, it is believed that the tide can be turned, that the danger of infection among the Indians themselves and to the several millions of white persons now living as neighbors to them can be greatly reduced, and genuine cooperation with local State boards of health now already under way can be adequately provided for. It is not expected to build up a highly organized Indian medical service, but rather to put efficient physicians and nurses and field matrons, properly equipped to reach all the Indian families, in the field where service under the best conditions is one of constant self-sacrifice and hardship, but where constant application to those methods which the study of modern hygiene has developed will show results so encouraging as fully to justify the expenditure of the sums herein asked.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1912.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the message will be referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine and printed.

Mr. CLAPP subsequently said: I think the message which has just come from the President should be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as that committee will have to deal with that subject. The chairman of the committee is not here, and in his absence I suggest that the message be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection that reference will be made.

STANDARD OIL AND AMERICAN TOBACCO COS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 375, submitted by Mr. POMERENE on yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, relieved from further consideration of Senate concurrent resolution 4, declaring it to be the sense of the Senate and of the House of Representatives that criminal prosecutions should be begun against the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co. and the other parties and persons who were declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be violating the criminal provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman antitrust law, and instructing the Attorney General to institute criminal prosecutions against them where the evidence, in his opinion, justifies said proceedings; and it is further

Resolved, That said resolution be laid before the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the concurrent resolution referred to in this resolution has been fully discussed on several occasions in the Senate. It had been on the calendar for a considerable time, and it was thought best that it should go to the Judiciary Committee, under the rules of the Senate. For that reason on May 7 I concluded to consent that it should be referred to that committee. Three months have since expired, and still there is no report. It seems to me that it involves a matter that ought to be acted upon. Of course the statute of limitations is running; and the only question, in my judgment, after the Supreme Court of the land has found that the penal statute has been violated by men of the character involved in this litigation, is, Should criminal prosecutions be begun against them the same as against other violators of the law, provided that, in the opinion of the Attorney General, the evidence is such as to justify it? I do not care to discuss the matter further.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think the resolution introduced by the Senator from Ohio ought not to pass. The concurrent resolution which the Senator introduced some time ago is pending before the Judiciary Committee.

When I began to speak I did not observe that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary was in the Chamber, or I should have yielded to him.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I shall be glad to have the Senator proceed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The concurrent resolution has been pending before the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and I do not recall that it has been brought to the attention of the committee, except upon a single occasion, within the last few days.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah is in error about that. Possibly he was not present when the resolution was first called to the attention of the Judiciary Committee. If he will permit me, I will state my recollection with regard to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. The resolution to which the Senator from Ohio refers was introduced a year or more ago, when it was sought to be considered without a reference. Thereupon there came a motion to refer it to the Judiciary Committee, which motion was pending here for months. Finally the Senator from Ohio permitted that motion to prevail, or did not contest it, upon, among other things, my assurance that I would do my best to secure a report from the Judiciary Committee upon it. I called the resolution to the attention of the Judiciary Committee on two or three occasions. I am not criticizing the committee at all, but I am simply stating the history of this matter. I think everything has been done that could be done to secure a report from the committee, but the committee did not believe it was wise to report the measure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am inclined to believe that I shall have to take issue with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] on his last statement. The Senator from Iowa has been quite diligent in the presentation of the resolution to the committee. The resolution was on the calendar of the Senate for something like a year. It was then, on motion, referred to the Judiciary Committee, as the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] well know. That committee has been extremely busy, and it has been diligent in the prosecution of its business. At the last meeting of the committee the Senator from Iowa—I think it was the last meeting—called up the resolution and asked for action upon it. I know the Senator from Iowa has done all that he could do to secure that action; but there are certain questions involved in the resolution that would require some time for consideration. So the committee during nearly all of its entire meeting at its last session considered the resolution, but did not arrive at a conclusion. They did not, however, arrive at the conclusion that the Senator from Iowa intimated, that it was unwise to report the resolution, but it went over without action.

If the Senate thinks that the committee has been derelict in its duty, or if the Senate thinks that the resolution should be taken up in the open Senate, of course that is for the Senate itself to declare. I can only assure the Senator from Ohio and the Senate that the committee has no intention of shirking its duty in this matter. It has treated this resolution, as it has treated other resolutions, without particular favor as to putting it to the front, but without any desire to avoid the responsibility of the committee in this particular case.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may ask the Senator from Wyoming a question, can the Senator assure the Senate that a report will be made at this session of Congress, so that the resolution may be acted upon?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Ohio is asking for an assurance which, of course, the chairman of the committee can not make any more than could the Senator from Ohio assure the action of a committee of which he might be chairman.

Mr. POMERENE. That might be true; but we usually go to the head of the committee for assurances.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can only say to the Senator from Ohio that the matter was under consideration when the committee adjourned its last session on Monday last. How long the question will last, of course, I am unable to tell. I can only say to the Senator that the resolution is not being neglected. I can not, of course, give the Senator such an assurance as he asks.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senate acted favorably upon another branch of this same proposition when it passed the bill authorizing an appeal in the American Tobacco Co. case.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. It involved the same legal questions that this resolution does.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say that the Judiciary Committee reported that resolution after due consideration and it passed the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and it seems to me there is very little difference as to whether it involves a civil question or a criminal one.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As chairman of the committee, I will say, if the Senator will permit me, that the committee will have a meeting on Monday next at half past 10 o'clock, and the committee will be delighted to have the Senator appear before it in behalf of this resolution.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean on next Monday?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. On next Monday—the day after to-morrow.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, with the consent of the Senate, I will consent that the resolution lie on the table until Monday without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks that the resolution which has been read shall retain its place without prejudice, and that it be now passed over. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, has morning business closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not so announced, but was about to do so. If there is no other morning business, morning business is closed.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, for several weeks, and perhaps I might say months, I have been trying very diligently to have the Senate consider Senate bill No. 3, known as the vocational education bill. I feel that I ought not to insist that this bill be taken up to prevent the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection, and yet I think we have about reached a time when I shall have to make objection in order to get my bill before the Senate. Now, I am going to ask unanimous consent that on Saturday next at 12 o'clock the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 3, with the usual formula which is attached to such orders.

Mr. BORAH. I did not understand the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 3, Calendar No. 348, be taken up for consideration on Saturday next immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. BORAH. One week from to-day?

Mr. PAGE. One week from to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not to interfere with appropriation bills, I will suggest to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that on Saturday next, immedately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, the bill to which he has referred shall be taken up for consideration, with the stipulation that it shall not interfere with appropriation bills or conference reports. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does that involve the idea that, if we finish with other business and are ready to adjourn, we would have to remain here until Saturday in order to consider this matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not the function of the Chair to construe the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me that it would, and I am nourishing the hope that, in view of the President's veto of the woolen bill, in view of the patent fact that all other tariff bills to be sent to him will be vetoed, and of the present condition of business in the Senate, we might be ready to get away from here by next Saturday. If the Senator from Vermont will couple his request with the phrase "unless an earlier adjournment of the Senate shall have been had," so that none of us will be morally bound to resist adjournment in consequence of his request, I shall not object to it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that, if there is any possibility of adjourning before Saturday next, I will join with him and with the Senate generally in moving for the adjournment, and I shall be glad, indeed, to have this bill lapse if we should adjourn before Saturday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not hear the Senator; but do I understand that he modifies his request to that extent?

Mr. PAGE. I do; yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not believe we ought to bind ourselves by a unanimous-consent agreement such as that at this late day in the session. If we do, I think we will get into a very awkward position in relation to adjournment. I feel compelled, therefore, to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that on Saturday next, immediately following the routine morning business, Senate bill No. 3 be made the special order at that time, to be considered until it is finally disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not understand the motion.

Mr. LODGE. A motion like that, it seems to me, is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to make the bill referred to a special order, which, of course, can be done by a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does a special order displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the special order will displace the unfinished business, if adopted by a two-thirds vote of the Senate. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont why he does not make it Wednesday or some earlier day? I am inclined to vote for the motion, but it seems to me that Saturday is too late in the week.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, nothing would please me better than to make it Wednesday rather than Saturday, but I realize that the coming week will be pretty generally devoted to the appropriation bills and to bills which Senators believe ought to pass under the general-consent rule. So, in order to make it beyond the peradventure of any trouble of that kind, I have named Saturday, with the expectation that if we can adjourn before that time, of course, I would join with others in wishing to adjourn at the earliest possible moment, but if we continue in session until next Saturday, I should like then to have my bill brought forward, and I hope the Senate will favor it.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if he would modify his request and make it conditional upon whether or not the Post Office appropriation bill has been passed by that time?

Mr. GALLINGER. He has done that.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will be very glad indeed to ask that the bill be laid aside at any time when there are any appropriation bills before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was a part of the Senator's first request.

Mr. PAGE. That was part of my request, I think.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator if he would consent to have his bill laid aside for appropriation bills, would the Senator also consent to have it laid aside for the unfinished business? I take it, from the ruling of the Chair, that his motion would supplant even the unfinished business.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, if I can do so without prejudice, I shall be very happy to make that concession.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have to request that the Senator re-form his request and submit it.

Mr. PAGE. I think I will not make any change in my motion; but I will say to the Senate that if my motion is agreed to and unfinished business should be before the Senate at that time, I will very gladly ask that my bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SIMMONS. Can the Senator do that if his bill is made a special order? I desire to make that inquiry of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that, unless it is embraced in the special order, it can not subsequently be modified to that extent.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was my impression. In that condition, without any reference to my attitude toward the Senator's measure—and he knows what that is—I shall be inclined to oppose the special order, and I hope it will not prevail. I do not think, after agreeing upon a bill as the unfinished business, we ought to make another order that will displace that bill. The two things seem to me to be inconsistent. I hope that the motion of the Senator in its present form will not prevail.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not familiar with the effect of a special order of this kind. Does it mean that we would continue the consideration of that bill until it was disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not unless it was so specified in the order. The special order would relate to the taking up of the matter at that time if it were limited to that extent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would it, then, continue as unfinished business before the Senate until it was displaced, or would it only apply to that day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it should be specified for that day only, the Chair is of the opinion that it would only continue for that day. It depends upon the way in which the order is formulated. The Senate is authorized to make any special order it sees fit to make, and to make any provisions in it it sees fit, provided that it is carried by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I think we ought to ask the Senator from Vermont to put his order in writing so that we can understand exactly what it is. I am most desirous that this bill shall have opportunity for discussion at this session, but there are, I think, a number of important modifications that ought to be made in the bill. It is one of very great importance, and I think it will involve quite a lengthy discussion when we get to it. I think, when the terms of the bill are understood fully by Senators, many Senators will desire to take part in the discussion. I myself would be perfectly willing to see it given a few hours for discussion, but I could not vote for a motion that would make it a special order, and a continuous order, which might greatly interfere with the other business of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest that the Senator from Vermont redraft his order so as to exempt from its operations appropriation bills, conference reports, and the unfinished business. Then there might be no objection to it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, why should we, at the close of a session, with the calendar congested with business, with important appropriation bills pending, and all kinds of controversies likely to be injected into them, make a special order here a week in advance? To mortgage our time by special orders seems to me to be ridiculous, I do not care what the merits of the bill are. If we have time to attend to it, let us take it up and attend to it, but not by a special order a week in advance mortgage the time of the Senate when we do not know what will be pending at that time.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I have been in the Senate for about four years and I have never yet objected to a request for unanimous consent. There have been numerous unanimous-consent days since this bill has been before the Senate, and in every case where unanimous consent was asked I have been patient and said, "Certainly; go ahead." I do not want to interfere with the general business of the Senate, but the time has come when I feel that I must ask that my bill have its rights. I am perfectly willing to say that it shall not come up for consideration until Saturday of next week, or even until the following Monday, if we will have business that will occupy us until that time, or if we can adjourn before that time I am willing that the bill shall go over; but if we are to have a session that will last until week after next I believe the Senate ought to give consideration to this bill, for it is a very important measure.

Mr. BRISTOW. If we are here next Saturday and the Senate wishes to take it up, let us take it up then. We will know then what is pending and we will be able to say what is the most important thing to consider at that time. We can not know now what we ought to consider next Saturday. I would rather consider it now than next Saturday.

Mr. STONE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I inquire whether the motion to fix a special order made by the Senator from Vermont is a debatable motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. STONE. Well, I do not give my consent for any further debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to lay before the Senate the rule of the Senate, which had been overlooked in responding to the inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. The Secretary will read Rule X in regard to conflicts between a special order and the unfinished business.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE X.

SPECIAL ORDERS.

1. Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the Presiding Officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day, and if it is not finally disposed of on that day it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the bill suggested by the Senator from Vermont is one of the most important that has come before the Senate. I think it would be quite as helpful to the people of the United States as the canal bill that we have just passed, and we ought to vote upon it at this session.

I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he propose a unanimous-consent agreement for voting upon the cotton bill, the unfinished business. Can we not agree upon a time for the disposition of that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter before the Senate now is the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. STONE. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks for the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from North Carolina suggests that my motion, as I understand, would displace the unfinished business. Do I understand that the ruling with reference to that is that the unfinished business would not be displaced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has just had the rule read from the Secretary's desk.

Mr. PAGE. Then I ask for a yea-and-nay vote, as I understand that it takes a two-thirds vote to adopt the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that on Saturday next the Senate proceed to the consideration by special order of the bill named by him. As that requires a two-thirds vote the Chair will direct the Secretary to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON. A special order at what time of the day on Saturday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Immediately after the morning business was the motion made by the Senator from Vermont. It should have been so stated by the Chair.

Mr. BOURNE. I understood the Senator to say that his motion included the statement that he would give way to the consideration of all conference reports and appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter will not rest within the control of the Senator from Vermont. It must be ordered now by the Senate in such terms as it desires to have settled.

Mr. PAGE. I think that was a part of my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read what appears to be the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The Secretary read as follows:

That on Saturday, August 17, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills or reports of committees of conference, the Senate will take up for consideration Senate bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economies in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the motion. A two-thirds vote being necessary, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. JONES was called). The senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was called from the Senate on official business.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. He not being present, I withhold my vote.

understand if he were present, he would vote as I do on this question, and I will therefore let my vote stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN], and I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. LODGE. My colleague [Mr. CRANE] is absent from the city, and is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the call of the roll of the Senate, on the question of the adoption of the motion made by the Senator from Vermont to make a special order, the yeas are 33, the nays are 13. No quorum has voted.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no quorum, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the roll be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has voted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the roll be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire suggest the absence of a quorum? What is the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair is trying to ascertain.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an impression that when a vote shows a lack of a quorum, the roll should be called immediately to ascertain whether a quorum is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, if necessary, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the roll.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest that probably when the names of absent Senators are called it will disclose a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no special rule to that effect.

Mr. SIMMONS. Votes might be cast.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has suggested the absence of a quorum, and the calling of the roll is imperative. The Secretary will proceed to call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bacon	Cullom	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bailey	Cummins	Massey	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Curtis	Myers	Smoot

Mr. TOWNSEND. I again announce that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is unavoidably detained on official business.

I also again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I desire to inquire whether a quorum is present. I should like to have the Senate go on and do business. If no quorum is present, it seems to me that the motion has failed for want of a quorum. That is parliamentary law. If there is anything in the rules of the Senate to the contrary, I should like to know it.

Mr. GALLINGER. We can not do business without a quorum, of course. That goes without saying.

Mr. TILLMAN. We can not do anything without a quorum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for a ruling on the point I have made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make the point of order that the motion has failed?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do. I say that under the general rule the motion has failed for want of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think the point is well taken.

Upon the call of the roll of the Senate 53 Senators have answered to their names.

The Chair will again direct the question to be taken on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. The Secretary will proceed to call the roll upon the adoption of the motion made by the Senator from Vermont to make Senate bill No. 3 a special order for Saturday next under the terms stated in the motion which has been read to the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. I will let that statement stand for the day.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when Mr. JONES's name was called). I again announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on official business.

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I do not see him in his seat, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]; but under the arrangement which I have with him with reference to votes which require a two-thirds majority, I am at liberty to vote upon this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I am advised that if present he would vote as I would on this motion, and therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE. I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] and withhold my vote.

Mr. REED. I announce my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], and I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 13, as follows:

Mr. BAILEY. There is not a quorum. The roll itself makes the point of no quorum. I make the further point that the motion has failed for the lack of a quorum, and that the Senate pass to the consideration of other business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The same point was made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and was overruled by the Chair, but if the Chair is in error he would be very glad to have the error designated or pointed out in regard to that matter.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand, of course, that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state, with the permission of the Senator, that the ruling was made simply as a matter of general impression, not in recollection of any specific precedent or rule to that effect. If the Chair is in error, he would be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. BAILEY. I have little hope, of course, of convincing the Chair that the ruling is erroneous, but I am perfectly satisfied myself that when the motion failed for want of a quorum the only thing the Senate can then do is either to adjourn or to take steps to enforce the attendance of absent Members.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Since we have nothing to do, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. We have much to do, and we are willing to do it. I do not yield for that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. LIPPITT. Is not a motion to adjourn in order at any time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas has the floor. The Senator from Kansas did not have the floor to make the motion.

Mr. BAILEY. I yielded to the Senator from Kansas because I thought he intended to interrogate me.

Mr. BRISTOW. I did not desire to take the Senator off his feet, but I simply wanted to emphasize the situation we are in. If we are unable to do business, we are able to adjourn; and if we are not able to do business, I think we ought to adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. I am ready to adjourn without day.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Senator from Texas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. PAGE. In view of the existing situation, I think I have developed about all I care to do at this time, and, with the consent of the Senate, I will withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks the leave of the Senate to withraw his motion. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will direct the Secretary to again call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	Massey	Simmons
Bacon	Dillingham	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Bailey	Fall	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Fletcher	Newlands	Smoot

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll of the Senate 57 Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

DESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] be the President of the Senate pro tempore from Monday, August 12, 1912, to Saturday, August 17, 1912, both inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has heard the motion of the Senator from Utah. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. We can not hear in this part of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota not having heard the motion, the Secretary will state it from the desk.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] asks unanimous consent that JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, be President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from Monday, August 12, 1912, to Saturday, August 17, 1912, both inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 376), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President, from Monday, August 12, 1912, to Saturday, August 17, 1912, both inclusive.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 377), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President, from Monday, August 12, 1912, to Saturday, August 17, 1912, both inclusive.

COOSA RIVER DAM, ALABAMA.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7343) to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala., at the place selected for Lock No. 18 on said river.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I dislike to object to the consideration of that bill, but I intend to object to the consideration of any bill until we have taken up and disposed of the Post Office appropriation bill. I therefore object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah objects.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill immediately after the disposition of the bill to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] refers as the reason for objecting to the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the Senate agree, after the Post Office appropriation bill has been acted upon by the Senate, to proceed to the consideration of the bill to which he refers. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. BORAH. I gave notice a few days ago that I would move this morning to take up the bill (H. R. 22913) to create a department of labor, but it is rather apparent to my mind that, considering the conditions in which we find the Senate this morning, it would perhaps be a waste of time to undertake to get that bill up by motion, especially in view of the desire of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] to proceed with the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill. I therefore desire to prefer a request for unanimous consent that upon next Tuesday, after the routine morning business, the Senate take up the bill to which I have referred, and that we vote upon the bill and the amendments thereto before the close of that calendar day, not, however, to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. SMOOT. Or conference reports. Will the Senator accept that suggestion?

Mr. BORAH. Not to interfere with conference reports or appropriation bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. I must object to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire objects.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I will ask, Is the Senator from New Hampshire objecting on account of the particular day I have asked to be fixed for the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suppose there are 50 and perhaps 100 bills on the calendar as to which Senators would be glad to have special orders made for their consideration. I do not know why we should select this particular bill. It is going to lead to considerable debate, at least it will lead to some debate, and I think the Senator from Idaho had better let it remain a little while on the calendar. It has been there only a few days, and perhaps after a few days more consent for its consideration might be given; but I think this morning that consent ought not to be given. So I object, on the ground that, as I have stated, I think the bill ought to remain on the calendar a little while longer so that we may look into it and give it more consideration than I at least have been able to give up to the present time. There are half a dozen interests in this country demanding departments. The medical profession want a department; the transportation people want a department; and I apprehend that, while we have a Bureau of Mines now, they will want a department after a little while. It is a very serious question whether we want to enlarge the departments of the Government any further at the present time. I certainly want to look into the matter.

Mr. BORAH. Very well, Mr. President, I realize that it is an important question and may lead to some little discussion, but the fact that the people want a department is not conclusive evidence that they should not have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what the physicians say, that there is no reason why they should not have a department.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from New Hampshire ought to know the weaknesses of the physicians; I do not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know that there is any weakness about it. I simply question the propriety of it at the present time; that is all. Hence I oppose it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to urge the matter this morning, partly on account of the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, as I presume that he will come around in time to support the proposition, as he always does good measures, but principally for the reason that I think it but fair that the Post Office appropriation bill should be gotten out of the way. I do, however, want to suggest that I shall feel constrained to urge the bill at the very earliest opportunity, especially in view of the fact that two of the great political parties have indorsed it, and that it is important that we begin to carry out our platforms if we can.

POLITICAL CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. At the request of some Senators who are particularly interested in the passage of the bill, I want to give notice that on Monday morning next, following the completion of the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of such contributions by individuals or persons.

TENURE OF PRESIDENTIAL OFFICE.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I had given notice that at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-day I would move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Senate joint resolution (No. 78) to amend the Constitution with respect to the tenure of the presidential office, but I think it is only fair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] to get out of his way until we can dispose of the Post Office appropriation bill. I therefore give notice that immediately after the Senate has disposed of the unanimous-consent order granted at the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that joint resolution, unless some other Senator will relieve me from that necessity. I prefer, of course, that the Senator who introduced the joint resolution or the Senator who reported it should make the motion.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to address myself to the Senator from Texas, if he will listen to me. I had hoped that the Senator from Texas would at least move to take up the joint resolution to which he has referred this morning and explain it to the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall not do that, for two reasons. In the first place, I think the Senate, in its present frame of mind, would vote the motion down, and I am not sure but that it would be asking too much of the Senate to ask it to delay the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill any longer. I also refrain from doing it in the hope that the Senator who reported the joint resolution will make the motion, or that the Senator who introduced it will make it, and I feel sure that one or the other will do so.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say, Mr. President, that I should be very glad to have an opportunity to vote upon the joint resolution; but it will be impossible for me to be here next week. For that reason I suggest that the resolution be called up now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I reported the joint resolution, and I intend to bring it before the Senate at the very first moment at which I think the Senate will be willing to consider it, in view of the other business which is before the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as the author of the joint resolution has been referred to, I desire to say that I have been anxious to secure consideration for the joint resolution at the earliest possible day. I have deferred, however, as a matter of courtesy, to the Senator from Iowa, who reported it; but I am exceedingly anxious that the joint resolution shall be considered at an early day.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I recognize, of course, that all the proprieties require that the matter shall be left with the Senator who proposed the joint resolution or the Senator who reported it; I also recognize that either Senator is quite equal to the task of conducting its consideration through the Senate; but I am extremely anxious that it shall be brought, with as little delay as possible, before the Senate, because I am satisfied from conversations with Senators, who have volunteered their opinions, that if it can be brought to a vote, it will command the necessary two-thirds. I desire to see it pass the Senate at this session, so that it may pass the House at the next session and be submitted to the legislatures of the various States which will convene during the next wintertime. In that way it can not affect the election which will be held before the amendment can be made part of the Constitution, and yet it will be voted upon far in advance of the following election, and can not possibly be supposed to have relation to the candidacy of any particular individual.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOURNE. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, beginning in line 15, the committee amendment is proposed to strike out down to and including line 22, on page 39, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That a joint committee shall be appointed, composed of three members of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and three members of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to be designated by the respective chairmen thereof, to make an inquiry into the subject of Federal aid in the construction of highways, and report at the earliest practicable date, and said committee shall have power to employ such clerical and stenographic assistance as may be necessary and conduct hearings, and for the payment of the expenses of such inquiry there is hereby appropriated the sum of $5,000 to be paid upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads striking out the House provision for Government aid to postal roads and substituting for it a commission will not be adopted. It is said by the opponents of the House plan that the legislation proposed is crude, immature legislation. I do not think so; on the contrary, I think it fully meets the situation. I think it provides a just, equitable, and workable plan for contribution by the Government for the maintenance and upkeep of such roads as it is now using in the discharge of its constitutional duty every day of the week. The opponents of this measure—those interested in its defeat, those who think the Government should confine its assistance to good road building, to building great national highways connecting the great cities of the country—naturally look upon this simple plan as crude and objectionable, because it is not the way they want it done; but, to the people who have to keep up these roads which the Government has organized and established into postal roads and is using in carrying the mails, the plan proposed is an exceedingly direct, simple, and equitable one.

I do not mean to oppose the construction of national highways connecting important centers. These highways will serve an admirable purpose. But the benefits will be far more circumscribed and will bear but remote relation to the postal service.

The plan proposed in the House bill is a plan for the distribution of the governmental contribution, not among a few localities and sections but throughout the whole country wherever there is a postal road; the contribution is to be as broad as the postal service; it is intended to make that service more expeditious and efficient; it is intended to cheapen transportation from the farm to the railroad; it is intended to make the postal service a national service—one in which all the people are equally interested, the burdens to be borne by the people as a whole—without imposing special burdens and hardships upon detached portions of the system. In this connection the Government is asked to do nothing more than to contribute its part to keep up every section of road which it uses in discharging its constitutional duty to supply the people, and all the people, with adequate mail facilities—the people of the country as well as the people of the towns.

Again, Mr. President, the House provision fully meets the constitutional and institutional objections to Government aid to good roads with which its advocates have heretofore been confronted. No one will contend this scheme for Government aid is unconstitutional. No one can contend that it is unconstitutional for the Government to help repair a road it has helped to tear up in performing a duty imposed upon it by the Constitution. It meets the objection that the Government can not aid in the betterment and the improvement of the local highways of the country without trenching upon the reserved rights of the States—without interfering in matters of purely local concern.

These plausible objections have in the past been a real obstacle in the way of this legislation. At length a plan has been worked out which meets completely both of those objections—a plan which nobody can claim is unconstitutional, a plan which nobody can contend will interfere with the reserved rights of the States. But, Mr. President, now that we have reached the point that these threshold objections, so to speak, have been removed, we are confronted with another objection. It is an objection which has become quite common in recent years when it is sought to defeat popular legislation not by direct methods but by dilatory methods.

It is the suggestion so frequently made when all other grounds of opposition to what public sentiment demands have been headed off and silenced—that the Congress is not in possession of sufficient information to enable it to act intelligently and wisely in carrying out the well-known wishes of the people with respect to the matter, and that the only way Congress can get this necessary information is to appoint a commission to investigate the subject and, at its leisure, report and advise Congress as to its rights and its duties and how it ought to proceed in the exercise of its legislative functions with respect to the matter.

Mr. President, I say it has become quite common in this country, when the opposing interests discover that it would be unwise or impossible to defeat the will of the people with respect to proposed legislation by direct methods, to seek to accomplish its defeat by the interposition of an investigating commission.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will permit me, I am sure he does not mean to have anyone infer that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads were actuated by the motive of trying to kill off this legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at all. The Senator should not understand me as impugning the motive or the purpose of the committee. I am simply speaking in general terms of the commission scheme as one that is too frequently invoked in recent years to defeat popular legislation. I am not speaking about the action of the committee in this regard, except in so far as in my opinion the adoption of the amendment it proposes will give encouragement to the dilatory practices I am in general terms deprecating. I know there are members of the committee who favor Government aid but do not indorse the House plan, and think there should be further investigation before action. I am now discussing the subject of investigating commissions in the abstract and not in the concrete.

Mr. President, some time ago, when the agricultural and labor interests of the country, comprising far more than one-half of the electorate of the country, were demanding legislation——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Just a moment—to restrict immigration and to prevent the annual influx to this country of 300,000 ignorant alien immigrants from the backward nations of Europe, who were being brought here for the purpose of displacing American labor in our railroads and factories, and lowering the scale of American living—when it was ascertained that the sentiment in favor of legislation to accomplish that purpose was so strong that it could not be defeated by direct methods, that legislation was antagonized, in the interests of the steamships and railroads who were largely responsible for this stimulated immigration, and defeated by the substitution for it of a commission to investigate and advise Congress how it should act in the premises. By these dilatory tactics this popular legislation has been delayed and postponed for three long years.

Mr. POMERENE. In connection with what the Senator was saying about the practice of delaying good legislation until after the matter can be investigated by a commission, did the Senator have reference to the information we have in the public prints on the subject of the veto of the wool bill and sundry other bills which provided for the relief of the people in connection with the tariff?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will come to that now. The Senator has anticipated me. I thank him for reminding me, lest I might have forgotten it.

The attention of the Senate has just been sharply attracted to the part the tariff investigating commission is playing in defeating and postponing the demands of the people for relief from onerous tariff burdens.

While the Republican Party was making tariff laws in the interest of the few—tariffs to maintain and increase the profits of the tariff-protected classes—we heard no suggestions that a commission was necessary in order to enable Congress to act. When the Republican Party decided to enter upon the policy of protecting the industries of the country they did not say that they could not frame a schedule which would accomplish that purpose without an investigation by a commission, and from year to year, as the Republican Party has gone on increasing these tariff bounties, no suggestion of that sort was made. As long as revision of the tariff was to be an upward revision, as long as the tariff was being revised to increase the profits of the protected classes, we heard no suggestion that a tariff commission was necessary in order to enable the Republican Party to bestow these special favors so as to intelligently accomplish its purpose.

On the contrary, when revising the tariff upward—it never has revised it in any other way—the Republican Party scouted the idea of a commission. The very suggestion of a tariff commission was odious to it. They would not entertain it for a minute. They heard it with impatience. Such a commission was denounced as a superfluity—as an impeachment of the competency of Congress and the party in control. When, after years of upward revision, they had made these tariff burdens so onerous that the people could not any longer endure them, when the command of the people that these burdens be lightened by a revision of the tariff downward in the interest of the consumers could be resisted no longer, instantly a new light dawned upon the Republican Party and they discovered that though they could revise the tariff upward in the interest of privilege without the aid of a commission it was impossible for them to act intelligently in revising it downward in the interest of the masses without the aid of a tariff commission.

Now, Mr. President, when the Democratic Party, through its majority in the House of Representatives, was intrusted by the people to initiate this downward revision because they had discovered they could not trust the Republican Party to do the job, and when it framed and passed through that body a series of measures, including the wool bill, to give to the people needed relief with respect to the subjects embraced in these bills, and, with the aid of a few Senators on the other side who sympathized with the people in their struggles for relief from the excessive tariff impositions of the Payne-Aldrich law, passed those measures through the Senate and sent them to the President, the Congress and the people are gravely informed by the Chief Executive of the Nation that upon the receipt of the wool bill he had consulted Prof. Emery and his associates on the Tariff Board, and they had applied their yardstick to the bill, and, forsooth, it did not quite measure up to the requirement of their report and that he could do nothing for the relief of the people, as sorry as he was for them.

And so, Mr. President, in this great work of relieving the people of the iniquitous duties of Schedule K, admitted by practically everybody to be unjust, admitted by the President to be excessive, we are unable to do anything because the President's bobtail commission tells him that the bill we passed does not conform to their measurement.

Mr. President, the people have duly considered this matter of Government assistance in keeping up the roads which the Government has officially organized into postal roads and is using to a greater extent, perhaps, than a majority of those who bear the burden of keeping them up use them, and have reached the conclusion that the Government ought to contribute toward their upkeep; and, now, when they come to Congress and ask for legislation to this end, are they to be told that Congress can not legislate about this simple matter—with a plan before it as simple as the A B C's—until we have a commission to junket the country, examine the farmer's roads and make a report, probably four-fifths of which would be a mere compilation of facts and data now in possession of the departments of the Government?

Mr. President, this practice of holding up legislation, legislation that the people are demanding, legislation known to have behind it an overwhelming crystallization of public sentiment, upon the plea that Congress is not competent to act without further information, and that information can be secured only through a commission, despite the mass of information upon almost every conceivable subject that the Government has accumulated, is assuming the proportions of a very great abuse, and, if we do not call a halt, the country will soon recognize it as a confession of impotency on the part of Congress to act in matters of great concern to the people.

Mr. President, the opponents of the House scheme have told us about the great cost of constructing macadam roads. The Senator from New York and the Senator from Massachusetts have told us about the enormous cost of constructing the magnificent boulevards that run out from the great cities in those States and which the Government, I suppose, uses as postal roads. The Senator from Mississippi told us about the cost of constructing sand-clay roads in Mississippi, where they have not conveniently in juxtaposition, as we have in most other portions of the country, the necessary materials for use in the construction of that class of roads; and they compare these large sums with the small amount it is proposed that the Government contribute annually to roads of this character, and vehemently insist that the amount is too small to do any good—to be of any practical value.

The contention would be sound if this were a proposition for Government contribution to the construction of these roads, but it is not a proposition to aid in road construction at all. There is no proposition before the Senate that the Government shall aid in the construction of any roads. Not one cent can be paid under the House provisions for the building of any road. Before any community can receive a cent from the Government under this bill the road must have been already constructed.

The road must not only be built and in actual use for travel, but it must have been improved, at the expense of the community, to that standard of efficiency and excellence prescribed in the bill. It is not a proposition to assist in road construction; it is a proposition that the Government shall pay a small annual contribution, from $15 to $25 per mile, toward keeping in repair the roads used by it in carrying the rural-delivery and star-route mail, but the Government will not pay a cent for even that purpose until the community has brought the road up to the standard prescribed, and so maintained it for a year.

But it is insisted that, considered as a contribution for maintenance, the small amount proposed to be contributed by the Government will be of no real benefit. I do not pretend to know the cost of maintaining macadam and gravel roads, nor even sand clay roads. It may be that from $20 to $25 per mile per annum is too small an amount to be of great service—as these Senators contend—but I do not think so. I think it will be not only very helpful, but as a beginning it is a reasonable contribution by the Government. But Senators have lost sight of the fact that while there are 2,200,000 miles of highways in this country, there are only about 180,000 miles of those highways that have been improved by the addition of an artificial covering of any kind whatsoever. So the mileage of improved highways by the process of macadam, or gravel, or sand clay, compared with our total mileage of highways, is, relatively speaking, negligible.

Of this total highway mileage only about 1,180,000 is appropriated to the rural-delivery and star-route service. It is not true; but if for the sake of argument it be admitted that every mile of improved highway is now used as a postal route, there would be left of the roads now appropriated by the Government for these purposes 900,000 miles of unimproved roads. They are the ordinary dirt roads of the country, such as the farmers built when they felled the forests and cleared the land into fields for cultivation. In many sections they have not been greatly changed from the original road except, perhaps, as to drainage and as to grade.

If the Government had treated the agricultural interests the same way it has treated the railroad and the manufacturing industries of the country, we would not now have this condition. If it had showered upon the agricultural interests the bounties it has showered upon these other more favored interests, our public highways would compare to-day as favorably, probably, with the highways of the advanced nations of the world as do our manufacturing and our railroad systems. Partly, if not largely, as a result of this discriminatory treatment we find this condition, that while our manufacturing is as advanced as that of any nation in the world, while our railroad system is equal to that of any nation in the world, in the matter of our country highways, which go to the very foundation of the prosperity of agriculture, we are behind any nation, claiming to be a progressive nation, in all the world.

Speaking approximately, only about 10 per cent of our postal roads are improved by costly surface covering; the other 90 per cent is ordinary dirt road.

Now, when we go to determine whether the Government contribution proposed in the bill is large enough to be really helpful are we going to measure the sufficiency of the contribution by the requirements of the 10 per cent of the roads, or are we going to measure it by the requirements of the 90 per cent of the roads, appropriated by the Government to this use? I prefer to determine this question by the requirements of the 900,000 miles, rather than by the requirements of the 180,000 miles.

If Senators think a contribution of $15 per mile per annum for the maintenance of the ordinary dirt highways of the country will not be substantially helpful in keeping these roads in repair, if they think the farmers are not in favor of this legislation, when they go home and make their campaigns in the rural districts they will have a sad awakening. They will find that while the farmer does not consider the contribution adequate, he will be willing to accept it as a beginning. If any Senator here thinks the farmers are not demanding this legislation; that they do not feel that the Government is under legal and moral obligation to aid in the maintenance of these roads; that they are not closely and anxiously watching the attitude of their representatives at Washington upon this question, when he confronts them in the coming campaign he will learn differently.

I do not believe there is any legislation pending in Congress to-day or which has been before Congress in recent years in which the agricultural classes are more interested than this measure. The farmers have an intelligent conception of what their interest demands and what the Government can and should do to promote those interests—they know their power, and they are manifesting a purpose to exert their influence to enforce their rights.

I believe the House provision embodies a plan which will meet with general approval among those who are directly interested, those who live along the line of these postal roads and who have to bear the expense of their maintenance. I believe they will regard this plan as the most feasible and the most equitable, both as concerns the Government and those upon whom the burden of supporting these roads falls.

I do not believe Senators appreciate what an incentive to good-roads work this contribution of $15 per mile per annum to the dirt roads of the country will be. I live largely among the farmers of my State. I am acquainted with rural life. If the Government should decide to make this contribution, I confidently believe that there will be a general movement throughout the country to bring these dirt roads up to the standard of efficiency prescribed in the bill as a condition precedent to the contribution of the money, and the result will be an era of good-roads construction such as has never been seen in this country before. These roads will be speedily ditched on both sides, brought to a crown, and dragged, as the bill requires. When that is done, without any artificial surface covering, the result will be a good road in many sections of the country throughout the whole year, and the benefits which will follow this improvement will suggest the idea of further improvement, eventuating in roads of the highest degree of excellence.

I believe—indeed, I have an abiding confidence—that, small as is the amount to be contributed by the Government, the movement which it will inaugurate, the impetus which it will give to the movement for better roads, will in a relatively short period work a transformation in the present deplorable condition of these rural highways which even the most optimistic would not now regard as possible.

Mr. President, I repeat, let no Senator deceive himself with the idea that this small contribution will not be helpful in maintaining these roads or that the farmer does not believe he is entitled to this aid for this purpose, or that he will look complacently upon the defeat of this provision, which passed the House by such a tremendous majority, and with respect to which he is thoroughly advised.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been listening to the Senator with a great deal of interest. I have an impression that the farmers of North Carolina will take care of the Senator. They ought to do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am much obliged to the Senator for expressing that opinion. I am on very good terms with the farmers of my State, I am glad to assure the Senator, and I think he will do well to keep on pretty good terms with the farmers of his State. They are a very important element of our population.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that. The Senator says that the Government is under obligation to make a contribution to the upkeep of the dirt roads of the country because the Government sends a vehicle of some kind over those roads once a day.

What is the proportion of use of any one individual to the entire population which travels over the road?

Mr. SIMMONS. The use is more than that of an average man along the road and many, many times more than most of the people along the road.

Mr. GALLINGER. What proportion does the Senator think the use of that road once a day is to the entire use of the road by any community the Senator can think of?

Mr. SIMMONS. I would not measure that in golden scales. The people along the line of the road have to keep it up. Some are landowners and use it a good deal. Some are tenant farmers and use it very little. Some are farm laborers and do not use it at all. Yet they all have to do the same amount of work to keep it up.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that, but if the Senator——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will let me finish, I said I would not measure the relative use of these roads in golden scales, and, if the Senator will let me proceed, he will see that I do not base my claim for this aid upon the part of the Government solely upon the use by the Government of the road. That, I think, gives the constitutional power. That provides the authority for the Government contribution. I base my contention in part upon the ulterior public objects which are to be accomplished through the constitutional exercise of this power. I shall attempt to show that the benefits to the Government that will result will justify the contribution if it be more than its proportionate share measured by its actual use of the road.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not interrupt the Senator if he is going to elaborate the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am going to elaborate it.

Mr. GALLINGER. But my attention was attracted to the statement of the Senator that the Government would use these roads once a day, and hence the Government was under obligations to make a contribution toward their upkeep. The query in my mind was, if the Government must contribute $15 a mile to these dirt roads in communities where very little attention has been given to roads, what proportion ought the citizens of the county or State or municipality contribute?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator if they are kept up to the standard provided in this bill a great deal of attention would have to be paid to them by the communities.

Mr. GALLINGER. They will be pretty poor roads.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am going to try to show that this is a much broader proposition than that involved in the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish the Senator in that matter would broaden the roads. I see they are to be but 9 feet wide, hardly wide enough for two wheelbarrows.

Mr. SIMMONS. The people throughout the country have been getting along with these roads and the Government has been geting along with them in carrying the mails. The Senator misunderstands the 9-foot provision in the bill. These roads are generally 18 feet wide. The bill does not require that the entire roadbed shall be kept up to the standard prescribed, but that 9 feet of the bed shall be maintained at that standard. This is in accordance with the common practice to confine the improvement to a part of the roadbed only.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he would not support an amendment placing class C roads at not less than 14 feet wide?

Mr. SIMMONS. I would have to give that proposition some consideration. The roadbed should be more than 9 feet, but it is not necessary that the whole bed should at all times be maintained to the point of excellence prescribed.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I will if the Senator insists on it, but I would a great deal rather go on with my argument consecutively.

Mr. BRYAN. I only wanted to ask the Senator one question, and then I will not interrupt him further. Does the Senator think that the proportion of contribution by the Government for the maintenance of class C roads bears a just relation to the amount that is to be contributed to class A? Does it not cost more to maintain a road of the highest class than it does to maintain a dirt road?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have just gone over that. The Senator must not have heard the first part of my argument. I do not wish to go into it again. I am not pretending that the details of this bill are absolutely perfect. I am not much concerned about the details of the measure. What I am concerned about is the principle. I want the principle adopted and applied. We can work out the details afterwards. I am opposed to defeating legislation, valuable legislation, necessary legislation, popular legislation, because some little detail connected with it is not perfectly worked out.

Now, to get back to the line of my argument—I said that the Government was under a moral obligation to contribute to the support, the upkeep of the roads it is using every day. I said it was a legal obligation on the part of the Government to do it as well as a moral obligation.

The opponents of this measure claim the alleged legal obligation of the Government growing out of its use of these roads for postal purposes as a ground for national action is but a flimsy pretext to override the Constitution and to invade the Federal Treasury.

Mr. President, I think I shall be able to show that it is not a pretext at all, but a substantial ground for the exercise of a constitutional power.

When gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber attack legislation which seeks to accomplish a high public purpose as an incident of the exercise of a constitutional power upon the ground that the direct purpose for which there is constitutional power is inconsiderable as compared with the ulterior purpose for which there is no power to legislate, I wish to warn them that if they will investigate the legislation of the Republican Party since the war they will find it full of pretexts for the exercise of constitutional power that are indeed flimsy.

Some time after the war, when we organized our great system of national banks, and those banks wanted to get rid of the State banks of issue that had grown up throughout the country, these national banks came to the Republican Party and asked it to assist them in accomplishing their purpose.

Admittedly, there was no constitutional authority to legislate State banks of issue out of existence. No lawyer could have been found who would have said that there was any such power as that in Congress. But Congress did have power to tax the notes issued by those banks to raise revenue to support the Government.

It had no power to impose that tax, Mr. President, except for the purpose of raising revenue. There was not a man in this country who believed that the imposition of a tax of 10 per cent on these notes would result in raising a single dollar of revenue, though it would suppress the further issue of these State bank notes, and yet that party resorted to that pretext, so flimsy as hardly to be worthy of the name of even an attenuated phrase of that sort, for the purpose of accomplishing the overthrow of State banks of issue.

Again, Mr. President, when it was desired to encourage the dairy business by destroying competition between dairy-made butter and oleomargarine, in order to effect that purpose, which the Government had no right to accomplish by direct legislation, it was accomplished by the pretext of levying a tax for raising revenue, which everybody knew would yield no revenue to the Government.

The whole Republican system of protection is based in large part upon a mere pretext, so far as the constitutional power to levy duties for that purpose goes. I grant that many of the duties levied by the Republican Party under that system result in raising revenue and are intended to raise some revenue, but, Mr. President, what about duties on imports sometimes ranging from 100 to 200 per cent, as in the case of duties imposed on 27 articles of woolens? These high duties prohibit the importation of those articles into this country, and will not result in bringing a dollar to the Treasury, and were not intended to raise a dollar of revenue; and they were purposely made unreasonably high for the purpose of preventing the legislation from accomplishing the only purpose for which there is constitutional power to impose them.

Mr. President, the contention that there is a duty on the part of the Government to contribute to the maintenance of these roads because of the use it makes of them is not a flimsy pretext nor a pretext at all. There is an actual foundation for this demand for contribution growing out of the use of these roads. But Senators intimate, if indeed they do not assert, that the farmers have no right to ask the Government to help keep up these roads that it is helping to tear up with its mail wagons and automobiles, and which it will tear up still more when we inaugurate the rural and the general parcel-post system, by which the Government will become a much greater patron and user of these roads. They say that the farmers ought to accept the service of the Government in supplying them with daily mails as a sufficient consideration for the use of their roads.

Mr. President, let me ask, when did it become the duty of the farmers of this country to furnish the Government the agencies and the medium for its discharge of its constitutional duties? The Constitution confers upon Congress the power to establish post offices and post roads. The power to establish post roads is coequal with the power to establish the post office. This clause of the Constitution not only confers upon Congress power coequal with respect to both, but it confers upon Congress a duty coequal with respect to both. Will anybody here contend that when our cities and our villages and our towns want a post-office building to enable the Government to discharge its functions with reference to the mails the Government has the right to say to Washington, to say to New York, to say to the smallest hamlet in this country, "If you want a post office established in your community you must provide the post-office building in which the business is to be transacted." If the Government does not have the right to say that and does not say that to the towns and cities in respect to the post-office buildings, why should it say to the farmer, "If you want your rural mails, if you want your star-route mails, if you want any mails at all you must furnish the Government the roads for the transportation and distribution of the mails and keep them in repair."

The cases are absolutely analogous, Mr. President.

The farmer does not say to the Government, "Perform your duty and build your own postal roads." He has not said to the Government, "Build your own roads," but they say to the Government, "If you use our roads in the discharge of this public duty you should help to keep them in condition to economically expedite these mails." He says to the Government, "What you are doing for us in this respect is not done as a matter of favor or grace to us, but in the performance of a duty imposed upon you by the Constitution—a duty which you can not escape—a duty you perform not exclusively for the benefit of the several communities served, but for the benefit of the whole country—for the whole country is interested in every unit of the system—and the whole people should bear the burden, and no community should be shouldered with special or exceptional burdens with respect to it."

The Government is using the railroads to-day to carry the mails, but it is paying a mighty high price for that use. Oh, but, you say, that is simply to pay for the transportation, the operating expenses in connection with the carrying of the mails. No, Mr. President, the price which the Government pays the railroads for carrying the mails is based upon a percentage of profit, not only upon the operating expenses of the road, but upon the original cost of construction and the annual cost of maintenance. The Government is paying the railroads in connection with the transmission of the mails the same per cent of profit which they charge the shipper of freight, a per cent of profit upon the original cost of constructing and maintaining their roadbed. When the farmer comes to Congress and says, "I do not demand anything from the Government as interest upon the original cost of constructing these roads, as it pays in the case of a railroad; all I demand is that the Government should make a reasonable contribution to the annual upkeep of these roads," he is told that this is a flimsy pretext to violate the Constitution and to invade the Public Treasury; that there is no such obligation on the part of the Government and there is no consideration for what he asks.

Mr. President, is not this sort of an answer tantamount to a declaration to the farmers that Congress proposes to treat them differently from the way it has from time immemorial been treating and is now treating the railroads? When the Government refuses to discharge, in such measure as its sense of justice might dictate, this obligation growing out of its use of postal roads, it in effect confiscates the property of the farmer for a public purpose without just compensation; and I contend that this Government has no more right to appropriate the dirt roads of the farmer to a public purpose without just compensation than it has to appropriate the property of the railroads for the same purpose without just compensation. To my mind it involves a horrible injustice—a horrible discrimination.

But, Mr. President, this is not the end of this matter. There are, I believe, about 900,000 miles of these unimproved dirt roads now used as postal roads. What is the expense of carrying our rural mail over these roads in their present miserable condition? A mere calculation will show that the expense is 12 cents a mile. Put these roads in the condition that is required in this bill and they will be reasonably good roads for ordinary travel. There may be a month or two in the winter when they will not be so good, but during the greater part of the season—put to a grade, as this bill requires, put to crown, drained with lateral ditches and dragged—they will be good roads for ordinary travel. If it now costs the Government 12 cents a mile to carry the mails over these roads in their present condition, when improved to the standard of efficiency which will entitle the community to this contribution, the cost would be reduced to not over 8 or 9 cents a mile; in other words, if you raise these 900,000 miles of dirt roads up to the standard of excellence prescribed in this bill, it will reduce the cost of carrying our rural mails about one-third.

What will be the effect of that reduction? How much money is appropriated in this bill for rural mail, I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads? It is $42,000,000, is it not?

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. BOURNE. As I remember, the appropriation is about $47,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. So, Mr. President, if by improving these roads to the extent required in this bill, as a condition precedent to receiving the $16,000,000 proposed as the Government contribution, the Government would save one-third of the present cost of the rural service by reducing the cost of its transmission, it would save in the beginning about the amount it pays out in giving the people quicker mail service and better roads. So we would, I say, save very nearly as much in the transmission of the mails as we would pay toward the improvement of the roads. We could, therefore, with one-third less money maintain our present rural service; or with the same amount of money now required we could increase our rural-mail mileage about one-third; and hundreds of thousands of farmers who are to-day denied the benefits of this system—because of this expense—would be given its benefits, and the loneliness and isolation of country life to that extent be relieved and the hardships of country life to that extent be ameliorated.

But, Mr. President, there is still another high public interest which will be advanced and promoted by this legislation. Confessedly, on account of the condition of our dirt roads, the cost of transportation from the farms to the railroad station is thirty times as much per unit as the cost of transportation from the railroad station to the point of ultimate distribution and consumption. It is estimated by the Department of Agriculture that upon that part of their crops which the farmers do not consume, but which they market, they would save, if the roads were put in reasonable condition as the result of reduced cost of transportation from the farm to the railroad station, $300,000,000 a year. Is not that correct, I ask the Senator from Virginia? I think that is the estimate.

Mr. SWANSON. That is the estimate made by the department.

Mr. SIMMONS. The estimate made by the department is that the farmers and consumers of farm products of the country would save, if these roads were put in good condition, $300,000,000 a year on account of the reduced cost of transportation and distribution.

Mr. President, I say the farmers and consumers of farm products would annually save this enormous sum of money, because it is apparent that the consumers of the farm products, as well as the farmer, would share in the benefits of that saving in the cost of transportation from the farm to the railroad station.

What have we done here, Mr. President, during the last two or three years with reference to railroad rates? We have been legislating in season and out of season, with a view of regulating the rates of railroads, the cost of transportation over our railroads. With what purpose? For the purpose of reducing to that extent the cost of distribution in the interest of the ultimate consumer, and for the purpose of reducing the cost of living and the burden on industry. If we can get a small fraction of a dollar per ton off the cost of railroad transportation, to that extent we reduce the cost of living. When the incidental result of legislation will likely eventuate in a saving in freight rates on the necessaries of life to the extent of $300,000,000 per year, which will inure in part to the benefit of the consumers of farm products as well as to the profits of the producers of these products, and work an enormous reduction in the cost of living, I ask is it not a matter of vital public interest which should receive at least persuasive consideration in connection with this scheme of Government aid to rural postal roads?

Mr. President, I started out to take 30 minutes, but I find I have been talking over an hour. There are other phases of this matter I should like to discuss. But because of the parliamentary situation with reference to time, as I can stop here as well as anywhere, in order to save time, and because I am very tired, I will not prolong my remarks further than to express the hope that the motion to strike out the House provision will not prevail.

During the delivery of Mr. SIMMONS's speech,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 25034) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BOURNE. I ask that the Senate continue the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill is up now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

After the conclusion of Mr. SIMMONS's speech,

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I want to voice, in a few words, my hearty approval of this road provision. I favor Federal aid to good roads. There seems to be no doubt in the mind of anyone that it is a constitutional field of operation for the Federal Government, and there seems to be no doubt about the constitutionality of this particular provision. I have long favored Federal aid to good roads, and it has been my purpose ever since I have been here to vote, at the first opportunity, for some measure that would afford Federal aid to good roads; and here we have such a provision in a bill which has passed the House and is before the Senate for adoption. This is the first opportunity I have had during my service in this body to vote for a measure granting Federal aid to good roads. I have learned during my service here that if you favor remedial measures for the relief of the people and can not get all you want, it is a good rule to take what you can get. You had better have half a loaf than no loaf at all, and you had better have a few crumbs of relief than to have no relief at all.

I hear Senators upon this floor say that this is not the measure we ought to have; that it is not sufficient; that it is not proper relief; that it does not go far enough and that it does not amount to anything; but I will take the chance of giving some relief to the people, along remedial lines, when I get that chance rather than wait in the vague and indefinite hope of getting something better, when it appears to me that the prospect of getting something better is very uncertain.

It is said that 62 bills have been introduced in this Congress for the purpose of providing Federal aid to good roads. I myself introduced such a bill in the Senate. The ideas therein were formulated by and a draft of it was presented to me by an association which is organized for the furtherance of road work, and, upon looking into it and finding that it met with my approval, I introduced it, but I have never heard of it since. I do not charge the committee to which it was referred with responsibility for nonaction upon it, because I have not had time, in connection with my other duties here, to formulate the facts and data and procure the information necessary, out of respect to that committee, in order to appear before it and make an argument in favor of the bill, much less to make such an argument before the Senate.

I find that duties here in the closing weeks of the session are so multitudinous and pressing that it is impossible to give attention to everything to which a Senator would like to give attention, and therefore the bill that I introduced is still in the committee, through my inability, I am frank to state, to find time to give it proper attention. I hope to do so later, during the lifetime of this Congress; but here we have a provision which has passed the House of Representatives and is now before this body for action. So I am willing, for the time being, to waive urging the adoption of my road measure and to take that which I have now some prospect of obtaining.

I have learned that one measure put upon its final passage before a legislative body is worth forty measures in committee, and I am going to support the measure which is now before the Senate. I am willing to take this proposition just as it comes to me, to analyze it, and to ask myself the question, Is this in line with the relief that the people are demanding and wanting? Is this in line with benefit to the rural communities of the country? Does this go some distance in the direction that I should like to see the Federal Government go? I am willing to take it upon its merits, and to act upon it, without waiting in the vain and vague hope that some other time some other one of the various 62 road measures now before Congress might possibly bestow greater relief upon the people, if we could ever get to it. If this measure is adopted, I know it will afford some relief to the rural communities of this country, but none of the other road measures pending before Congress will ever afford any relief if we never get to them and never get a chance to vote on them. Therefore I am for the aid which is in sight and not for the aid which is not in sight and may never come in sight. So, Mr. President, I give my hearty support to this measure.

I understand, too—and it affords me a great deal of pleasure to say this in connection with the measure, as an additional reason why I feel an interest in it—I understand the ideas of the good-roads provision in the bill before the Senate originate in and emanate from the grand old State of Missouri, the imperial State of the Union, a State of beautiful scenery, with stately mountains, sparkling streams, blue skies, lovely landscapes, fertile fields, noble rivers, grand forests, and an untold sublimity of natural grandeur; a land fair to behold. It is also the land of happy homes, a brave people—there are none better—and of peerless statesmen.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Has not the Senator left out the "magnificent chasms" which have heretofore been referred to as existing in that State? [Laughter.]

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think they have been sufficiently exploited before the Senate without making any further reference to them, but if there are any there they are noble ones. Missouri is a State of grand and noble people, in the forefront of progress and development of every kind, material and intellectual, a State in the van of the movement for good roads, good education, and every other movement for the betterment and elevation of mankind; the State of my nativity, of which I am and ever shall be proud. I am proud to say I have there many friends whom I highly esteem. I am ever ready to give credit to Missouri. But while this road provision originated with the House representation of Missouri, its benefits will not be confined to that State, but it will spread its manifold blessings over every section of the country, and its beneficent effects will be felt in every rural section that has long been overlooked by the National Legislature in legislating for the needs of the people.

In giving this matter some thought and in paying attention, as I have with pleasure, to the arguments for and against it, I have heard it said that this provision is inefficient; that it would be merely a waste of money; that it would amount to nothing; that it is inconsequential; that it does not go far enough. I utterly fail to see the logic of that reasoning. It does not appeal to me; it is not in accord with my experience and observation.

It is said that $15, $20, or $25 a mile is not sufficient; that it will be money merely wasted; that it will be dribbling away the people's money without any resultant benefit. Mr. President, that is palpably poor argument, according to my view. Take a country road. If there should be one mud hole in that road, and if the road supervisor should hire one man to fill up that mud hole and should pay that one man $1 for his work, is that $1 wasted? The money is not wasted; it is of benefit to the road and of benefit to the people who have to travel the road. It is one dollar's worth of benefit. It is worth $1 to the people who travel that road. Of course it is not worth a thousand dollars, but a thousand dollars has not been expended. It is worth every cent that has been expended on the road, if the work was needed and be judiciously done.

Out in my portion of the country I believe they pay a man with a team and a plow or a scraper about $5 per day for work on the roads. Take a given mile of road and let it need repairs and let the road supervisor put one able-bodied man, with a team and a scraper or a plow, on that road, let him do one day's work on that mile of road and pay him $5 for it, by what sort of reasoning, if the work was needed, if the work was properly done, and if the road was improved, can it be contended that the money was wasted? Of course, it may seem a small matter and may appear wasted to people who are in touch with high finance and in the habit of handling millions of dollars, but the judicious expenditure of $5 goes a long way on the roads of rural communities. If $5 worth of work be needed and $5 be thereat spent, you can see an improvement as a result thereof in a mile of country road, and you can feel the improvement, too, when you ride over that road. Let not the people of big things despise little things. Many are the little things that count much for humanity.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator whether he contends that the expenditure of $5 upon a mile of road in the State of Montana would put that road in perfect condition and maintain it for a year?

Mr. MYERS. No; but it would make the road better than it was before.

Mr. BOURNE. But has the Senator any idea as to what the cost would be per year for the construction and maintenance of the roads in his State?

Mr. MYERS. No, I can not give an accurate estimate; but I may say that to put the average road in Montana in good condition and to keep it in good condition per mile, by the year, would be considerably more than $5, and would be considerably more than $15; but $15 would certainly be a help that the people would appreciate.

Mr. BOURNE. It would be a help just so long as the improvement continued and the road did not wear so that further repairs had to be made, would it not?

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

Mr. BOURNE. Well, how would your road be maintained to come within the classification provided under the House provision which the Senator supports?

Mr. MYERS. By the road districts.

Mr. BOURNE. It would have to be, according to the Senator's contention, in order for the locality to participate in the contribution made by the Government.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; that is my understanding of the bill, and I think, Mr. President, that is one of the greatest arguments in favor of this bill; it is an incentive to good roads; it is an incentive to the people of a district to put their roads in such condition as to receive this aid of $15, $20, or $25 per mile from the Government.

There has been in Montana, as well as all over the country, of late years a very manifest increase of interest in good roads. It is one of the encouraging signs of the times; it is one of the movements for the benefit and uplift of mankind; it is in accord with the progressive ideas and tendencies of this age. This movement is country wide; it is not confined to Montana or to Missouri or to any other State, but it is found all over the country; and while this tendency is most commendable and while its beneficial effects have already been seen I do believe that this provision, this small degree of help afforded to the people, would be an incentive to them and would stimulate that idea of better roads, better homes, better markets, and better modes of life. It would certainly not rebuff or drag it down; it would be a stimulus along the right line and in the right direction, and I think you would see, if this measure were enacted, a very great and quick increase of interest, great as it is already, in the people of the various rural communities of the United States in putting their roads in good condition.

I can see a very great difference in the sentiment of the people of Montana to-day toward roads from what it was 10 or even 5 years ago. Ten years ago the average rural road in my section of Montana was a matter of despair to a man who had to travel over it in a spell of bad weather. The roads were little more than avenues carved out of the country over which you were permitted to travel without artificial obstruction. The obstruction was in the roads themselves. Ten years ago the average country road of Montana received little attention beyond a little plowing and scraping of an indifferent sort. Generally the road supervisor would go out in the fall and plow up the roads so as to be sure to make them muddy and almost impassable for the coming winter.

But to-day the roads are very different. Montana, as a rule, now has excellent roads. To-day in my county there are many miles of rural roads that would immediately, I believe, without any further preparation or work, receive the benefits arising out of this measure—which would immediately be in condition to receive the allowance of fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five dollars per mile.

I know of stretches of road in my county for miles and miles which, I believe, would come up to every requirement of the third class of roads mentioned in this measure, and there is no inconsiderable number of miles of road therein which would come up to the second class; and, with the encouragement offered by this measure, it is not improbable that in some parts of Montana the roads would very speedily, for a considerable number of miles, be made to come under the first class.

I believe that the benefits growing out of the bill that would immediately accrue to some portions of our roads would be a great encouragement to the people of other road districts to put their roads in like condition, so as to get the benefits of this measure. I can not see the force of the reasoning which says the amount allowed is not sufficient to make the roads good entirely without any effort or aid from the people, and therefore it should not be granted to them. I do not want the Federal Government to do all in connection with the roads. The people should do their share, and this bill, if enacted into law, would encourage them to do their share.

I admit that, as regards some of the roads mentioned a few days ago by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], roads that cost $16,000 a mile to construct and $1,000 per mile per annum to keep in repair, the aid afforded by this measure would be only a drop in the bucket. But, Mr. President, alas, there are few communities in this country, I apprehend, that can boast of such roads; few communities, outside of the populous and highly protected sections of New England, that can boast of any such roads. Where there is one mile of such road in this country, I believe there are hundreds, yea, even thousands, of miles in the rural districts that need every particle of work and benefit that can be gotten for them; and while this allowance would not be more than a drop in the bucket to such exceptional roads, it would be a great benefit to the great majority of our roads over which there is rural free delivery of mail.

I admit that if I owed $500 to a millionaire, it would be a matter of no consequence to him whether or not I paid that sum to him. He would probably never know whether it was paid or not. If it were paid, through his business office, he would probably never know it. If it were not paid, he would probably never feel it; but if I owe 50 cents to a poor laboring man it amounts to something to him whether it is paid or not. There are more people in this country who are in the class of the poor laboring man, to whom 50 cents means something, than there are of the millionaire class. There are more roads in this country in a condition where $15 a mile would mean something than there are roads that it would require a thousand dollars per mile per annum to keep in good repair. The aid proposed in this bill, too, is a debt that the Federal Government owes to the people of the several States for the use of their roads for postal purposes. It is not proposed as a gift. Let the Federal Government pay its just debts.

In fact, in my opinion, this measure would be of relief and of benefit to the very class of people in this country who have received for generations past the least benefit, the least aid, from the legislative branch of this Government, and that is the great mass of the plain, common, struggling people. They are the people who support this Government in times of peace and war. They are the backbone, the muscle, and sinew of this country at all stages and times of its career. They pay the taxes. They constitute the bulk of its population. They are the foundation of manufacturing and all other branches of industry in this country. The farmer and the laboring man are the ones upon whom everything rests in this country, and they are the ones who, in my humble judgment, have received the least consideration at the hands of this Government. This bill would be of aid to the small farmer, to the tenant, who has to haul his produce over the country roads, in the bleak cold of winter and through the blistering heat of summer, in order to get his crops to the market that he may obtain money with which to meet his obligations, pay his taxes, and provide his family with raiment and other necessaries of life. Those are the people who would receive benefit from this bill, and while it is not all of the benefit that they ought to receive it is a beginning in the right direction, and if we never make a beginning we will never make a finish. If there is no beginning, there is no progress.

I say let us adopt this provision as it is. Let us make a beginning in the right direction; and if, after the operation of this law for a few years, it is found that the amount is inadequate and that the Government can afford more for the object, then let us raise the amount. I believe in modest beginnings, and I believe in entering upon a new project conservatively. Let us try this, and see if it works as its advocates believe it will, and if it does, then I say let the good work go on.

The rural delivery of mail in this country was undertaken on a very small scale and in a very modest way. I remember only a few years ago when it was started as an experimental matter, and now it spreads out over this country with all its munificent benefits and reaches in its ramifications to every nook and corner of the country. I remember—and it was only about eight or nine years ago—that I drew the first petition for a rural free delivery route for mail in my county, in Montana. It was an experiment. The people did not know if it would be appropriate or fitting to the country, and to conditions there. The petition was granted, and to-day there is rural free delivery of mail in nearly every community, neighborhood, and district of that county. To-day the people all over that section of the country are receiving the benefits of that function of our Government.

Many doubted the wisdom of it in its experimental stages. Now, who is there who would abandon it on account of the cost thereof? In benefits to the people, in disseminating intelligence, in affording convenience, yea, and profits to this country, it has reached proportions where no man would suggest that it ought to be abandoned on account of the cost thereof.

I believe if this measure is adopted this experiment will prove successful, and that in a few years it will be extended and increased to every section of this country, and that the people of the more populous centers, and the cities even, which do not apprehend they will receive any direct benefit from this measure, will see that it redounds so greatly to the benefit of the great masses of the people and the whole of the people of this country that even they would not brook any suggestion for the curtailment or the abandonment thereof, but that they will cheerfully urge the extension of this class of legislation, so that it will attain to proportions of still greater benefit to the whole country, the whole people, and every section of the country.

Something has been said about this bill merely taking money from the people and giving it back to the people; that you are only taking the people's money away from them and giving it back to them. That is true. I do not gainsay that at all; and I believe it is proper when it may be done with profit to the people. That is the object of all taxation. The object of all taxation is to take a reasonable percentage of the people's money and expend it for the benefit of the whole people; and if the people get back their money, and in addition get profits and benefits from the expenditure, then the people have received back what was taken from them and with it blessings in many fold.

I favor this, and I see no objection in the argument that it merely takes the people's money away from them and gives it back to them. That is the kind of taxation in which I believe—taking the money from all the people and giving it back to all the people. The trouble with legislation in this country has been that the money has been taken from all the people for the benefit of a few of the people. The money has been taken from the many and given to the few, through processes of legislation and tariff exaction. That is the class of legislation to which I object. I say, let us return to the Democratic idea of taking the money from all the people, for the benefit of all the people, and giving it back to all the people, with the benefits to all the people which it carries with it. That very argument is, to my mind, an argument in favor of this bill. This is not legislation which takes from all the people by taxation their hard-earned money and donates it to a few of the people in manufacturing industries, in manufacturing centers. I say, let us embark upon this class of legislation which gives back to all the people, with benefits to all the people and to every section of the country and to the whole country, the money which is taken from them by legislation.

It has been said that this proposed law will result in its operation in requiring a few of the rich States, like New York, which has been mentioned, for instance, to contribute more than their proportionate share of the money to the common fund, and will result in their getting back less of it than the average State; that they will contribute more than they get in return.

Mr. President, the people of this country for generations past have been taxing themselves for the benefit of a few rich States in the eastern section of this country, which have received the benefits that all the people have contributed out of their hard-earned money, and the fact that this proposed law will, in a small degree, take from the centers which have been enriched by unjust legislation at the expense of the whole country and all of the people, and give back to the people some of the money that has been unjustly exacted from them, is the greatest and the grandest argument in favor of this bill that could be presented to me. Too long have the few thrived on the many. Too long have millionaire tariff barons waxed rich and haughty through an iniquitous system of robbery under the thin guise of taxation. Let the rich and pampered strongholds of protection in the East disgorge some of their ill-gotten gains for the benefit of the whole people from whom the money was extorted. Let it go on a hundred years and then the people would not have returned to them a tithe of that of which they have been robbed.

When this law shall be put into operation I believe its benefits will be so manifestly felt in every artery of commerce and in every commercial center of this country, as well as in the rural districts, that after it has been fairly tested the people of the whole country will rise up and put upon it the stamp of their appoval and say "We feel the benefit of this wise legislation in every section of this country, in every pursuit of life, and in every artery of commerce, and we are in favor of the continuance thereof."

But mostly and above all, Mr. President, I favor this because it is a tardy undertaking to do something directly for the backward rural communities of this country that up to this time have been wholly overlooked in the legislation of this country, and which have long been hewers of wood and drawers of water for others, and have received no material benefits in return. It is for them that I am chiefly concerned, and it is for their benefit that I ask that this legislation be enacted into law. Do something for the common people, the plain people, the poor people, the farmers and laborers, those who have long borne the heat and burden of the day without receiving any legislative favors or even simple justice. They are demanding it, and if their demands be not heeded they will some day arise in their might and show they are the greatest power in this country when aroused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

Mr. BOURNE. The question is on the motion to strike out the House provision, beginning in line 15, on page 37, and continuing to line 22, on page 39, and substituting the Senate amendment as set forth in line 23, on page 39, and line 1 to line 9, on page 40.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not desire, in the present situation of legislative matters, there being only about nine Senators in their seats, to make a speech, but I do wish to introduce an amendment as a substitute for this section, and in doing so I wish to explain it.

I have always been in favor of State aid to its counties in the matter of building good roads, and of counties to townships and road districts, and I am in favor of Federal aid in constructing and repairing post roads, rural routes, and star routes. Twenty-five years ago, when I was a mere boy, in the Legislature of North Carolina I introduced a bill providing that a great highway should be built through the State north and south and one east and west, with lateral lines. That did not pass, but I did pass a road bill for my county. We had scarcely any good roads. The bill taxed the people 5 cents on a hundred dollars for building roads, and it was very unpopular at first, because the people had not been subjected to taxes for good roads; so much so that a great many said I was politically dead.

But they began to work on the roads with the 5-cent tax and the convicts, and the tax gradually increased from year to year, until to-day we have hundreds of miles of macadamized roads, costing from $2,500 to $3,000 a mile, and the lands along where the macadamized roads run, then selling at from $2.50 to $5 an acre, to-day can not be bought for less than $50 or $100.

The example set by that county has been followed by other counties in the State. Gradually other counties have been doing the same thing, until we have got good roads in our State, and we want more.

I do not like the provision in this bill, because it does not go far enough. It is cumbersome. It proposes to take $750,000 a year to classify, and throw it away, really, and proposes to take $200,000 each year in further classification. It is money thrown away. I think better of the proposition which I submit, to appropriate the sum of $500,000 to each State in this Union, and before the State can get it it must appropriate a similar amount, and before the county can get its share it must appropriate a similar amount, its share, and before the township or road district gets any money it must appropriate its share. What would be the result? Take North Carolina and Virginia, or take Arizona, for example. The Federal Government appropriates $500,000, and before the State can get it it must appropriate $500,000. That gives to each State at once a million dollars. Then the State requires of the county, when it distributes the money, that the county shall pay its appropriate amount, and you have at once two to three million dollars in every State of this Union for good roads, and therefore we could go on building and repairing roads in a systematic manner annually.

As far as concerns the constitutionality of the proposed amendment, I have no doubt, and if we are going to appropriate money for public roads, let us do it through some appropriate method. I therefore introduce this amendment, which I offer and ask to have read by the Secretary.

Mr. BOURNE. As I understand the Senator from North Carolina, he wishes to move the adoption of his amendment as a substitute for the House provision.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is very evident that the House provision is not going to pass. It seems so. If the amendment offered by the committee does pass, and it gets into conference, I offer this amendment as a suggestion, so that if there is a difference between the House and Senate about a plan for working the roads the conferees will have this plan, and even if you can not agree, and strike out all provisions with reference to building roads and adopt the Senate provision appointing a commission, this will be suggestive of a plan which I think is workable.

It is on the same plan as the Morrill educational bill. In other words, it appropriates to the States, and the States build the roads. The Government will have supervision to the extent only that the governor must report to the Secretary of Agriculture and also to the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury each year in order that the Government may see that the money is being judiciously and rightfully spent in the State. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the House provision commencing on page 37 and ending in line 22, on page 39, and insert:

That there shall be, and is hereby, annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid as hereinafter provided, to each State for the building and repairing of good roads for star and rural routes now established, or which may be hereafter established, the sum of $500,000 for the year ending June 30, 1913, and an annual increase of the amount of such appropriation thereafter for 10 years by an additional sum of $25,000 over the preceding year, to be applied only for the building and repairing of good roads for rural and star routes, established or hereafter established: Provided, That no State shall receive any of the benefits of this act unless such State or Territory shall appropriate a sum at least equal to the amount herein appropriated for a similar purpose.

SEC. 2. That the sums hereby appropriated to the States for the support and maintenance of good roads for rural and star routes now established, or hereafter to be established, shall be annually paid on or before the 31st day of July of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the State or Territorial treasurer, or to such officers as shall be designated by the laws of said State to receive the same, and such treasurer shall be required to submit to the governor of each State, and the governor to the Postmaster General and the Secretary of Agriculture, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement of the amount so received and of its disbursements. The grants of moneys authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States to the purpose of said grants: Provided, That payment of such installments of the appropriation herein made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of the legislature of such State meeting next after the passage of this act shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 3. That if any portion of the moneys received by the designated officers of the State for good roads for rural and star routes as provided in this act shall, by any action or contingency, be diminished or lost or be misapplied, it shall be replaced by the State to which it belongs, and until so replaced no subsequent appropriation shall be apportioned or paid to such State, and the governor of each State shall report to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General regarding the condition and progress of the road built or repaired, including statistical information in relation to its receipts and expenditures.

SEC. 4. That on or before the 1st day of July in each year, after the passage of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State whether it is entitled to receive its share of the annual appropriation for good roads for rural and star routes under this act, and the amount which thereupon each is entitled, respectively, to receive. If the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General shall withhold a certificate from any State of its appropriation, the facts and reasons therefor shall be reported to the President, and the amount involved shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the close of the next Congress, in order that the State may, if it should so desire, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Secretary of the Interior. If the next Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury. And the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General are hereby charged with the proper administration of this law.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior shall annually report to Congress the disbursements which have been made in all the States, and also whether the appropriation of any State has been withheld; and if so, the reasons therefor.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time amend, suspend, or repeal any or all of the provisions of this act.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted nor any amendment pertaining to good roads except the provision recommended by the Senate committee providing for a joint committee of three members of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and three members of the House committee.

If we enter upon this policy of Federal aid to good roads no one can tell where it will end. In the first place, the expense of this class of improvement is absolutely unlimited. It is taking over a branch of public activity which has thus far been left to the State. As regards the expense, one of the officials of the Good Roads Bureau has said that to meet the demand of those who are promoting this plan for improvement of the highways of the country would cost the enormous sum of $25,000,000.

Again, we establish a precedent. If an amount is paid for good roads, why not for education? Why not for the construction of hospitals? Why not for the establishment of parks?

I recognize that there is a strong sentiment in the country for Federal aid. But whatever plan we should adopt should be maturely considered and carefully discussed. Let us understand the problem before we enter upon its solution.

Again I wish to call attention to one very striking feature of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina. As I understand it, $500,000 is to be allotted to each State. That is, Texas and Rhode Island would receive exactly the same amount. There would be no distinction between New York and Delaware. Each would be entitled to an equal largess from the Treasury if there was a compliance with these conditions. That, in itself, aside from the danger of prematurely entering upon a new policy, would seem to me sufficient to condemn this amendment.

We can not take up this question of aiding in the construction of roads by treating each Commonwealth as a unit without regard to its size or its population or its probable growth. We are compelled to recognize that there are very manifest inequalities in the area of States and in the number of inhabitants.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has not that been done before in the matter of education?

Mr. BURTON. That rests upon an entirely different basis. Only a partial provision is made for education. The law recognizes the existence of one university or one college in each State. Again, the original appropriation for education was made from the sale of public lands and for the purpose of training in agriculture.

Mr. OVERMAN. But each State got the same amount. It was under the Morrill bill, I believe, where $25,000 was distributed to each State, and then there was an increase for a number of years; and we are doing that very thing now.

Mr. BURTON. There is a propriety in recognizing each State as an entity and as a separate unit in that case which does not prevail at all here. It is recognized that even the smallest State has one university or college which might be entitled to aid.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think this bill is a better one than the House provision. The main reason why I think so is because I think the House provision is about the worst measure I ever read. I want to see the Federal Government help build good roads. One of the constitutional powers of the Federal Government, which it has never exercised, is the power to build post roads. Under the Constitution Congress is granted the power to establish post offices and post roads. Under it we have always, without challenge, exercised the power to build post-office buildings. We have precisely the same power to build post roads. I dwelt upon that the other day a little, citing the authority of John C. Calhoun and some other remarkably strict constructionists.

The Senator from Ohio says if we are going into road building why not into the building of hospitals; why not into education? The reason is plain to a Democrat. The reason is that the Constitution gives us a right to build good roads and does not give us a right in matters of education and hospitals, except in Territories and upon Government reservations and that sort of thing. The Senator might just as well have pursued his absurdum argument—for his object was to make the proposition absurd—by saying, why not the fire department, why not the police, why not a thousand things? The answer is simply because the Federal Government has never been granted power to do these things. So it is not worth while even to discuss that.

Now, so far as this amendment is concerned, I find two great objections to it. The first is that the amount is entirely too large to start off with. If you start off with $23,000,000 right at the jump, without any machinery organized to keep track of it at all, I think you are going too far. I should like to see Congress appropriate about seven millions, and devote one million of it in the North Atlantic States to road building, $1,000,000 to road building in the South Atlantic States, $1,000,000 to the North Central, $1,000,000 to the South Central, $1,000,000 to the north trans-Mississippi between the Rocky Mountains and the river, $1,000,000 to the south trans-Mississippi, and another $1,000,000 to the Pacific slope. My doubt about it is that the appropriation then might be too large.

Mr. BOURNE. As I understand it, the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the House provision provides for a possible maximum appropriation by the Federal Government of $24,000,000, conditional upon $72,000,000 contributed by the State, county, and district.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. BOURNE. While I have not had an opportunity of studying the amendment carefully, it presents more attractive features to my mind and more cooperative features than the House provision.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that I agree absolutely with the Senator from Oregon. I think it is in every way superior to the House provision. My main objection to the House provision is that it appropriates $15 a mile to a road in one case and $20 in another case and $25 in another, and then divides it so that each $15 or $20 or $25 must go to 1 mile, and that amount will not do any good on 1 mile. If you put that $15 and $20 and $25 together, it might do some good and might build some roads. It is the same as if you passed a river and harbor bill and appropriated $40,000,000 for the Mississippi River and its tributaries to expend $200 a mile on each mile of navigable water.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator will permit me, I will say it has occurred to me that the expenditure of the amount of money provided in the bill may absolutely discourage the building of roads, because if it were known that in a certain district they had $15 a mile it would be quite certain that they would use that $15 in patching up a few holes, and there would be no other money expended on that road.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will tell you what the effect would be in my State, where they still have the old system of calling out the people of military age to work the roads. In those places it would have no effect at all. Where they have the contract system the board would very probably say, "Jim, we can give you $15 a mile more than we did last year," and he would get the $15 a mile and you would have the same road, and even if you spent it on the road it would amount to nothing.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe the Senator from Mississippi is mistaken about the provision in this bill, or at least if he is not, I misunderstood him. None of this money is available; in other words, none of it will be paid to anybody, unless the roads have been constructed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. GRONNA. It is hardly fair to assume, as the Senator from Michigan said, that we are appropriating a certain amount of money to patch up a few holes. That is not the provision of the House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator did not understand the Senator from Michigan. He was talking about the provision of the House bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I was talking about the provision in the House bill. As I understand the provision in the House bill it is that in a certain part of the country when they build the roads according to its classification then there is available $15, $20, and $25 a mile to be paid by the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; but all the same it comes back, in fact, to what the Senator from Michigan has said. Notwithstanding these provisions of the House, $15 a mile, for example, will be paid by the Government for a dirt road, and most of the roads are dirt roads. All that is required in the world is that there shall be a ditch on each side and that it shall be thrown up and rounded off 9 feet wide, and the requirement before you pay is that it shall be reasonably passable for wheeled vehicles. There is no road anywhere that is a public road at all that can not draw $15 under the conditions of being reasonably passable for wheeled vehicles. Even the county boards recognize them to be public roads if they answer this description. "Reasonably passable" might mean passable most of the year; it might not mean anything.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In connection with what the Senator has stated I understand it is to be applied to roads already built. If it shall appear to the party in charge that they are in proper condition, then they shall receive this amount of money. There would be an additional sum necessary for the building of the roads, but this sum would be applied to keep the roads in the condition which the bill requires. Its expenditure would not induce the building of any additional good roads. The amount proposed would not induce any attempt at new construction. The object of Federal aid should be to encourage the building of good roads, and therefore it should be applied in an intelligent and proper manner, and the Government should either grant an amount sufficient to build and maintain the roads or else the lesser amount should be granted on condition that the State should appropriate the balance necessary to complete the work.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely. I understand that under the House provision wherever everybody can report and show that a given mile in Connecticut or Mississippi came up to the standard A they would be entitled to $25 a mile, and if it came up to the standard B it would be entitled to $20 a mile, and if it came up to this universal standard C—and any road could come up to that—it would be entitled to draw $15. There is not a mile of road in the United States that would be constructed by it, and, in fact, neither $25 nor $20 nor $15 would construct a mile of road. It would be frittered away.

This amendment is preferable to the House provision, in my opinion, because although it would cost something it would result in something. The House provision is the maximum expense at the minimum of achievement. As far as I can see, $16,000,000 would go out of the Treasury and no particular good would be done to anybody anywhere.

The other objection which I have to this bill is the distribution, and I want to dwell on that point for just a moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. By that plan each State would have nearly $800,000 to begin with, and then it provides an additional sum for 10 years. It is limited to 10 years. At the end of 10 years every State of the Union would have roads all through it and the Government would be contributing this comparatively small amount.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think this opens a new vista much preferable to the other one, because the other one was a blind alley; there was no vista to it. But it must be vastly improved before it is going to do much good. We ought not to appropriate so much.

Now, I come to the question of distribution. Under the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina each State gets a certain amount of money, as it is now, without further amendment—half a million dollars. Delaware would get it; California would get it; Rhode Island would get it; Texas would get it. Such are the extremes upon contrasts with regard to area. That is not all. New York would get it and New Mexico would get it. Pennsylvania would get it and Arizona would get. Such are the extremes upon contrasts as to population under the bill.

I have been thinking about this for a long time, and I have myself introduced several bills, but each bill became unsatisfactory to me in the course of time and I would introduce another. The more I study about it the more I have concluded that the only practicable method of distribution, although in none of my bills have I thus far suggested it, is to appropriate a lump sum. Then take the area of the United States and see how much per square mile that would carry; and then take the square miles of each State in the Union and calculate what the result would be for that State. Then, after we have done that, take the population of each State and find out how much the bill would carry to some unit of population. Then, when you have done that, reduce that to dollars and find out how many dollars, under the population scheme, would go to each State. After you find out how many dollars would go to each State upon the area basis, then find out how much would go to each State on the population basis in dollars and cents, add the dollars and cents together and divide by two. In that way you would get a distribution basis upon population and area which would not be unfair to anybody.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would you propose, then, to give the State an amount of money according to area and population?

Mr. WILLIAMS. According to joint area and population.

Mr. OVERMAN. How would the State get its share of the appropriation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The State could get it upon a showing to the proper Federal authority that it had not only appropriated an equal amount, but that it had built the road. When they show that the road costs, say, $50,000, then, upon a proper certification of that fact, the Federal Government would pay them its proportion. It would pay nothing until the road was built. Let the State, in the first instance, build the road and follow it up for the most part with bonds of some sort. That would merely require that the State should go on interest long enough to build the road. I would have a Federal inspector to go over it, and if it came up to the schedule of road required in the bill, then I would give the State a warrant for its money. If any State misused the money, or did not put it to this purpose, or devoted it to some other purpose, that fact would be known and the next year that particular State should not have any. That is one scheme, but I think the best scheme is to provide that a road shall be built, and when a State or a county have built a road and that fact is made clear to the proper authority, and the road comes up to the proper specification, then and then only have the Federal Government pay 50 or 33⅓ per cent of whatever it is.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator if the plan of my amendment has not been the policy of the Government since 1832 in the matter of distribution of funds for the benefit of the people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is now confusing two things. At one time in our history Henry Clay fathered and his great popularity procured the enactment of a bill to appropriate to the States, according to population, an undivided surplus in the Treasury; and there was first a free good-roads bill. He introduced a bill on that idea because at that time we had so great a surplus that it looked we could not get away with it. He provided that so much out of the surplus should be returned to each State in proportion to its population. That idea of returning a portion in proportion to population was based on the idea that generally they had paid taxes in proportion to population. But when you come to building a road, and the main object is to build roads, you ought to appropriate somewhat in proportion to the need of the road and not altogether in proportion to the number of people.

Take a little State like Rhode Island, and upon a population basis it would get a very large amount of money; yet the roads in Rhode Island are hardly greater in mileage, I suppose, than in Yazoo County, Miss., which joins another large county, Hinds. So it strikes me you have to combine population and the area of it in order to arrive at some approximate adjustment. Of course, if the idea is only to divide the surplus and let it go back to the States, as in Henry Clay's scheme, it would be different. There had been a great surplus accumulated, and they did not want it wasted in Washington. Congress reduced taxes and at the same time passed a bill, under the compromise measures, by means of which we gave back to the States, each in proportion to population, a certain amount of the surplus in the Treasury that we thought was uselessly there and above a safe margin for governmental purposes economically administered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then there was the Morrill bill, which provided so much money of the surplus in each State for schools and experiment stations. They are getting that now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was distributed equally between the States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But that is different. When you come to appropriate money for educational purposes it is right that you should be guided by the per capita idea, because each individual is to share in the education, but when you come to appropriating for roads you have to consider two things, the area, the territory, the mileage within that State, and the population, both.

I should like to see the Senator from North Carolina redraft his amendment, so as to reduce the amount to about $7,000,000 and provide for its distribution in proportion to area and population jointly, and then I should like to see it have another plan about where the money should go divided into about 17 parts and appropriate divisions of the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator was not here when I spoke. I did not have any idea whatever that the amendment would be adopted or that the House provision would be adopted, but that when we went into conference—and I am glad the Senator made the speech, because he has made valuable suggestions along the line—the House conferees would take into consideration the plan suggested by the Senator from Mississippi and myself. If they could not agree upon the plan, then the commission is to be appointed, as recommended, and then the commission will have the Senator's idea and mine as herein expressed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, but a conference committee can not consider anything except matters that are in contest between the two Houses. I suppose, though, that with a matter as broad as the provisions of the House bill and the suggestion made they may consider pretty nearly anything that pertains to roads at all.

Now, one word further, and I shall desist. As to the amount, I said I had no doubt $7,000,000 would be too much to start off with, but there are some things to be said in favor of it as not being too much. It is about half of what a real, good, big Dreadnought would cost after it is equipped and ready for the sea. It does seem to me that we might be able to appropriate half that much to start off with. It must be remembered that when we do it we not only invest the money and get a dividend in money returned as a dividend in greater facilities for education and worship and sociability and everything else, but it must be remembered that under the effect of an amendment like this we would get from twofold to threefold benefits for every dollar invested, because if we invested $1 on the share-and-share plan we would have $2 worth of road for the $1 we invested. With the State one-third, the county one-third, the Nation one-third, we would get $3 for each one that the Government had. So you would have the minimum of expense on the maximum of achievement, whereas under the House provision you have the maximum of expense and a minimum of achievement.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, the question I understand is the substitution of the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina for the House provision on good roads.

I desire to state that I shall vote for that substitution, believing that the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina is an improvement over the House bill; but if the substitute of the Senator from North Carolina prevails I shall then move as a substitute for it the amendment recommended by the committee of the Senate, which is found in italics in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to address myself to that portion of the bill immediately under consideration; but before doing so I wish to send to the Secretary's desk to be read an amendment which I shall offer, on page 21, after line 22, to the text of the House bill, which I hope may be accepted instead of the Senate substitute. I have reference to the blue-tag system. I wish it read now, because it should be printed, although it can only come up for consideration when the bill is in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 22, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That publications admitted to the mails as second-class matter, published biweekly or less frequently, may be carried wholly or partly in fast freight trains whenever deemed practicable by the Postmaster General and at the option of the publishers thereof, and the transportation charges therefor may be paid out of the appropriation for transportation by railroad routes at rates not exceeding the usual freight rates; and on and after January 1, 1913, the rate of postage on such second-class mail matter as may be transported wholly or partly in fast freight trains shall be 1 cent for each pound or fraction of a pound, and the rate of postage on other second-class mail matter, published biweekly or less frequently, transported in the regular mail trains at the option of the publishers thereof and where the transportation of the same wholly or partly in fast freight trains is deemed practicable by the Postmaster General, shall be 2 cents for each pound or fraction of a pound: Provided further, That the Postmaster General is authorized to weigh, whenever practicable, the mails diverted from the freight trains to the regular mail trains and from the regular mail trains to the freight trains for a period of not less than 30 successive working days, and ascertain the average daily weight thereof, and readjust the compensation for the transportation of the mails on the railroad mail routes affected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire that the proposed amendment be printed. We can not consider it, of course, until the bill is in the Senate, the subject already having been disposed of as in Committee of the Whole. My reason for presenting the amendment at the present time is, I repeat, that it may be printed and go into the RECORD, so that it may receive consideration before it is actually reached in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. BOURNE. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me to interrupt him a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. BOURNE. What disposition was made of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has not yet been disposed of, and I am about to address the Senate with reference to the good-roads provision contained in the House bill.

Mr. President, I think there is a serious defect in the House provision with reference to who is to receive the money therein proposed to be appropriated and also with reference to what is to be done with it. There is no direction whatever that the money so received shall be used to make good roads. The officer in charge of the highway is to receive it, but the bill does not provide that he is to receive it in trust and that it must be spent upon the highway under the direction of the duly constituted authorities. There are innumerable overseers throughout the country who have a mile or a mile and a half of road under their authority. As I understand the provision coming from the other House, the officer in charge of the smallest subdivision over a mile would receive the money, and no direction then is given as to its use. The number who might receive the money is too great. The money should be used to improve the roads. To meet that difficulty, I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted at the conclusion of the House provision on this subject. On page 39, line 18, after the words "Postmaster General," I move to insert:

Provided, That no part of funds shall be paid to an officer in any State until the legislative authority of such State shall by law designate the officer or officers to receive it and fix the manner of its use in aid of road improvement, and prescribe safeguards to enforce such use.

I am not suggesting that the general mode of distribution provided for by the other House should be changed; I am only suggesting an amendment which will allow the legislative authorities of the State to name the persons who are to receive the money and to prescribe the way in which the money shall be used in aid of road improvement, and also to provide means to safeguard or to insure that use.

Mr. President, a great many different suggestions have been made about how the National Government can contribute to the improvement of the roads of the country. I believe there is a deep-seated feeling among the majority of the people that the National Government should make some contribution, at least, as a stimulus to road building; and I sympathize with this feeling. Two lines of thought for the use of national aid to roads can be stated: One is upon the line of contributing to the construction of a few great national highways of a very high character, brought to a perfect state of construction; the other upon the line suggested by the House of Representatives, that the contribution shall not be limited to a few great highways, but shall go to a larger number of roads of an inferior character, and which vastly more of the masses of the people use. I would be glad to see great highways built; but I realize that a far greater number of people will be benefited if we can stimulate the improvement of roads known as class C than in any other way.

The description of roads of class C in the bill is as follows:

Class C shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, with ample side ditches, so constructed and crowned as to shed water quickly into the side ditches, continuously kept well compacted and with a firm, smooth surface by dragging or other adequate means, so that it shall be reasonably passable for wheeled vehicles at all times. That whenever the United States shall use any highway of any State, or civil subdivision thereof, which falls within classes A, B, or C, for the purpose of transporting rural or star route mail, compensation for such use shall be made at the rate of $25 per annum per mile for highways of class A, $20 per annum per mile for highways of class B, and $15 per annum per mile for highways of class C.

It has been stated that it would require twenty-two billion—$22,000,000,000—to bring the roads of the Nation up to the standard of class A. Class A, under the bill, is a road composed of shell, brick, or macadam. The mere statement of that proposition produces the unanswerable conclusion that such a system of construction for the roads generally is impossible. Therefore, if we are to limit our contribution to roads that are to be of class A, the contribution will go to a few roads, and the great masses of the people will derive but little benefit from it.

It is perfectly clear that during many generations to come we can not hope that the average road, even that which we class as road C, can be changed to road A—the high-grade macadamized road. Shall we limit our efforts to the very few roads, or is there a way to do a greater public service by turning our attention to a class of road improvement which is possible for the great majority of our roads and that therefore will help the great majority of those who use them? I think it needs no commission to tell us which course we should pursue.

I do not desire the aid of a commission to advise me as to which general policy the National Government shall take up. I commit myself now, without waiting for the report of a commission, to that policy which will seek to improve the great bulk of the roads that may be brought to a reasonable standard of efficiency, which are covered by this bill under class C. We do not need to wait to know something of road construction. The Agricultural Department for several years has been spending large sums of money for this purpose upon the line of inquiry and instruction. Its officials are going out among the people and teaching them how to construct roads of each of these classes as they have never been constructed before. Take class C roads. They are able to teach and they are teaching the managers of the average country road how, with the expenditure of a limited amount of money, vastly to improve their roads. They are teaching the importance of thorough ditching, of thorough surfacing, of thorough draining, of the intermixture at places of different classes of material, consisting often of dirt or sand, and then of dragging the road. These simple lines of attention, scientifically applied, can bring the average country road up to class C and improve its character several hundred per cent, and it can be done with no great outlay of money.

As I understand the scheme of the House bill, the roads that largely will draw from the Treasury are the roads that will be brought to the standard of class C. For any road brought to the standard of class C, used for our rural-route service, the road authorities would receive $15 a year per mile, to be used on the roads where they are brought to the standard prescribed, and, as I have said before, they will draw for roads of class C nearly all of the national contribution.

It has been said that the amount appropriated is not sufficent to build roads of class C. That is not the question; the question is, Will this be a contribution to stimulate the construction of roads of that character all through the country which are worthy of national aid, and will it bring back to the people of this country a full return for the expenditure?

Mr. President, with some national contribution toward these roads, there will be greater attention given to what is taught from the Agricultural Department about how they are to be constructed. If you give nothing but advice, it is frequently not accepted; certainly not as fully as if you not only give advice, but furnish something toward helping to put that advice into practice.

The plan of distribution selected by the House is based upon the use of the roads for the rural routes and the condition of the roads. I am not wedded to a particular plan. I doubt not most men left individually to study the question would suggest separate and diverging plans, but because this would not be perhaps the plan I would select, I am not disposed to decline to support it and wait simply for my own. I think it is clear and intelligible. I think it will be serviceable. I do not think I could support the measure—I certainly would do so with great hesitation—were it not amended so as to give the legislative authorities of the States the right to name the officer who is to receive the money and prescribe the way in which the money is to be used in road improvement. I think the provision as it comes to the Senate is defective in these details; but the principal feature of the provision as it comes from the House is the mode of distribution of the appropriation, and it seems to me about as fair as any that could be devised.

Mr. President, there is great truth in the claim that legislation has naturally turned in directions other than the farm. Most of us live in cities, and we come in contact more with cities than with the country. The farmer as a rule is isolated, and the wants and the real possibilities of serving him along the line of those wants is not as apt to occur to us as they should. I believe this is an opportunity to do something that will bring more return to the people of the entire country than almost anything else we could do, and I believe that it will reach in the direction most neglected.

We have other measures which we are also studying. We have great problems confronting us, which we constantly discuss, upon the subject of the cost of living and the importance of turning more of the people away from the cities into the country. I believe we have pending before us plans of legislation which, if we carry them out, will solve these questions, or greatly help to do so. This is one of them. I believe that we should make provision to carry all the knowledge that has been acquired in our colleges of agriculture and in our experimental stations to the home of the farmer. I believe the vast quantity of accurate information about how to handle the farm, now largely in cold storage, should be taken out and put to service, and that the way to do so is to provide in every State college of agriculture an extension department, which will go to each county in each State, and there, upon the farm, demonstrate the principles, the scientific knowledge, the practical information which experimentation and study have gathered. I believe that we should have in the Agricultural Department the division about which I have spoken—a division of markets—and that information should be there gathered to be furnished the farmer to help bring him closer to the consumer and help teach him better how, diversifying his crops, he may place them in a market where they will bring him a fair return.

I believe that better roads, improved roads, knowledge how to build better roads, the inspiration to construct them, and some help toward building better roads, combined with the other measures to which I have referred, will help bring the results so much to be desired. The fourth important measure is a cheaper mode of transportation from producer to consumer, which, in considerable part, may be accomplished by a properly organized parcel post or express.

These four combined—and they are not impossible undertakings—will do more to solve the problems which confront us than any similar amount of legislation requiring a similar amount of appropriation which, in my opinion, can be adopted.

It is well to urge the young man to go back to the farm or to stay on the farm, but words alone are of little value to bring such results. If we may be able to devise plans to help take away from rural life its isolation, to help give a better chance for industry and intelligence in rural life to bring a just return, to help give a better chance for the man on the farm to furnish his child a good opportunity for preparation for life's burdens and life's joys, if we have intelligence enough to work out these problems and to really do something to improve conditions which now exist, we will make a great contribution to the future of our entire country.

Mr. BOURNE. I desire to send to the desk a request for unanimous consent, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute before he does that?

Mr. BOURNE. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to ask, as I understand that the matter is to go over until Monday, that the amendment which I offered to-day may be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to make the same request for an amendment I now submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The amendments will be printed and lie on the table. The Senator from Oregon asks for the adoption of a unanimous-consent order, which will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That immediately following the routine morning business, on Monday, August 12, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, and shall proceed to dispose of the section and all amendments relating to appropriations for aid to postal routes, speeches upon this section and amendments being limited to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Please report it again. I want to see if it states what day we shall conclude the discussion.

The Secretary again read the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. What is the objection to making that unanimous-consent agreement apply to the entire bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. BOURNE. I would be very glad to have that done.

Mr. REED. It is limited now to one section.

Mr. BOURNE. It is limited simply to the good-roads provision.

Mr. REED. I should like to see it extended. I am not going to object to it in its present form, but I should like to see it extended.

Mr. BOURNE. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would not like see the speeches on any phase of the bill limited to 10 minutes. I am not yet ready to consent to that. I have no objection——

Mr. BOURNE. I should like to have this agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER (to Mr. BRISTOW). You do not object on the good-roads proposition?

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am going to ask that the request for unanimous consent be read again. I ought not to do so, perhaps, but I do not quite understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the request for unanimous consent.

The Secretary again read the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it ought to provide that each Senator should make but one speech. If the Senator is going to limit speeches to 10 minutes, a Senator might talk a half dozen times.

Mr. BOURNE. I should be very glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator, if it is agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Clerk can fix that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the order? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The unanimous-consent agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Monday, August 12, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department, etc., and will first dispose of the paragraphs relating to the subject of Federal aid in the construction of highways and amendments that may be pending or offered to such paragraphs; and that no Senator shall be permitted to speak more than once or for a longer period than 10 minutes on such paragraphs or amendments relating to Federal aid to roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BOURNE. No. That goes over, Mr. President. We pass over all of the good-roads provisions until Monday morning——

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. BOURNE. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, and all amendments thereto, and we proceed with the bill on page 40, line 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty," so as to make the clause read:

For blanks, blank books, printed and engraved matter, binding and carbon paper for the money-order service, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 13, after the word "twine," to insert "and tying devices," so as to make the clause read:

For wrapping twine and tying devices, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 20, before the word "miscellaneous," to strike out "for" and insert "of," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase, exchange, and repair of typewriting machines, envelope-opening machines, computing machines, copying presses, numbering machines, and of miscellaneous articles purchased and furnished directly to the postal service, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 25, before the word "furniture," to strike out "and"; and, in the same line, before the word "repairing," to insert "and map supplies," so as to make the clause read:

Supplies for the Rural Delivery Service, including collection boxes, furniture, satchels, straps, map supplies, repairing satchels, furniture, and map supplies, repairing, erecting, and painting collection boxes in the Rural Delivery Service, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-three million three hundred and seventy-five thousand" and insert "forty-seven million," and on page 43, line 1, after the word "substations," to insert: "Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1912, letter carriers of the Rural Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,100 per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of letter carriers, substitutes for carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of substations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, $47,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations: Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1912, letter carriers of the Rural Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,100 per annum.

Mr. POMERENE. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, page 43, after the words "per annum," it is proposed to insert:

For a route of 24 miles, with an addition of $30 per year for each mile above 24 miles and a reduction of $30 per year for every mile below 24 miles.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, heretofore I understand the Government has paid $1,074 for each one of these routes. The standard length of each route is 24 miles. At the rates provided in the bill the per mileage cost is about $45. I understand also that there are about 47 per cent of these routes which are in excess of the standard route of 24 miles.

Now, it seems to me that it is not quite just to pay one carrier, who may have to go 28 to 30 miles, the same amount that another carrier may get for a route that is 4 or 5 miles under the standard route.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator, of course, does not understand that the carrier who delivers a route that is 4 or 5 miles under the standard receives the same as the carrier who has a standard route?

Mr. POMERENE. As I understand—I am not advised as to what has been the rule heretofore—under the present provision of the bill the amount which will be paid him, namely, $1,100 per annum, is the same for routes of all lengths.

Mr. ROOT. "Not exceeding $1,100 per annum."

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no. There is a regulation in the department that defines the compensation for the routes under 24 miles, 24 miles being the standard length. The language used in this appropriation is the same as in other appropriations, except the amount here is $1,100 instead of $1,000. There is a deduction for the shorter routes, just the same as there always has been. This does not in any way disturb that regulation.

Now, if the Senator will permit me, 24 miles is the standard route. Some of the routes are longer; that is, where the roads are smooth and easily traveled the department feels itself justified in extending the route when it is necessary to reach a larger number of citizens or patrons.

In some sections of our country, as the Senator knows, a carrier may be able to travel 27, 28, or 29, or probably 30 miles just as easily as in some other sections of the country he would be able to travel 24 miles. So that this latitude of discretion is necessary with the department in order that it may adjust the service equitably.

I know in my own State some routes 30 miles long that impose no greater labor on the carrier than some routes 24 miles long.

Mr. POMERENE. What deduction is made for mileage under the standard route?

Mr. BRISTOW. The exact amount I do not remember, but it is approximately $30. It may be a little more or a little less. There is a certain amount which is allowed for equipment, and so forth, and the shortest route, as I remember, is about 8 or 9 miles, and a deduction is made. It is graduated from 24 miles down. Just the exact number of dollars taken off for each mile I do not remember now.

Mr. POMERENE. The statement which the Senator has made recognizes the correctness of the principle involved in my amendment and indicates that the reduction is approximately $30 per mile for routes actually under the standard of 24 miles.

It seems to me that under all the circumstances, then, this amendment would be advisable. If there is a reduction of $30 a mile or thereabouts for any distance below 24 miles, it seems to me there ought to be an addition on every route above the standard length of 24 miles, and for that reason I suggest the amendment.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think it is safer to fix this maximum, leaving it to the regulations of the department to make allowance for the carriers who have longer, and to deduct from the carriers who have shorter, routes. I think we would probably compel injustice in many cases if we undertook to fix a hard-and-fast rule, because the amount of labor involved is dependent not only upon the length of the route, but, as the Senator from Kansas has suggested, upon the character of the road which the carrier has to go over, and also upon the number of mail boxes at which the carrier has to stop to open and put the mail into. A carrier might be able to go several miles where there were but few boxes in the same time and with less labor than he could half a mile where there were many boxes.

The adjustment of compensation under this maximum limit that we fix must necessarily be dependent upon circumstances which we can not here take into consideration. Therefore I think the bill as it stands is better.

Mr. GRONNA. I would like to have the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 4, after the words "per annum," insert:

For a route of 24 miles, with an addition of $30 per year for each mile above 24 miles and a reduction of $30 per year for every mile below 24 miles.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be adopted. Every man must know that on a rural route which is more than 24 miles in length it requires more time to deliver the mail than it does over a shorter one.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota if that does not depend a great deal upon the general contour of the country and the condition of the roads? If it is a smooth, level road in a flat, level country, can not the carrier make 27 or 28 miles more easily than he could make 24 miles in a hilly country where the roads were rough and up and down hill?

Mr. GRONNA. That may be true during certain seasons of the year, but it is not true, we will say, during the winter months. Take it on the western prairies. Whenever we have heavy snows it takes more time to travel a mile in the snowdrifts and it takes greater effort for the carrier to deliver the mail 1 mile than it does to deliver it 10 miles when the roads are good, and it is absolutely unfair to a new country——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GRONNA. Let me finish this statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. It is absolutely unfair to every new section of our country, and it is a discrimination against a new country to say that there shall be no more salary allowed to a carrier who has to travel 30 to 35 miles, which they often do in my State, than to one who travels 24 miles. In many instances the routes are 33 miles. I say it is wrong to compel that carrier to travel every day over a route 33 miles in length and receive no more pay than the carrier who travels only 24 miles.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator from North Dakota. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas a question, because of his familiarity with postal matters. I will ask the Senator does the department take into account at all the difference in the character of the roads on different routes?

Mr. BRISTOW. It does, in extending beyond the 24 miles. The 24 miles is the standard route for the ordinary and average road that a rural carrier has to travel. If the road is smooth and the population is sparce, then the department will extend it beyond the 24 miles, in order to get the route, if the extension does not impose hardship upon the carrier. That is the practice of the department now, and has been since the rural delivery system was established.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just one word, if the Senator from North Dakota will permit me.

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I sympathize with the Senator's suggestion with respect to the character of the roads in his section of the country, and they apply with equal or more force to my own part of the country where we not only have snowdrifts, but bad hills and rough roads; and it has seemed to me that there might well be by regulation some recognition of that fact.

Again, I will ask the Senator from Kansas this question, if the Senator from North Dakota will permit me.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it a fact that in some sections of the country the routes are longer than 32 or 33 miles?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, yes. We have a few 35 miles long. Some of them in western Kansas.

Mr. GALLINGER. Getting the same compensation?

Mr. BRISTOW. The same compensation, and the work is no harder on the 35-mile routes in some parts of the State which I represent than in other sections of the State on the 24-mile routes, and there is nothing inequitable about it. There is this great advantage. In establishing a standard route it is desirable to serve a certain population. The former requirement was 100 families.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, in the sparsely settled regions of the country—for instance, North Dakota and western Kansas and other parts—unless the department have an opportunity of extending a route beyond 24 miles, they can not get a sufficient number of families, and many routes are now established in that section of the country which would not be if the department did not have that latitude.

I want to assure the Senator that I have no purpose in the world, except to benefit the service as much as I can, and I know that to make this rigid requirement here would be an injury to the Rural Service.

Again the Senator speaks——

Mr. GRONNA. That may be the opinion of the Senator from Kansas, but it is not my opinion at all. I think I know something about the service on rural routes and what the rural carrier has to do.

It is true, as the Senator from Kansas has said, that there are many routes in new countries, in countries where the people own large farms, where it is difficult to get the required number of families in order to establish a rural route, and for that reason you have to go over a great distance, but to say that it is no hardship or that the rural carrier does not have to exert any more effort to travel 30 miles or 35 miles than 24 miles is logic that I can not understand.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like my friend from North Dakota to travel 25 miles in Virginia over some rural route there and then go over a route in North Dakota and travel 30 miles and tell me which route is the harder.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have the Senator from Kansas travel 24 miles in the western country when the thermometer registers 30° below zero, and then tell me what he thinks of the trip and if he would not prefer to travel over the route in Virginia.

Mr. BRISTOW. In reply to the Senator I will say that I have traveled the prairie roads when snow was blowing, and I think I have had a good deal of experience in those regions. I have also driven over rural routes in the State of Texas where the sand is almost as deep as the snow has been in the North. When you undertake to adjust compensation and make it apply to every section of the country on an exact equity it is a physical impossibility. I would rather travel through the snows of North Dakota in the wintertime than through the sands of Texas in the summertime.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator from Kansas. Luckily, we have no sand in North Dakota; that is, we have none to spare. But I do not speak simply from a personal experience. I have received hundreds of letters from rural carriers protesting against this adjustment or against the provision.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; when I finish my statement. I say I have received a great many letters from the rural carriers where their attention has been called to this particular provision. Of course there are hundreds and thousands of them who do not know there is such a provision in the bill, but those whose attention have been called to this particular provision protest against it. I assert here that you will find 99 per cent of the rural carriers who will protest against this provision.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator now?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. BOURNE. Will they protest against an increase of 10 per cent in their compensation?

Mr. GRONNA. I realize what that increase is. I am not referring to the increase. I am referring to compelling the rural carrier to travel a 33-mile route for the same pay that the carrier receives who travels on a 24-mile route.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will permit me, the provision in this section of the bill where the amendment is offered by the Senator from Ohio does not change the conditions now existing in any way, shape, or form except to provide an increase of 10 per cent in the present compensation of the rural carrier. Certainly he does not object to that.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio provides for the payment of a specified sum per mile for each and every mile above the standard route. If that is not so, then I am mistaken.

Mr. BOURNE. That is true of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, but I was going to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he withdraw his amendment and wait until we can come to the consideration of section 9 of the bill. On the information print, page 84, on pages 62 and 63 of the bill, he will find where the House provided for a compensation somewhat different from what the Senator from Ohio has suggested; but the Senate committee believed it was more equitable and just and advisable and administrative to strike it out and make this increase in the compensation so that it would be general in its application. Under the House provision there would be 4 per cent of the rural carriers who would receive no additional compensation whatever.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall support the provision for an increase to the rural carriers. I certainly have no objection to that. Every rural carrier in this country ought to be paid $100 per month.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand the Senate committee amendment, it fixes a maximum. Below that, I suppose, it is left to the department to grade the payment. In other words, the Senate committee amendment accomplishes exactly what the Senator from North Dakota desires, because if that amendment is adopted it provides an increase for all carriers pro rata, while under the House provision there is no pro rata increase. Under the Senate committee amendment there will be a pro rata increase based on mileage, the maximum being $1,100 a year.

Mr. GRONNA. To be adjusted by whom?

Mr. BOURNE. To be adjusted as they have been adjusted heretofore.

Mr. FLETCHER. By regulations of the department.

Mr. GRONNA. That is the provision I object to. I would rather have it more specific. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio states in plain terms what these letter carriers are entitled to receive. We have never opposed any amendment or any provision for a reasonable pay for city carriers. The rural carrier does not receive any more pay than does the city carrier, although he has to furnish his own team, his wagons, and his equipment. It costs something for the maintenance of this equipment. When you make an allowance for the investment that must necessarily be made by the rural carriers, the pay is absolutely insufficient.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will permit me just in this connection, I should like to say that the point the Senator is making is in favor of the 10 per cent increase, as will be shown by a table here which has been prepared, if the Senator will allow me to read it to him. It is not on the line of the proposed amendment of the Senator from Ohio, because I was not cognizant of what his amendment was, but it is on the line of the provision in the House bill, section 9. It is that the sum of $1,074 per annum shall be paid on the standard route, 24 miles in length; on routes exceeding 24 miles in length the sum of $44.75 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of the 24 miles, and on routes under 24 miles in length a corresponding reduction per mile per annum shall be made.

If the Senator will pardon me just a moment further; the carrier on the short route has to have his vehicle the same as the carrier on a long route, and his overhead charge is the same, regardless of distance traveled. Under the present plan a carrier on a route of 6 miles would receive $440; under the House provision, which I have just indicated, he would receive $440; but under the proposed Senate amendment of a 10 per cent increase to the carrier he would get $484, or $44 in addition to what is provided either by the House or in the present law.

For a route of 16 miles, under the present plan, the carrier receives $700. Under section 9 of the bill, as passed by the House, he would receive $716. But under the proposed Senate committee amendment, with the 10 per cent increase in compensation allowed by the existing law, he would receive $770, or an increase of over $70 more than he receives to-day, or $54 more than under the House provision.

I think, under the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio, the carrier would not receive as much as he would under section 9 of the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I would like to call attention to that provision of the House bill, but I understand there was an amendment reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate providing that the standard route should be 24 miles, and that no allowance would be made to any rural carrier for any distance traveled more than 24 miles.

Mr. BOURNE. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that the bill, as passed by the House, in section 9 provides that the standard shall be 24 miles; that on a 24-mile standard the carrier shall receive $1,074 per annum; that on routes exceeding 24 miles in length $44.75 per mile would be added; and on routes less than 24 miles that that amount would be deducted.

In the consideration of the bill the Senate committee believed that it is more equitable and better for the service and more equitable and fairer to the carriers themselves, to increase the compensation now received—on the basis of 24 miles from $1,000 to $1,100, which would be a 10 per cent increase to every carrier—and apply it to each one under the adjustment as now made by the department under the existing law.

I have tried to show here in the tables which I have read that the shorter routes would be a great deal more benefited by the adoption of the 10 per cent increase than they would, I assume, by the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. I can not speak, however, authoritatively on that because I have not worked it out, but I can say authoritatively that the carriers would be better benefited by the adoption of the proposed 10 per cent increase recommended by the Senate committee than by the enactment of section 9 of the bill as it comes from the House.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have said that I favor the provision offered by the Senate committee, so far as it goes to increase the compensation, but I believe it is only fair to the rural carrier who travels more than 24 miles, especially when he has to travel as far as 30 or 35 miles, that there should be some additional compensation.

I agree with the Senator from Oregon absolutely that it is a wise provision to increase the pay of all these carriers. They are not receiving any too much. In my opinion they are not receiving enough, but I believe that the Senator from Oregon, having the bill in charge, should make another provision allowing something additional to carriers who have to travel more than 24 miles.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I think the Senator from North Dakota is mistaken. He does not appreciate the fact that there is an allowance now for an excess of mileage over 24. There is such an allowance under the regulations of the department. I am very much in favor of this amendment, only I am going to propose, in line 4, on page 43, that the word "one" be stricken out and the word "two" inserted, making the pay $1,200 a year.

These rural carriers render very valuable service to the people of the country. They supply their own horses and vehicles and travel in all weather. I think $1,200 a year, considering the feed of their horses and the wear and tear of their vehicles, is very poor compensation for them.

I move to strike out the word "one," in line 4, and insert "two," so as to read "$1,200" instead of "$1,100."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before voting on the question, I want to ask some Senator—and I am sure the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] will give me satisfactory information—to what extent are these carriers now allowed to make a little excess of compensation? At one time they were permitted, as I recall it, to take subscriptions for newspapers, and they made quite a little money in that way, but I think they are forbidden to do it now. I think they are permitted to carry small packages, are they not?

Mr. BRISTOW. The package business was shut off by an executive order; but I think a year or two ago, where it did not interfere with their business, the department relinquished to some extent that provision and permitted them to take packages.

I do not think they earn much in that way. The purpose of the department was to shut off that source of income altogether and pay them what their services were worth.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know just what was the regulation.

Mr. BRISTOW. It led to their soliciting orders for one local merchant against another and getting subscriptions for one newspaper as against another, and there was a good deal of complaint.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is practically cut off?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; I think it ought all to be cut off.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understand it, when the carriers came under the civil service a year or two ago we cut off absolutely all opportunity for them to earn anything outside of their salaries.

Mr. BRISTOW. That was the intention. It was done, but I understand that there have been a few exceptions made. I do not think any exception should be made, because it will certainly lead to abuse. Formerly it was a very grave abuse, because carriers became the agents for certain commercial houses and for certain newspapers and discriminated in favor of newspapers or stores from which they got a commission for sales made and delivered.

In my opinion the only way to protect the service from the abuse is to make an absolute prohibition, the same as we have against city carriers.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. His connection with the Post Office Department enables him to give certain information about these matters which the rest of us do not possess. I should like to inquire whether if the Senate committee provision fixing the salary at $1,100 is adopted the regulations with respect to the adjustment and apportionment of the salary would not continue just as now?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. We would simply, of course, leave it to the department to adjust the compensation the carriers would receive according to the routes, as is done now.

Mr. BRISTOW. The only change is increasing the compensation of a carrier for the standard route from $1,000 to $1,100, and there will be the same proportionate increase for every carrier in the service.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is all the Senate amendment does?

Mr. BRISTOW. That is all it does.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the House provision——

Mr. BRISTOW. Readjusts the scale of compensation, and I think is not nearly so desirable as the present adjustment made by the department as the result of 15 years' experience.

Mr. SIMMONS. I agree entirely with the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. After conferring with several Senators, it occurs to me that my amendment probably should be offered later to section 9, and for that reason I will temporarily withdraw it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Then, I ask that my amendment be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BOURNE. Before that is put I should like to have the Members of the Senate know exactly what it means. The adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama means an increase of the appropriation and an added expense to the Government of $3,625,000. The Committee on Post Offices of the Senate, believing that the rural carriers are underpaid and are entitled to greater compensation than they now receive, recommended in this amendment and in the appropriation as suggested an increase of 10 per cent, amounting to $3,625,000. The adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama would mean an increase of 20 per cent in their compensation and an additional necessitated appropriation of $3,625,000 in addition to the $3,625,000 that the Senate committee have recommended over and above what the rural carriers are now receiving.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what the increase is to the carriers in the total amount of the appropriation?

Mr. BOURNE. It depends on the carrier's route. He has 10 per cent increase of compensation over what he receives to-day.

Mr. CLAPP. That is an average of about $100 a year.

Mr. BOURNE. It would be $100 on a 24-mile standard route.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, notwithstanding the increased appropriation, I do not think that is enough. I believe that would leave the average rural-route carrier still underpaid—and it is a matter to which I have given some little study—as to the field part of the work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] to the amendment of the committee, to strike out "one" and insert "two" at the place indicated.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask to have the amendment to the amendment again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	McCumber	Simmons
Bacon	Cummins	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Bailey	Curtis	Massey	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Dillingham	Nelson	Smoot
Bourne	Fall	Overman	Sutherland
Bradley	Fletcher	Page	Swanson
Bristow	Gallinger	Perkins	Thornton
Burnham	Gronna	Pomerene	Townsend
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Reed	Wetmore
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Root
Crawford	Kenyon	Sanders
Culberson	Lodge	Shively

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the necessary absence, on public business, of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is not present.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The Secretary called the list of absent Senators, and Mr. MYERS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is manifest that we can not obtain a voting quorum to-day. So I hope that no Senator will demand the yeas and nays; but that if we have a controverted question, he will let it go over so that we may make some progress with the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, with that understanding, I desire to withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays, and ask that the amendment to the amendment go over until Monday.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope that will not be done. I believe we can decide this question this afternoon.

Mr. LODGE. It is impossible to get a vote on it this afternoon.

Mr. GRONNA. We can vote on it without having a roll call.

Mr. LODGE. By insisting upon a roll call the Senate will be forced to adjourn.

Mr. SIMMONS. If it will meet the views of the Senator from North Dakota, I will withdraw the request for the yeas and nays, and simply ask for a division.

Mr. GALLINGER. That will do the same thing.

Mr. SMOOT. The result will be the same.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well, Mr. President, I withdraw the request, under the conditions stated.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I ask what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] to the amendment of the committee to strike out the word "one" and insert "two," so as to change the salary from $1,100 to $1,200.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask that the amendment be again stated at the desk?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment, and read the context as it will stand if so amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 4, before the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out "one" and insert "two," so as to read:

Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1912, letter carriers of the Rural Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,200 per annum.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, that does not fix the salary of rural carriers at $1,200 a year; it simply provides that rural carriers shall receive not to exceed $1,200 per annum. I sincerely hope that the Senator from Alabama will redraft his amendment so as to make it conform to the provisions of the bill as it came from the House, fixing the salary of a rural carrier on a standard route at $1,200 per year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if my colleague will allow me, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the minimum amount now paid for rural delivery service?

Mr. BOURNE. According to the report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, the minimum amount now paid is $440.

Mr. McCUMBER. For how many miles?

Mr. BOURNE. That is for over 6 miles and less than 8 miles.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words, but I will wait until my colleague has concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about this matter. When the Post Office appropriation bill was before the Senate in 1910 I then offered an amendment, which reads as follows:

That on and after July 1, 1910, all rural carriers now serving daily routes of 24 miles or more shall receive as compensation for such service $1,200 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments; those serving daily routes of less than 24 miles shall receive as compensation such proportion of $1,200 as the miles of the route served by them bear to 24 miles: Provided, That fractions of 1 mile shall not be considered in fixing such salary: And provided further, That no compensation shall be less than $600.

Mr. President, if I have an opportunity to do so, I purpose to offer that as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. My reason for doing so can be explained very briefly.

When one compares the amount that is paid rural carriers with that paid city delivery carriers, which, in most instances, now will run up to $1,200 per annum, and the hours of service, which, under this bill, are fixed for city carriers at not more than eight hours per day, and when one takes into consideration the expenses incumbent upon the rural carriers, he can not help seeing that there is a gross disparity between the amount paid to the city delivery carriers and the amount paid to the rural delivery carriers. That disparity can not be considered as being in any way overcome by what we generally understand to be the higher expenses of living within great cities than in the sections of country where rural delivery is carried on.

Mr. BOURNE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. BOURNE. According to the statement of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, under whose jurisdiction the rural carriers come, the average time taken by the forty-two thousand three hundred and odd rural carriers now in the employment of the Government is under six hours per day.

Mr. McCUMBER. That means from the time they begin driving until they end driving.

Mr. BOURNE. It is nearer five hours than six hours.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the time actually expended on the route. That does not include the time expended in preparing the vehicle, the time expended in caring for the animals that are used both in the morning and the evening, and so forth, but only the actual traveling time on the road. Now, all of these items, to be fair, must necessarily be added. The rural carrier must take care of his vehicle. He must take care of his horses or hire somebody else to take care of them, and it requires a certain amount of time for that purpose.

Mr. BOURNE. I will say to the Senator that I have every disposition to be fair, but I want to call to the Senator's attention the fact that prior to July, 1911, the maximum salary of the rural carrier was $900. The appropriation for the year ended July 1, 1912, raised the compensation to a thousand dollars. Now, this bill under the same amendment proposes to raise it another hundred dollars, making it $1,100.

Mr. McCUMBER. The only point is that I should like to have it raised another hundred.

We have the maximum amount, and the amendment which I propose reduces that amount wherever the service is less than 24 miles, but makes the minimum $600 instead of $440, the amount that is paid.

Mr. BOURNE. All the appropriations I have enumerated for the years I have stated are on the basis of a maximum or standard route of 24 miles.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. The question I want to ask, with the permission of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], is this: In the law last year we provided an increase in salaries to not to exceed $1,000. Now, is the Senator able to give us any information as to what proportion of the carriers get the thousand dollars?

Mr. BOURNE. I can not give the Senator that information.

Mr. NELSON. Do all who do 24 miles get it?

Mr. BOURNE. Yes; all who do 24 miles receive a thousand dollars, undoubtedly. It is the law.

I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that the amendment suggested by the Senate committee would make a minimum of $484 instead of $600, as he suggests in his proposed amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

I know the Senator from Oregon wants to be perfectly fair, and I desire him to do a little computation in his own mind. I do not need to furnish the figures. But I am quite certain that he is desirous that those who bear the hardships of a delivery in the country, especially in the Northern States, where they must go through all kinds of weather, where they must go whether it is raining or in the mud or in the coldest days of winter, should be treated just as well for a given amount of service as those who deliver in the cities.

Mr. BOURNE. Unquestionably.

Mr. McCUMBER. Unquestionably, says the Senator.

Now, let us see if they are. You make a proper allowance for what a man would have to pay for rent who is in the business of delivering in the city here. I will assume that it is somewhat higher than one would have to pay in the smaller country towns or the places from which the rural carrier starts. We will assume that the city deliverer must necessarily expend more for that particular item. What other expense has he connected with his delivery service? Is there anything that is at all material? His sack wherein to carry the mail is furnished to him by the Government. Everything is furnished by the Government. He is allowed, I understand, transportation upon street cars to the place where he begins his delivery.

Mr. BOURNE. That depends somewhat upon the distance he goes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Possibly it does.

Now, I want to balance that with the expense which must be paid by the rural carrier. We will suppose the rent is even double in the city and that must be made up. You have to take the rent of a stable. He has to keep about four horses to drive 24 miles day in and day out, year in and year out. There is no single team on the face of the earth that will stand 24 miles of driving over all kinds of roads and in all kinds of weather and live through it two years. So experience has demonstrated that it is necessary for him to own or to keep from three to four horses for that delivery. He must make this distance, and he must have his money invested in four horses, on the average, for the full delivery of 24 miles.

On the average one of those horses will die within a period of four years, taking into consideration the work and the average working life of a horse. The carrier must supply a new horse, then, about once in every four years. Then his vehicle will last him possibly a year or two without much repair. But he must make whatever repairs are necessary, and he must, in the first instance, buy the vehicle. Then he must purchase hay; he must purchase oats for those four horses; he must take care of them. For his time in doing that we will charge nothing, however. But we must make our allowance for hay, for oats, for harness, for insurance, for taxes, and all those things which make up the expense; and at the end of the year the net profit of your city deliverer is more than double and probably three times as much as that of the rural deliverer.

Now, we ought to do justice to these men. We ought to treat them all alike, as nearly as it is possible for us to do, and I certainly believe, and I think the Senator will agree with me, that, having to purchase all of this equipment and to maintain it during the year, and to purchase horses as rapidly as one of them fails in efficiency, the rural carrier ought to have at least $1,200 a year, or $100 a month, for the highest service.

The carrier on the shorter route must have at least two horses, and the same number of vehicles that the man who carries the 24 miles has, even if he has only 6 miles to carry. He can not avoid some of those expenses, and after he has kept two horses one year and paid for hay and oats and rental of the farm I should like to ask the Senator, even in a small country place, how much there is left for the salary of the driver himself? Certainly a very meager amount.

For that reason I believe that $600 ought to be the minimum, and with the $1,200 the maximum amount we will at least approximate doing justice in the treatment between the two classes of public servants, and I am going, at the proper time, to ask for a vote upon this amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he has made an estimate as to the increased expenditures by raising the minimum to $600? By raising the maximum it increases the appropriation between six and seven million dollars.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator any figures to show what this increase in the minimum would require?

Mr. McCUMBER. I had two years ago, and perhaps I can get the figures, and probably will do so before I get through the debate, showing just what this cost will be. But I might ask, on the other hand, if the Senator has considered what the extra cost was when we raised the salary of the city deliverers to $1,200 a year. That was a very material matter, too, and I do not know, if we are to consider carefully what the additional cost is in one instance, that we ought not, with the same care, to investigate what the additional cost was in the other case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course each case must stand on its own merits. I was simply seeking information.

There is this to be said. I have some knowledge on this matter. A man who has two horses on a 6-mile route—sometimes he must have two, but frequently only one—is engaged only three or four hours in the day.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the time of his service is such, both in the forenoon and in the afternoon, delivering mail and gathering the mail again that he will practically have no time for other service.

Mr. GALLINGER. He gathers the mail as he goes along.

Mr. BRISTOW. The rural carrier makes only one trip a day. He gathers the mail while delivering the incoming mail.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and ordinarily they have other employments. They turn their horses in and they themselves engage in other employments when they get through this particular service for the Government, and they thereby earn quite a bit, both on account of their own labor and that of their horses.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator will find very few cases where they earn anything in outside work.

I do not care about pressing the matter now, if it is to go over——

Mr. GALLINGER. It is going over.

Mr. McCUMBER. If it is the general idea that we should pass this item and go on with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the matter go over until Monday. It is manifest we will not have a voting quorum this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that this item may go over until Monday. Without objection it will be so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, in section 2, page 44, after line 3, to strike out:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, association, or corporation to enter or deposit or to have entered or deposited into the mails of the United States as second-class mail matter any newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication of like kind published in the United States, unless such publication shall have plainly printed in a conspicuous place therein the name or names of the managing editor or managing editors, the name or names of the publisher or publishers, and the name or names of the owner or owners, including the name or names of the owner or owners of stock, bonds, or other securities, to the amount of $550 or more, which have been issued or sold by the said person, association, or corporation, owning or controlling such publication, and which may be outstanding: Provided, That in the case of newspapers published daily, or daily except Sunday, it shall be sufficient to publish said names once each week on the same day each week; also all editorial or other reading matter published in any such circulating periodical for which money or other consideration is accepted by the publisher or publishers shall be plainly marked "advertisement" or be signed by name or names of the person or persons in whose interest or interests such article is published. Any person, association, or corporation that shall so enter or deposit or have entered or deposited in the mails of the United States any such newspaper, magazine, or periodical publication of like kind in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined in any sum not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 for each offense: Provided, That nothing in this paragraph contained shall apply to or include periodical publications published by or under the auspices of fraternal or benevolent societies or orders or trades-unions.

And insert:

That it shall be the duty of the editor, publisher, business manager, or owner of every newspaper, magazine, periodical, or other publication to file with the Postmaster General and the postmaster at the office at which said publication is entered, not later than the 1st day of April and the 1st day of October of each year, a sworn statement setting forth the names and post-office addresses of the editors, publishers, business managers, and owners, and, in addition, the stockholders, if the publication be owned by a corporation, and also the names of bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders: Provided, That it shall not be necessary to include in such statement the names of persons owning less than 1 per cent of the total amount of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other securities. A copy of such sworn statement shall be published in the second issue of such newspaper, magazine, or other publication printed next after the filing of such statement. Any such publication shall be denied the privileges of the mail upon failure to comply with any provision of this paragraph.

That all editorial or other reading matter published in any such newspaper, magazine, or periodical for the publication of which money or other consideration is paid, accepted, or promised shall be plainly marked "advertisement" or "advt." Any editor or publisher printing editorial or other reading matter for which compensation is paid, accepted, or promised without so marking the same shall upon conviction in any court having jurisdiction be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500.

Mr. REED. I wish the chairman of the committee would tell us in a few words the difference between this amendment and the House provision.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, as to the recommendation of the committee, as represented in the italicized portion of the bill, it was believed that the committee amendment made the publicity feature that the House provision endeavored to secure more practical and more easily administered. The same end is attained, in the opinion of the chairman, by the committee amendment that was attempted to be attained in the House provision. The gentleman offering the House provision appeared before the Senate committee for a hearing at his request, and after going over the Senate committee substitute, I think I am justified in stating he was fully satisfied that the Senate committee substitute reaches the main purpose endeavored to be attained by him in the Barnhart bill.

Mr. REED. If I understand the amendment proposed, it requires a publication only once a year.

Mr. BOURNE. Twice a year, under the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. In April and October.

Mr. BOURNE. A perusal of the same will show the Senator from Missouri that—

It shall be the duty of the editor, publisher, business manager, or owner of every newspaper, magazine, periodical, or other publication to file with the Postmaster General and the postmaster at the office at which said publication is entered, not later than the 1st day of April and the 1st day of October of each year, a sworn statement setting forth the names and post-office addresses of the editors, publishers, business managers, and owners, and, in addition, the stockholders, if the publication be owned by a corporation; and also the names of bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders: Provided, That it shall not be necessary to include in such statement the names of persons owning less than 1 per cent of the total amount of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other securities.

In the House provision the limit was $550 ownership. The Senate committee suggested 1 per cent. The desire is, as I understand it, and as I believe advisedly, to show accountability of the owner of the paper to the individual so that the public may know to whom the paper is in any way obligated or may have a bias. I think the recommendation of the Senate committee provides for that in a more practical way than is suggested in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. REED. I thank the chairman of the committee. One further question. I have read this provision somewhat hastily. I did not observe any provision for notice to a newspaper in the event of its failure to file it in the time allowed by law.

Mr. BOURNE. I do not exactly understand the Senator's statement.

Mr. REED. I say that I have looked at the provision very hastily and may have overlooked something, but as I read it the provision is absolute, that upon failure to comply with the terms of this bill a newspaper or periodical shall be denied the use of the mails, and there is no provision for notice before their rights are forfeited. That is the way I have read it. I may have overlooked something.

Mr. CLAPP. Is there any such provision in the House bill?

Mr. REED. I think not.

Mr. President, I am heartily in accord with the provisions of the bill, and in view of the explanation made by the chairman, I am rather inclined to think that the provisions as reported by the Senate committee are as good as the provisions of the House. But while I believe in the rigid enforcement of this measure, I am always opposed to advantage being taken of a mere oversight by anyone. The Post Office Department has some times in the past made rulings which appeared to me to be exceedingly severe. I will not use a harsher term.

I think that in the provision as it is printed it might well happen that the publisher of a newspaper would overlook this provision of the law and through mere inadvertence fail to file the statement. I believe there ought to be a provision requiring some kind of notice to be given to him before his paper would be excluded from the mails.

I therefore suggest as an amendment that the first section at the top of page 46, which reads as follows:

Any such publication shall be denied the privileges of the mail upon failure to comply with any provision of this paragraph—

Be amended so that it shall read:

Any such publication shall be denied the privileges of the mail if it shall fail to comply with any of the provisions of this paragraph within 10 days after notice by registered letter of such failure.

Mr. BOURNE. I will ask the Senator from Missouri if that would not put the department in a position where it would have to have continual espionage rather than the publisher on notice under the law as to what he had to do.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; I think it imposes no additional duty or burden upon the department. Before the department can exclude a paper they must find as a fact that the report has not been made. When they do find that, all that is required in addition to their present duties is that they shall send a registered letter to the publisher calling his attention to his failure, and then if he does not comply with that notice the forfeiture of the right to enter the mails follows.

It is always repugnant, Mr. President, to our sense of justice and right to deny a valuable right or privilege merely because of some inadvertence on the part of the person enjoying it. This might work a very great injury. Let us imagine one of the great daily newspapers of the country with a circulation of two or three hundred thousand copies. Some official charged with the duty fails to send a proper statement here to Washington or to file it as required by the bill. Let us imagine that we had a Postmaster General or a Second or Third or Fourth Assistant who was willing to be arbitrary and he would deny that paper the use of the mails. It would be a dangerous thing.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will permit me, I will be very glad to accept his suggested amendment.

Mr. REED. Will the Secretary kindly read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, after the word "mail," in line 2, strike out the words "upon failure to comply with any provision of this paragraph" and insert "if it shall fail to comply with any of the provisions of this paragraph within 10 days after notice by registered letter of such failure," so that if amended it will read:

Any such publication shall be denied the privileges of the mail if it shall fail to comply with any of the provisions of this paragraph within 10 days after notice by registered letter of such failure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before a vote is taken I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon the origin and purpose of this legislation. What is expected to be accomplished by it, if the Senator knows?

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a provision in the bill as passed by the House, I observe. So the Senator is not responsible for that.

Mr. BOURNE. I was going to say that the proposed legislation appeared originally in a House bill, known, as I remember, as the Barnhart bill. I assume the desire is to furnish the public information as to the possible bias of the paper, incident to ownership or incident to obligations of the paper or its owners to individuals.

The Senate committee believed in its investigation of the House bill that the provision of the House would not be practicable or administrative; that there were requirements there which could not possibly be complied with, and in also the desire of furnishing the readers the information as to the individuals to whom the paper was under financial obligations, and that if that information was furnished semiannually and in the method provided in the Senate committee substitute as recommended by the Senate committee the object sought would be accomplished.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought likely the purpose the Senator has suggested was at the bottom of it. I suppose there is a great dread, perhaps, or anxiety on the part of somebody that some newspaper is controlled by some corporation or plutocrat, of which we hear so much these days, and it was, to use a term of the street, to smoke him out. There may be something in that so far as the great newspapers of the country are concerned. There is nothing in it so far as the ordinary newspaper is concerned, and when it comes to asking the Youth's Companion, the National Temperance Society Magazine, the Humane Society Magazine, the church publications, and the Sabbath school publications to go through this performance I think it approaches the ridiculous, if it does not go beyond it.

I have no interest in it whatever, but it occurs to me it should be confined to newspapers—possibly magazines—but when it goes to the extent of saying periodicals or other publications, requiring all these little publications to file a list of their stockholders and their bondholders and their editors and their proprietors and their business managers—and there are very many hundreds of them in the country—it does not seem to me that it is very wise legislation.

I would suggest to the Senator that if this is passed and goes to conference, as it will, he dwell upon that somewhat before the conferees meet, and see if it would not be wise to limit it.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not care to address myself any distinct remarks on the matter, but in sympathy with the suggestion of the Senator, it seems to me it is unnecessary that the provision should apply to the thousands of weekly newspapers throughout the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely.

Mr. LODGE. If it is applied to any newspaper, it ought to apply to all, and especially to those which the Senator mentions.

Mr. CLAPP. But with the thousands of country newspapers throughout the country, to require them to file these statements, it seems to me, is the imposition of a burden without justification.

Mr. BOURNE. What is the great burden, I ask the Senator? Are there so many stockholders of the country newspapers having $2,000 invested? They have to furnish the information only twice a year.

Mr. CLAPP. The average country newspaper——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. The country newspaper is not a great financial institution, and I do not think it is fair, unless some great public service is to be obtained by it, to impose upon it the laying bare of its financial condition. That is what it amounts to, without obtaining, in my judgment, any good purpose. It may be that some of the great press of the cities rest upon a different proposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. There was called to my attention by a publisher one provision in the substitute concerning which I should like the opinion of the chairman of the committee. The amendment requires—a sworn statement setting forth the names and post-office addresses of the editors, publishers, business managers, and owners, and, in addition, the stockholders, if the publication be owned by a corporation, and also the names of bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders.

I do not know how many institutions there are of the kind, but I have in mind one in which it would be utterly impossible for the corporation to set forth a list of the bondholders. Bonds are issued under a mortgage, and if they be not registered bonds they pass from hand to hand, sometimes by mere delivery, sometimes by indorsement, without any notice whatever to the corporation which has given the mortgage.

Mr. GALLINGER. Nine times out of ten that is the case.

Mr. CUMMINS. They will be put in the position of either being required to give the names of all the bondholders under the mortgage which has been issued or of being denied access to the mails. I am sure that it was not the intent of the Senate committee to bring about any such result as that.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest to cure that defect, which is an obvious one, that there be inserted in line 20, before the word "bondholders," the word "registered"; in line 23, before the word "bonds," the word "registered"—"registered bondholders," or holders of "registered bonds."

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask whether that would rectify such a condition as the Senator from Iowa spoke of. I suppose 90 per cent of these bonds are made payable to bearer.

Mr. CUMMINS. The amendment might be confined to those cases in which the mortgage provided for a registration of bonds so that the corporation could know that they were the holders of registered bonds. There would be no objection to that so far as I see.

Mr. BOURNE. The Senator from Iowa addressed a question to me as chairman of the committee having the bill in charge, and I would be glad if given an opportunity of trying to answer the question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will be pleased to give the Senator an opportunity.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New Hampshire had the floor. I do not know why he should be debarred from discussing the question.

Mr. BOURNE. I will say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Oregon with pleasure.

Mr. BOURNE. The suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts to amend by restricting the condition to registered bonds would unquestionably meet the objection raised by the Senator from Iowa, but I do not believe, replying to his original question, that while it is onerous it is impossible to obtain the information. Whether the bonds are registered or whether they are coupons, they are sold to individuals. The parties handling the bonds know the parties to whom they sell. They have that information. The information is always on the books of the company, if the bonds are registered. If the bonds are not registered, but are coupon, then the coupons have to go through the financial institutions, and, until they are paid, the information can be obtained. It is onerous, undoubtedly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. BOURNE. I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment, to limit it to registered bonds is perfectly satisfactory and will be a good one, but I do not think it is at all impossible under the provision as recommended by the Senate committee of administration.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the interest on every bond issued by any of these corporations was due on the 1st of April and the 1st of October, the corporations might know, at least, who presented the coupons; but the interest does not mature on the 1st of April and the 1st of October. No one can tell what changes have been made in the meanwhile in the ownership of the bonds.

Mr. ROOT. May I suggest also that coupons ordinarily are presented through some bank, and there is no indication of who is the owner?

Mr. SMOOT. And many times coupons are paid by the bank in cash, and no further record is made of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rose, as I said, with another thought in mind, although I had intended to call attention to this provision of the bill, recognizing, as I do, that it is utterly impossible to get the names of these bondholders unless the bonds are registered. I had thought that possibly by the insertion of the word "known," making it read "known bondholders," we might cure it to some extent; but I still feel that this provision may well be given careful consideration, and that in our quest—because, I take it, that word exactly embraces the situation—in our quest to discover that some wicked man somewhere is editing a newspaper without it being known to the general public who he is, and hence he promulgates views that could not be attributed to him personally—I say in that quest it seems to me that we ought not by the language of this provision to include all the little publications scattered all over the country, thousands in number, and bother those people, asking them to furnish this unnecessary and foolish information, so far as they are concerned.

What on earth do we want to know who are the owners, the editors, the publishers, the bondholders, and the mortgagees of the humane-society publications? I suppose there are 40 of them in this country. So I think this ought to be reconstructed, to some extent, so as to exclude publications of that kind. I rose simply to call attention to it; and having done so, I will say nothing further at the present time concerning it.

Mr. SANDERS. Why should we put that burden on the larger papers, if it is altogether wrong to put it on the smaller papers? That is the question that occurs to me. It is sometimes far more serious to the larger papers than it is to the smaller ones. Further, about that matter of the registered bonds, I do not think we have any right morally to put a burden upon registered bonds that we find ourselves unable to put on other bonds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to strike out and insert.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what became of the suggested amendment?

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to make a suggestion and ask the attention of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Massachusetts to it. Would it not cure the objection raised if, in line 23 of page 45, which would be page 64 of the "Information print," after the words "or other securities," there were inserted the words "when the holders of the same are unknown," so that it would then read:

That it shall not be necessary to include in such statement the names of persons owning less than 1 per cent of the total amount of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other securities, when the holders of the same are unknown.

Mr. CUMMINS. That would not quite cure it, because it could be applied only to those who held less than 1 per cent of the bonds.

Mr. BOURNE. The purpose is——

Mr. CUMMINS. They are excused entirely, no matter whether they are known or unknown, by the terms of the bill itself.

Mr. ROOT. May I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he might accomplish his purpose by inserting, in line 20, page 45, before the word "bondholders," the word "known," so that it would read:

And also the names of known bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders.

Mr. CUMMINS. That will cure it entirely.

Mr. BOURNE. I accept that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending now on page 46, offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], to strike out all of the sentence after the word "mail" and inserting certain language. The question is upon that amendment to the amendment of the committee. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 46, line 2, after the word "mail," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the sentence and to insert the words "if it shall fail to comply with the provisions of this paragraph within 10 days after notice by registered letter of such failure."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, after the words "security holders," in line 20, page 45, I wish to suggest an amendment for the purpose of sending it to conference, as it may not be well prepared. I suggest the insertion of the following words:

Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to religious, fraternal, temperance, or other similar publications.

The amendment can then go to conference.

Mr. BOURNE. I accept that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then the word "Provided," in line 20, as it is now printed, should be followed by the word "further."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply call the attention of the Senator who has offered the last amendment to the fact that "other similar publications" is a pretty general term.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I simply suggested that amendment in order that the matter might go to conference and there could be reconstructed. I wrote it hurriedly.

Mr. REED. I understand that, and I am not going to object to it going in the bill, but I think the conferees ought to have in mind the fact that that term is very general. Under it, just for illustration, publications might be of such a character as really could be made political in their results.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is right.

Mr. REED. For instance, we recently had a great campaign made in this country in favor of certain treaties. The public were entitled to know that that campaign was being financed by a certain man—not that he did not have the full right to speak, but the public had the right to know who, in fact, was speaking. I throw that suggestion out in order that it may go along with the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is right.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to ask another question of the chairman of the committee concerning a phrase that has vexed me somewhat. It will be found on page 46, line 6. In order to make my question plain, I will read the part of it in which the words are found:

That all editorial or other reading matter published in any such newspaper, magazine, or periodical, for the publication of which money or other consideration is paid, accepted, or promised, shall be plainly marked "advertisement" or "advt."

What does the chairman of the committee understand to be the scope of the words "other consideration"?

Mr. BOURNE. Anything of value that is exchanged with the the owner of the paper for the space purchased.

Mr. CUMMINS. I fear, however, that the words might be construed much more broadly than that.

Mr. NELSON. If Senators will allow me, that could be cured very easily by inserting the word "valuable" between the word "other" and the word "consideration."

Mr. CUMMINS. Before I even ventured upon a suggestion as to an amendment, I wanted to get fully the idea of the chairman with regard to the words, because I did not want to propose amendments that are not necessary. I can readily see that the amendment now suggested by the Senator from Minnesota would cover what I believe was in the mind of the committee.

Mr. BOURNE. I will be very glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CUMMINS. For instance, there are considerations of affection, of love, of friendship.

Mr. BOURNE. I can only speak for myself. That did not enter into the consideration of this part of the bill at all; it was simply to meet as far as possible and perfect the idea in the House provision to cover anything that was valuable other than money.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, the chairman of the committee would have no objection to inserting the word just proposed by the Senator from Minnesota immediately before the word "consideration"?

Mr. BOURNE. None whatever.

Mr. CUMMINS. So that it will read "other valuable consideration."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think that would be the solution, because the term "valuable consideration" has a well-defined meaning in law.

Mr. CUMMINS. It has a well-defined meaning in law.

Mr. NELSON. I move as an amendment to the amendment the insertion of the word "valuable" between the word "other" and the word "consideration."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 46, line 6, before the word "consideration," it is proposed to insert the word "valuable."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, there was no action taken on the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] to insert the word "known" before the word "bondholders," at the beginning of line 20. It was suggested; but no vote was taken on it and no action had.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair heard the suggestion of the Senator, but did not understand that any formal amendment had been proposed.

Mr. NELSON. I understood that it was offered as an amendment.

Mr. ROOT. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 45, line 20, before the word "bondholders," it is proposed to insert the word "known."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator from Oregon that in lines 7 and 8, on page 46, the word "or" and the abbreviation "advt." be eliminated from the bill. We all know what "advertisement" is when we see it in print. A good many people might not know what that abbreviation meant. I think it is unnecessary, and I move to strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, line 7, after the word "advertisement," in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out the word "or" and the abbreviation "advt."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it would save one amendment in conference if a period were placed after the word "advertisement" in line 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection that amendment to the amendment will be made. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I was necessarily out of the Chamber for a few moments, and I should like to inquire whether any amendment was made limiting the general provision in regard to the publication of the names of owners and others interested in newspapers and periodicals.

Mr. GALLINGER. An amendment was adopted on my motion excluding religious, fraternal, temperance, and other similar publications.

Mr. CLAPP. Then, I should like to have the matter go over. I think we ought to make an effort to exclude the ordinary country newspapers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the question on the amendment be postponed for the present, to come up on Monday.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. What amendment is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment on pages 44, 45, and 46 to strike out and insert. This is to strike out the matter found on page 44, and also on part of page 45, and insert the matter found on pages 45 and 46 in italics. The Senator from Minnesota asks that that go over, and, without objection, it will be so ordered.

The Secretary will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bonds of Navy mail clerks," in section 4, page 47, line 3, after the word "affected," to insert: "Provided further, That readjustment made hereunder shall not take effect before July 1, 1912, and shall be for diversions occurring after January 1, 1912," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. When, after a weighing of the mails for the purpose of readjusting the compensation for their transportation on a railroad route, mails are diverted therefrom or thereto, the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, ascertain the effect of such diversion by a weighing of such mails for such number of successive working days as he may determine, and have the weights stated and verified to him as in other cases, and readjust the compensation on the routes affected accordingly: Provided, That no readjustment shall be made unless the diverted mails equal at least 10 per cent of the average daily weight on any of the routes affected: Provided further, That readjustment made hereunder shall not take effect before July 1, 1912, and shall be for diversions occurring after January 1, 1912.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 47, line 8, after the word "after," to strike out "July 1" and insert "March 4, 1913"; and in line 10, before the words "letter carriers," to strike out "next, following the passage of this act," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 5. That on and after March 4, 1913, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices shall be required to work not more than 8 hours a day: Provided, That the 8 hours of service shall not extend over a longer period than 10 consecutive hours and the schedules of duty of the employees shall be regulated accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 48, line 20, after the words "shall be," to strike out "annually reported to Congress and"; and in line 22, after the word "same," to strike out "or the originals thereof," so as to read:

SEC. 6. That no person in the classified civil service of the United States employed in the postal service shall be removed therefrom except for such cause as will promote the efficiency of said service and for reasons given in writing, and the person whose removal is sought shall have notice of the same and of any charges preferred against him, and be furnished with a copy thereof, and also be allowed a reasonable time for personally answering the same in writing; and affidavits in support thereof; but no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the officer making the removal; and copies of charges, notice of hearing, answer, reasons for removal, and of the order of removal shall be made a part of the records of the proper department or office, as shall also the reasons for reduction in rank or compensation; and copies of the same shall be furnished to the person affected upon request, and the Civil Service Commission also shall, upon request, be furnished copies of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 23, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said postal service, or the presenting by any such person or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LODGE. Let it go over, then.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I feel that it is a step in the denial of human rights. To my mind to strike out that provision would be a step toward barbarism. "Alone" is, to me, the most hateful word of the English language. I hold that the most unfortunate and most to be pitied mortal in the world is the man or woman who is content to be alone and who would shut himself or herself in his own shell and deny and decline communication with his fellows.

Mr. President, I believe social, fraternal, and benevolent organizations are a blessing to the members thereof and to mankind. Identity with such organizations tends to make better men, better citizens, and better officials. To deny men who may be employed in the Post Office Department this right would be brutal.

In heaven's name, how is an employee who has a legitimate grievance to be heard, or who has a thought for the betterment of himself or his fellows ever to get before Congress if this proviso is stricken out? Mr. President, I can not vote to strike this provision from the House bill. It is a decided step backward; it is toward the Dark Ages; it is brutal and cowardly. My vote shall never be cast in favor of such a step. It is termed the "gag rule," and it is true to the name. A measure of this character is contrary to every American idea. Many of the best measures and devices calculated to make better conditions for the toiler and breadwinner are the direct result of deliberations had in these societies. The notion that the only thoughts discussed at these gatherings are such subjects as are a menace to the State is, to my mind, a most grievous mistake. Senators, I appeal to you, do not vote to strike out this from the bill.

Consider for a moment the situation of the average clerk. I feel it is safe to say that the greater part of the clerks are single men and women, without a home or hearthstone of their own. We—you and I—have our homes and families with whom we may consult on all questions; and to deny these clerks the right and blessings of identification with social and fraternal organizations would be cruel and most unjust. These men are like ourselves, just as true Americans as are we, just as patriotic, and just as jealous of the great postal system that has been built up in our country as we can possibly be.

The argument of the majority of the committee that "discipline demands that petitions should be presented to the department officials" does not appeal to me. Now, it is clear to me that such a course would at once put the petitioner at sword's point with their principals. The right of petition must not be abridged or interfered with. I feel there is no necessity for this extraordinary and drastic course, and I trust the provision may not be stricken out.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall read a few pertinent words:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

That which I have just read is, of course, as all Senators here know, Article I of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

I am opposed to the striking out of this provision from the House bill. Under the Constitution all men have the right freely to speak, peaceably to assemble, and petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

I do not wish at this late hour to burden the Senate with any remarks, but I ask unanimous consent that I may, as a part of my remarks, incorporate in the RECORD an article which I have clipped from La Follette's Weekly, an article entitled "Removing the Gag."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the request will be granted.

The article is as follows:

REMOVING THE GAG.

There is a provision in our Federal Constitution granting to every citizen of the United States the right peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for redress of grievances. Citizens generally avail themselves of this right. Every session there are presented to Congress great piles of petitions and memorials requesting, in one way or another, a "redress of grievances." This provision of the Constitution does not make exception of citizens who happen to be in the service of the Government. It does not say that all people may petition the Government, except, for instance, the railway mail clerks. Yet that is precisely the effect given to it by both President Roosevelt and President Taft.

THE ROOSEVELT-TAFT "GAG RULE."

On January 25, 1906, President Roosevelt issued from the White House the following Executive order:

"All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the executive departments or independent Government establishments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the departments, or independent Government establishments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service."

When President Taft entered the White House, he refused to revoke that order. On the contrary, he supported it vigorously by further decreeing that:

"No bureau, office or division chief, or subordinate in any department of the Government, and no officer of the Army or Navy or Marine Corps stationed in Washington, shall apply to either House of Congress, or to any committee of Congress, or to any Member of Congress, for legislation, or for appropriations, or for congressional action of any kind, except with the consent and knowledge of the head of the department; nor shall any such person respond to any request for information from either House of Congress, or any committee of either House of Congress, or any Member of Congress, except through, or as authorized by, the head of his department."

AN AFFRONT TO OUR CITIZENS.

Commenting upon these orders in a recent speech in Congress, Representative LLOYD said:

"If no Government employee is permitted to speak, excepting through his department chiefs, and the department chief through the Cabinet officer, then this is an aristocratic Government, dominated completely by the official family of the President. If the principle enunciated in these Executive orders is to be carried to the extreme, then there is no possible way of obtaining information excepting through the Cabinet officers, and if these officials desire to withhold information and suppress the truth or to conceal their official acts it is within their power to do so. This Government will be more popular when its official proceedings are an open book and the conduct of its officials continuously subject to scrutiny and investigation by the people at any time and in any manner the people elect."

These orders of Roosevelt and Taft have come to be known odiously as the "gag rule." Under it faithful and public-serving employees of the Government are gagged by their superiors. Officers like Dr. Wiley, for instance, could not lift their voices in protest against wrongdoing without laying themselves open to the charge of insubordination. Under it a railway-mail clerk could not exercise the ordinary right of an American citizen and protest to Congress at the inhuman and frightfully hazardous conditions under which he may be forced to work by his superior. The "gag rule" is un-American, unjust. It may fit into the scheme of things in a country like Russia, but is entirely antagonistic to the spirit of our institutions. It is a slap at the Constitution and an affront to our citizens.

OVERWORK, "DEATH TRAPS," AND ABUSE.

The "gag rule" worked particular hardship in the case of the railway-mail clerks. Here is a great body of intelligent, hard-worked servants of the Government who have been compelled under the administration of Postmaster General Hitchcock to endure hardships, to suffer affronts, that should not be tolerated in this land of equal rights to all.

The railway-mail clerk is a highly trained man. His business is mechanical, of course, but his memory has to be acute and in constant action. His eyes must be quick and keen in order to catch the addresses with the minimum waste of time. He works under great physical disadvantages, for the train rocks and rolls, the cars jam, the light is generally artificial and unsteady. Under such conditions eight hours is a strong man's limit. Yet Hitchcock, after announcing to the world that he was going to wipe out the postal deficit, set about to do so, not by striving to get a profitable parcel post and to take back from the express companies the business which should rightfully go through the mails, but by working the mail clerks harder and cutting off the number of men in the service. This crippled the service. Case after case arose where mail trains arrived at terminals with huge piles of bags of "unworked" mail. But it cut off a few dollars from the pay roll.

The mail clerks, under such a régime, have reached the breaking point—the limit of sheer physical endurance. Add to that the hazards they are subjected to by being placed in unfit wooden cars and you have a substantial "grievance" which somebody ought to call upon the Government to "redress." As a matter of fact, an old-fashioned wooden car stands about as much chance in case of an accident, between two heavy steel cars, as if it were an eggshell. The men call these cars "death traps."

MURDOCK ON THE RAILWAY POST OFFICE.

Congressman MURDOCK, one of the best-informed Members of the House on matters relating to the postal service, had the following to say about the character of the service demanded of railway mail clerks:

"This Railway Mail Service besides is the finest skilled Government service in the world. It has three characteristics as such: First, its hazards; second, the mental and physical strain put upon the majority of the men who are in it; and third, the skill it demands.

"What are the hazards? Let us see. For instance, it very rarely happens that this Post Office bill is debated here without some current item of news, some tragedy of the day, entering into the consideration of one item in it. Two years ago while we were debating this item, the item in regard to the Railway Mail Service, five men in that service were carried in a snow slide off the summit of the Cascade Mountains to death in the canyon below. A week ago this morning three of the men in the service, working to the very last with the mails, went down with the Titanic. The hazard is not exceptional or unusual. It is continuous and ever present. In 1910, 27 men were killed in this service and 527 injured. The year after, the death list went to 12 and the injured list to 719. Now, these men work on the fastest trains in the country, usually in the car which is next to the engine. And usually after every great wreck the name of a postal clerk is in the list of dead and injured.

"What of their skill? There is no skill in the world in governmental service to compare with it. Nearly every railway postal clerk must know something like 10,000 distributions. There are men to-day going out of New York City on fast trains who are distributing letters by towns, cities, and villages in California. The throwing of one letter into one box turns it north across the country over the Northern Pacific; the throwing of it into another box southward over the Santa Fe or the Southern Pacific, to gain in the one instance or the other the matter of an hour or two in delivery. Every man in the Railway Mail Service must keep constantly in touch with every change in schedules, every connection made between trains over the United States.

"What of the strain? There is no service in the world, governmental or other, where the strain exceeds that upon the individual in this service. Let me cite an instance to this committee. The men who run from New York City to Pittsburgh and return travel 888 miles on four hours of sleep. There are several instances like that in the country.

"Here, then, is the greatest hazard, the greatest skill, and the greatest mental and physical strain. This service, at the center of postal things, has grown up during the years not in a haphazard way but largely without thorough reorganization until now."

CONGRESS GETS BUSY.

Denied the right to petition Congress for relief from conditions such as these, the mail clerks determined to protect themselves by organizing. This drew from the administration a series of persecutions almost unparalleled. The men were told, in effect, that activity along these lines would mean the loss of their jobs. Senator LA FOLLETTE took hold of this situation. He addressed letters to all the mail clerks asking for the facts. From the pile of correspondence he received a most appalling mistreatment of Government employees and American citizens is revealed.

When the Post Office appropriation bill came before the House recently a provision was inserted which specifically grants to Government employees the right to present their grievances to Congress or to any Member thereof without subjecting themselves to the danger of reduction in rank or compensation or of removal from the service. It was passed almost unanimously.

Congressman PROUTY commented upon this provision in the following words:

"If the Congress of the United States has no power to thus abridge any portion of our citizenship in their right to petition for redress of grievances, I hardly think that any constitutional lawyer will contend that that right may with impunity be exercised by the executive branch of the Government; and while this Executive order that has been issued in a measure abridges that right, I do not wish to be understood as severely criticizing either of the Chief Executives that promulgated it. It was doubtless designed for a good purpose; but, notwithstanding the great respect that I have for the statesmanship and the wisdom of the President who first promulgated this order, notwithstanding my reverence, almost, for the judicial knowledge and acumen of the illustrious President that repeated the order, I am nevertheless constrained to believe that the founders of our Government had a keener insight into the workings of the human mind and the human soul than those illustrious men. I think our forefathers understood that a liberty-loving, strong, virile humanity would not endure the repression of a right to freely express to the Government their grievances. I am one of those persons who believe that you can never correct discontent, you can never allay agitation, by repressive measures. As far as I have observed the workings in these matters in human life, the more you attempt to check and keep from free expression the more you augment and increase the supposed grievance.

"We must remember that those who are engaged under the civil service of the Government are made of the same flesh, are made of the same blood, and they have the same virile spirit that constitutes American citizenship, and when you deprive them of the constitutional right to present their grievances to the men that have the right and the power to correct them you do not prevent them from taking action, but you simply divert their method of action."

A GOOD SERVICE.

The House did a good service in abolishing the infamous "gag rule." Let the Senate do likewise. This provision should be retained in the Post Office appropriation bill so as to make it impossible in the future for any President, autocratically inclined, to put a bandage over the mouth of any servant of the people.

Mr. REED. I wish to call the attention of the chairman to a clause appearing in this bill as it came from the House. I refer to lines 13, 14, and 15, on page 48:

But no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the officer making the removal.

The section undertakes to remedy some of the evils which have existed. It has been the custom in the department to remove a man without assigning a reason and without giving him any opportunity to be heard; and this provision is intended to relieve against that condition; but I think that its value is largely destroyed by the clause which I have read:

But no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the officer making the removal.

That is to say, an officer removes a man; he has made up his mind, or he would not have removed him; and here is a provision that there shall be no hearing except at his discretion.

I recognize that we must give a large discretion to the heads of the departments, but I do not think we should by law cut off the right to a hearing unless it is granted by the very man who may have been misinformed and thus prejudiced against the man employed.

I suggest that we amend the clause so that it will read:

But no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the President or of the officer making the removal.

So that in case of some great injustice, at least the Congressman can appeal to the President to grant a hearing. I move to amend by inserting, in line 15, after the word "the" and before the word "officer," the words "President or the."

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator if he thinks that might not unnecessarily burden the President with these matters. They are important to the clerks; I admit that. I apprehend the officer removing is usually a subordinate, is he not?

Mr. REED. I am not able to answer that question. I think these removals are generally in the name of the Postmaster General himself.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the name of the head of the department?

Mr. REED. Yes; although done by a subordinate and generally without the knowledge of the head of the department.

Mr. GALLINGER. My thought was that if it was in a department, we might put it in the discretion of the head of the department, but if the head of the department had cognizance usually, that would not meet the case. I appreciate that.

Mr. BOURNE. I am glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not think the change proposed by the Senator from Missouri is necessary. I quite agree with the spirit of it and the purpose he wishes to accomplish, but the heads of the executive departments are far removed necessarily from the personal details of the clerical force in the departments. They are impartial, as the President would be. They come to the consideration of a question of removal as free from any personal knowledge or predeliction as would the President, and the effect of the change would be merely to burden the President with a lot of details which he ought to have attended to for him by the heads of departments.

The President has too much to do now. He can not do it all and do it well. We ought not to put a great number of details upon him. The heads of the departments ought to do this kind of thing.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from New York pardon an interruption?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I agree with the idea the Senator expresses, and I thought perhaps we could get to a common understanding by striking out "the officer making the removal" and let the sentence read:

Nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. ROOT. That would be all right.

Mr. REED. I withdraw the amendment I offered, and suggest that in its place.

Mr. ROOT. That is all right, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to amend by striking out the words "officer making the removal" and substituting therefor the words "the Postmaster General."

Mr. BOURNE. I accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I send to the desk and ask to have read an amendment which I propose to take the place of a portion of the words which the committee propose to strike out in lines 23 to 25, on page 48, and lines 1 to 9, on page 49.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment to which this is offered as a substitute has been passed over, has it not?

Mr. REED. No. The committee now proposes, and we are now considering a proposal of the committee, to strike out all of lines 23 to 25, on page 48, and lines 1 to 9, on page 49. I am now offering this in lieu of the proposition to strike it all out.

Mr. LODGE. I thought that had been passed over. It seems to me that amendment ought to be passed over. It will lead to a great deal of debate.

Mr. SWANSON. Let us see.

Mr. LODGE. I do not ask to have it passed over, but it seemed to me it would be impossible to dispose of it this afternoon.

Mr. BOURNE. I should like to have the amendment printed.

Mr. LODGE. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be stricken from the bill by the committee, on pages 48 and 49, insert:

The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to either House of Congress or to any committee or Member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with.

Mr. NELSON obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Minnesota desire to offer something in that same line?

Mr. NELSON. I understand this matter is going over. I desire to offer and have printed a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri and for this paragraph in the bill to which it refers.

I want to say in connection with it that a representative of the postal employees, their organization, handed to me this amendment, and indicated to me that the organization was satisfied with the amendment in this form in lieu of the one contained in the bill. I ask to have it read and printed, and then let it go over until we take up this matter again.

Mr. BOURNE. Do I understand——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon will suspend for a moment until the amendment sent to the desk by the Senator from Minnesota is read. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be stricken from the bill on pages 48 and 49 insert the following:

Provided, however, That the presenting by any person or groups of persons employed in the postal service of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such persons or groups of persons from said service.

Mr. BOURNE. I simply want to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he requested that section 6 go over?

Mr. NELSON. I did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will make that request.

Mr. NELSON. I meant in case it went over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make that request.

Mr. NELSON. I offered an amendment. It was furnished to me by a representative—I can not recall his name at this moment—who is looking after the welfare of the postal employees. He informed me that as a rule they did not believe in this paragraph in the bill that the Senate committee has proposed shall be stricken out, and they are fully satisfied with the amendment I have offered. In fact, that is the amendment he handed me.

I think that is a proper solution of the question. It leaves it so that postal employees can not form any labor organization, if that is stricken out of the bill, but they can apply either singly or collectively to Members of Congress or Senators for any relief that they may desire, and it shall be no ground for their demotion or in any way affect them in their efficiency records.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this a very important paragraph, and two very important amendments have been offered as substitutes which I think ought to be printed, and we ought to have an opportunity to examine it. I will ask that this amendment be passed over.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I had the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Of course I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Missouri if he desires to discuss it now.

Mr. REED. I want to take about five minutes to state the reasons for the amendment which I offered in this broad form. I think that the subject matter ought to go over and I will make no objection to that; in fact, we are proceeding on the line of letting matters go over.

Mr. ROOT. Before the Senator from Missouri proceeds, I would be glad to have the amendment that he offered read again so that we may understand the subject matter on which he is to talk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out by the committee on pages 48 and 49 insert:

The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress, or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to either House of Congress, or to any committee or member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has asked that the amendment be printed. It will be so ordered, without objection.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. REED. I do not want to weary the Senate and I will try and be very brief.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator yield to me for a question to him?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Purely for information. I assume that he is familiar with it and I am not. The House provision says:

That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees having for its objects, among other things—shall not constitute or be cause for reduction.

Naming them—

Is there any law or order that now makes membership in such an organization cause for dismissal or reduction? I wanted that clearly in my mind, so that I might think it over before we take it up again.

Mr. REED. I was about to answer that very question, and that is the reason why I am imposing upon the good nature of the Senate at this hour. Let me, however, state it in my own way, in order that what I say may be connected.

I intended to call attention to the section of the Constitution to which the Senator from Arizona called attention, and so that it may appear here, I do call attention to article 1, which provides that—.

Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

In the teeth of that section, the following Executive order was promulgated January 25, 1906, during the administration of President Roosevelt:

All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the executive departments or independent Government establishments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the departments or independent Government establishments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

That order remained in effect, as I am informed, until November 26, 1909, when another Executive order was issued, during the administration of President Taft. That order reads as follows:

It is hereby ordered that no bureau, office, or division chief, or subordinate in any department of the Government, and no officer of the Army or Navy or Marine Corps stationed in Washington, shall apply to either House of Congress, or to any committee of either House of Congress, or to any Member of Congress, for legislation or for appropriations or for congressional action of any kind, except with the consent and knowledge of the head of the department; nor shall any such person respond to any request for information from either House of Congress, or any committee of either House of Congress, or any Member of Congress, except through or as authorized by the head of his department.

Mr. President, if those orders were not printed and if they were not actually in force it would be difficult for me to believe they had ever been issued or promulgated or even dreamed of by any responsible authority of the United States Government. In effect they operate, first, to close the lips of these men who are employed by the Government and deny to them the natural right and the constitutional privilege of expressing their grievances to the legislative branch of the Government. They say to these men who are thus employed, "You shall not express your wrongs or suggest remedies or put forward those things which you believe may be of advantage, and if you do so it is at the peril of dismissal." That is a denial to the men themselves of not only a constitutional but a natural right.

This conclusion can not be escaped by declaring that they have the right to make their appeal through a department head or chief, because if the department head or chief sees fit to suppress the information or the complaint or to cover the grievance from sight the remedy is absolutely denied to these men.

But there is another viewpoint which I desire to present. These Executive orders are calculated in their effect, whether so intended or not, to close the sources of information to Congress itself, to say to all this vast army of 250,000 employees, "You shall not, even at the demand of Congress or a committee of Congress or of a Member of Congress, supply information in regard to the public business."

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator inform us whether the Executive order of January 25, 1906, found a place in the recent confession of faith promulgated at Chicago?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not yet had occasion to examine that confession of faith in all of its details and in all of its meanderings. It is so constructed that it might cover every principle of the decalogue and every dream of every socialist or anarchist who has ever been upon this earth. But it professedly has for its basic principle the idea of liberty of speech and an enlargement of human privileges. Yet the man who is running upon that platform and who we understand inspired that remarkable document is the same gentleman who is responsible for the order of January 25, 1906, which denies to citizens of the United States who happen to be in the employ of the Government the right to appear before Congress or its committees and express their grievances or to convey to a Congressman or a Senator information in regard to public service. But I do not intend to go into that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have been familiar with the two Executive orders which have been mentioned by the Senator, but what I did not know and what I should like to know is this: Is there any Executive order which forbids Government employees from organizing among themselves or joining any other organization which has for its purposes their own betterment or advancement? The first part of the paragraph that is stricken out refers to that subject. I have no knowledge about it, and I should like to know.

Mr. REED. I do not have at hand that order. I am not prepared, therefore, to say that an order of that kind does exist, but my information is that that kind of rule has been in force. But I do not state that absolutely. I shall endeavor to ascertain before this bill is finally passed.

But, Mr. President, the order is here and is now in existence which provides:

That no bureau, office, or division chief, or subordinate, in any department of the Government, and no officer of the Army or Navy or Marine Corps stationed in Washington, shall apply to either House of Congress, or to any committee of either House of Congress, or to any Member of Congress for legislation or for appropriations or for congressional action of any kind, except with the consent and knowledge of the head of the department; nor shall any such person respond to any request for information from either House of Congress, or any committee of either House of Congress, or any Member of Congress, except through or as authorized by the head of his department.

The effect of these rules, all taken together, has been that the employees of the Post Office Department have been fearful of their right to speak, even to the Congressman from their district, and to suggest to him needed changes.

Mr. President, it will not do for Congress to permit the executive branch of this Government to deny to it the sources of information which ought to be free and open to it, and such an order as this, it seems to me, belongs in some other country than the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I should prefer to see the proviso in section 6 retained, as the House agreed to it, rather than to insert the one proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. The bill being a Post Office appropriation bill ought to refer perhaps only to the employees of that department. I prefer to accept the House provision and disagree to the amendment proposed by the Senate committee.

I have in mind some of the employees of that department who, I think, ought to be looked after with particular care. I refer especially to the Railway Mail Service. In my opinion the public interests would not be prejudiced nor impaired should section 6 of this bill be adopted in the form in which it came from the House.

The high character of the Railway Mail Service employees; the education, good habits, and standard citizenship of this class of men is a guaranty, to me, sufficient to warrant that no drastic restriction be placed upon them. It is a service made up of good, loyal citizens; and the privilege to organize for mutual benefit in the matter of securing proper compensation and the regulation of hours of labor, in my opinion, would not be abused nor used by them to the detriment of the public service.

The railway mail clerks are, in the first place, a very deserving class of citizens. They must be intelligent, they must be men of standing, and, of course, they must be men of great physical endurance. In order to enter the service they must pass an examination that weeds out those who are inefficient, and in order to keep their places the calls of their profession are such that they must always be alert, able, and industrious.

I should dislike to see legislation that might even indirectly undertake to state that they could not be members of a club or an association, and I would court rather than repel their communications to Congress. A mail clerk starts out from home. He never knows when he is to return on these long routes, especially in the West. Sometimes he is away weeks; I have known it to be months, although when he bade good-by to his wife and his children, going out on his run, he supposed he would be gone not more than three days. Oftentimes days and nights together pass by without opportunity to go to bed. He may simply camp down on mail bags for little snatches of sleep, in the meantime getting all kinds of meals at all kinds of places without preference or regularity, and oftentimes going without meals.

It is my belief that the postal service is entitled to reorganization along the lines proposed by the House bill in section 7, as amended by the Senate committee, which, I believe, makes it practically applicable at once instead of a year later. The proposed plan of reorganization, I understand, establishes grades and salaries consonant with length of service, character and importance of work performed, and the merits of the employees. It provides for the regulation of transfers from one branch of the service to another, and places promotions upon as nearly an equitable basis as can be devised. It properly provides for the payment of travel expenses to postal clerks when on leaves of absence on account of sickness and while on duty after 10 hours from the time of beginning their initial run.

No class of Government employees deserves or is entitled to better treatment at the hands of the Government than the class composed of railway postal clerks.

The service is made up of men who, as a rule, make it a life work. Those entering it do so through the medium of a competitive, practical, mental examination which possibly could not be passed by many Members of this Senate. They are required to undergo a physical examination as searching in respect to accuracy of vision and hearing as that to which a recruit for the Army or Navy is subjected.

Once in the service they become almost isolated from the companionship of their fellowmen. When not in active duty on the railway mail trains they are obliged to study incessantly in order to keep pace with countless changes in mail routes and post offices.

No man in the service can stand still or become stagnant. He must progress; he must either work and study continuously or drop out. He can not give time or attention to any other business or profession. In short, he must devote his full energy to the service. Naturally, in time he becomes unfitted for other lines of business and must make what he has undertaken his life work.

The duties performed by railway postal clerks are among the most important and exacting required of any of our public servants. Upon their accurate and faithful performance depends in a large degree the carrying on of the important transactions of modern business. If the work of the Railway Mail Service were slovenly or carelessly performed, the damage to the business interests of the country could not be estimated. But the work is not carelessly performed. It is carried on with marvelous accuracy and exactitude. A letter missent through the error of a railway mail clerk is now a rarity.

It would be impossible to state or even estimate the aggregate amount of money and other property intrusted daily to the railroad postal clerks of this country. Millions of dollars go through their hands daily in registered packages and otherwise, and the loss through theft or dishonesty is practically nothing.

There is another element in connection with this service which demands our attention, and that is the danger to which postal clerks are constantly exposed while on duty.

If a train on which postal clerks are employed is wrecked, these men rarely escape. The enginemen may have an opportunity to see approaching danger and avoid it. The well-built Pullmans may protect their passengers, but for the postal clerks encaged in cars between the heavy Pullmans and still heavier engine death or injury is almost inevitable when the crash of collision comes or other horrors of railway travel occur.

We have respect and admiration for our soldiers and sailors, who stand ready to risk life and limb for the protection of our Government, but, to my mind, we should have still more respect and admiration for the men of the Railway Mail Service, who risk life every day in the faithful performance of a duty which is essential for the welfare and convenience of the country.

The soldier, if called upon to risk life, goes to battle with the inspiration of martial music, of waving banners, and the comradeship of thousands. There is the excitement of combat as a stimulus.

The postal clerk faces greater risks from day to day, perhaps alone. For him, instead of martial music, there is the shriek of the engine whistle. Instead of waving banners, there are the danger signals of the trainmen. Death comes, not with the excitement and glory of the battle field, but in the commonplace line of daily duty.

Surely to these men we can intrust with safety the right to form associations for their mutual benefit. Surely the Government can afford to be just and generous to them in the matter of compensation. Surely we can safely grant them the privilege of coming to Congress with their petitions without imposing a penalty upon them for so doing.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement of my own view with regard to this matter. The part which is sought to be stricken out has two general objects: The first is to protect the postal employees against the consequences of organization; the second is to repeal the two Executive orders which have been referred to by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. These are wholly distinct and different things.

I suppose there can be no question whatever with regard to the wisdom of asserting, in some form, the right of Government employees to seek redress and relief through Congress, or to petition to or communicate with Members of Congress, provided always it is carried on in the proper way; but neither the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri nor the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] covers the first part of this provision which is proposed to be stricken out. I am a believer in the right of Government employees to organize, if they will.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. So that my position may not be misunderstood, I should like permission of the Senator from Iowa to say that my reason for offering a provision to cover this one phase—that is, the right of petition, the right to give information—was that men representing the postal employees, or at least certain of them, stated to me that they believed that the measure as proposed by the other House was in jeopardy and that they would be glad to have such a provision as I have offered adopted. I did not submit to any of them the provision itself, but I tried to embody the idea, and I tried to go further than their request and to make it cover all the employees of the civil service. I mean in the civil service of the Government, not the civil service as the term is technically used sometimes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am entirely satisfied with either the amendment proposed to be offered by the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Minnesota, so far as the amendments go. I wanted to know, however, as the debate proceeded, what had given rise to the first part of this provision. I want to know whether there is any order or any practice in the departments that would prevent employees from forming associations for their own advancement and benefit; if you please, for the increase of their compensation.

I can not conceive why Government employees should be segregated from all the rest of humanity and forbidden to do those things which all the rest of us do in order to accomplish our desires. I think everyone would understand that there are certain consequences of certain labor organizations that could not follow the organization of Government employees; but I am like the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I do not want, by taking out of one part of this provision and supplying for it a substitute and leaving the other untouched and unconsidered, to leave the impression that the Congress is of the opinion that these faithful public servants have not the right to take such measures as seem to them wise and fit and that are peaceful and orderly measures to advance their interests.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I merely want to say that it seems to me that it is infinitely better to leave the House provision just as it is. The Senator from Iowa inquires whether there is any order which prohibits the associations named in the House provision. I think the Senator would find that there is no order in existence that prohibits them; but the employees feel that there is a condition confronting them which at present operates against the formation of clubs or other associations—a sort of occult force, perhaps—and it is to meet that and to make it clear that they shall have the right to form these clubs and associations that this provision which is found in the House bill is asked for.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota whether there has ever been an instance in which an employee has been either demoted or dismissed because of his connection with any union or association or club? I have been told that there are such instances, and I should like to know from those who may have fuller information about it, because if there is nothing in it, if the Government has never proposed in any way to exert this power over the employees to prevent useful, beneficial, and advantageous associations, then, of course, there is no necessity for any legislation upon the subject; but I assume that because such a provision is found here, as proposed by the House, there must be some instances of the kind which gave rise to the proposition.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, it would be difficult to answer that question, because whoever made the dismissal might assign some other reason for it; but that some of the employees believe that they have been visited with a consequence for the organization of clubs and associations, there is no question in my mind. They have come under my personal observation; they have come to me with their statements of the situation; and while perhaps I would not be warranted in attempting to fathom the purpose of those who dealt with this question, in saying that they were visited with a result or a consequence, they certainly feel that they were; and I, for one, believe it should be put into the law of this country beyond any question that they have the right to organize, and not only they have that right but that all of the employees of the Government have it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I can shed just a little light on the question the Senator has asked. I have in mind a resident of my own State, a man who has been, I believe, 22 years in the mail service, and during that entire time so far as I know—and I think I am familiar with the facts—has not a black mark against his record; a man of intelligence and of consequence, who was dismissed by an order which simply stated "Dismissed for the good of the service." In company with my colleague [Mr. STONE] we waited upon the Assistant Postmaster General—I believe the Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Stewart. We asked him to furnish us with the reasons why this man had been summarily dismissed.

The only reason that we obtained from him, in something like two hours' time, was that this man was dismissed for the good of the service. We asked him finally if he would not give to the man himself a specification. He stated he would do so, and he did furnish a specification, which read something like this: "You are informed that your conduct has been such that it was deemed for the good of the service that you be dismissed."

The man himself believed that the reason for his dismissal was that he had been a member of an association of railway mail clerks and that by that association a resolution had been adopted indorsing a certain article in a newspaper. He believed, however, that his dismissal was bottomed not alone upon the resolution, but upon the fact that the department was undertaking to suppress all kinds of associations among these men.

That illustrates just what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has said—that so long as the department suspends men upon the general ground that the suspension is for the good of the service and refuses to give specifications they can and do remove them without giving any real reason. Many of the men believe that the attempt is being made to break up every effort at every kind of organization, even though it be purely social.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I feel sure, in view of what has been said, that the Post Office Department must have communicated its views upon the subject to the committee, and I have no doubt the committee can give us further information upon the subject.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will observe section 6, he will see that provision is made for just such cases as the Senator from Missouri has outlined. It provides, in brief, that an employee can not be reduced or removed without the cause for which he is reduced or removed being submitted to him in writing and he is given a hearing. I will read it if the Senator is not familiar with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite familiar with that part of the section.

Mr. BRISTOW. So that before the removal of an employee he is given an opportunity to be heard, and the evil of which the Senator speaks is cured.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Kansas whether it is true that the Post Office Department is so much opposed to organization among its employees that it has indicated in any way that any such organization would be followed by dismissal?

Mr. BRISTOW. Not to my knowledge. I know that there are organizations of postal employees, and I do not think such organizations have ever been discouraged. I think that the employees have their annual conventions, at which officers of the department attend. There was some trouble out in Chicago a few years ago, but I am not familiar with the details of it. I think some persons made some complaints, but I do not know what the merits of the complaints were. I do know, however, that there is no objection, or at least such an objection has never been made public, to any of the postal organizations.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say that I was informed the other day by Mr. P. J. Schart, president of the Railway Mail Association, who called on me and handed me the amendment I have offered, that the Post Office Department has never had any objection to the employees organizing such an association within the line of the service. What the department objected to was postal employees becoming members of what they call outside labor organizations. Mr. Schart informed me that, with the exception of a few radicals, all the railway postal clerks were in favor of striking out the provision of the House bill, because they did not want to be drawn by a few radicals into any of the outside labor organizations, such as the Federation of Labor and organizations of that kind. There is nothing in the rule or practice of the department that has ever hindered postal employees from organizing within the service, and the fact that Mr. Schart is president of the Railway Mail Association indicates that there is such an association and that the department is not hostile to it. I had quite a talk with him to ascertain the facts in so far as I could, and, as I understood him, a large majority—in fact, I should judge from what he told me that over 90 per cent—of the railway employees are opposed to becoming affiliated with any outside labor organization, and that they want nothing in the law that looks to legalizing or authorizing their joining it. They are quite content to have organizations of their own within the service, as they have now, and they are content if they can have an amendment something like that which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has offered, or like the amendment I have offered, which was prepared by this organization, authorizing them to appeal either singly or collectively to Members of the House of Representatives and to Senators or to the departmental officials for relief in any direction. They are quite content with that, and I think that is ample.

It seems to me that Senators ought to see what a great danger it would be to the postal service—I am speaking by the sufferance of the Senator from Iowa, who can stop me at any time——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I think Senators will realize, on reflection, what a calamity it would be to the postal service if organizations of postal employees affiliated with some radical outside labor organization should go on a strike and "hold up" the Post Office Department. There is no use mincing these matters; we might as well talk plainly. I am in favor of the railway postal employees, many of whom are my friends and acquaintances, being allowed, without restriction, to appeal to Congress collectively or to the Members of Congress individually or to the officials of the department or to the Chief Executive in any form or manner they like, and to form organizations such as they now have within the lines of the service; but we can not shut our eyes to the fact that there are outside agitators who are anxious to draw the postal employees into organizations something like the Federation of Labor, and we ought to protect them from any such calamity as that, a calamity both to them and to the postal service.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have simply been trying to ascertain what this provision was really intended to accomplish, and the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has given me a glimpse of the real end. There is therefore no objection to associations composed of the employees themselves; but the objection seems to be to the affiliation of such organizations with other organizations, or the membership of postal employees in any other than an association organized exclusively of Government employees.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to discuss that question. I recognize just as fully as the senior Senator from Minnesota possibly can that a strike among Government employees would be intolerable, and could not be tolerated for a moment, because that would be to sap the foundations of society; it would be to arrest the very functions of the Government; and I do not want to be understood as favoring anything that would lead to a result of that character.

But I am not yet able to see why a postal employee might not want to join some other organization which would be purely fraternal and benevolent and helpful, and I have been trying to find out what the Post Office Department really is trying to prevent. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Minnesota for giving me the view he has. I am not, however, intending to argue the question this afternoon because I understood that we were passing it over anyhow.

Mr. BOURNE. We passed over this section an hour ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I beg pardon. I have been sitting here, and I have heard several applications for the passing over of the section, but I have not heard the order entered, although it may be that it has been.

Mr. BOURNE. I am so informed by the clerk at the desk.

Mr. GALLINGER. I made the request that it go over.

Mr. CUMMINS. Somebody made the request of the Senator from Missouri whether he desired to be heard for a few moments, and out of his discussion has grown all that has followed.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator from Iowa will yield to me for a moment, as he has the floor——

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield the floor, because I have simply been trying to get the real spirit of this provision, and I think I have it now.

Mr. REED. Before the Senator from Iowa yields the floor I want to give him the information he has been seeking. I now have it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will be very glad to get it.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon, because he first addressed me, but I will yield immediately afterwards to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will permit me, I was going to give the Senator from Iowa information relative to the position of the department in reference to this matter by reading an extract from a letter from the Postmaster General bearing particularly on section 6. The portion of the letter referring to that reads as follows:

> The language of the proviso in section 6 is equivalent to an invitation to postal employees to organize for the purpose of securing compliance with their demands for improvements in conditions in the hours of labor and compensation therefor, either through Congress or the Post Office Department. That it is intended that this legislation shall make it possible for organization of postal employees to embarrass and hamper the operation of the service in any city throughout the country by calling a strike is inconceivable, and yet it is believed that taking the entire section as a whole such a contingency is not impossible. It is now the rule of the department, under an Executive order issued February 8, 1912, not to remove employees except for just cause, and to give every employee whose removal is recommended an opportunity to be heard. It is the practice to give such employee a copy of the charges in writing and to allow him a reasonable time (10 days) to submit his written defense and such evidence as he desires. Nor is the department opposed to the organization of postal employees, but, on the contrary, it has encouraged such associations so long as they are within the service, and has welcomed their recommendations for the improvement of the service and their own condition, and has done everything in its power to redress their grievances. It does not believe, however, that such associations should be permitted to affiliate with outside organizations that use the strike and the boycott as weapons. Under the first paragraph of section 6, should the employees in a post office, or of some branch of the service, decide to enforce their demands by calling a strike, either in their own interest or that of some outside organization, it would be necessary to give each one notice in writing of the charges against him and to wait a reasonable time for his reply. The consequence of a general strike in the postal service and the resulting paralysis of all business interests are too appalling to contemplate. It is believed, therefore, that the entire section should be stricken from the bill.

The committee did not strike out the entire section of the bill, but struck out the proviso. It had a series of hearings in reference to this matter. The representatives of the postal employees appeared before the committee, and the committee assumed in its action that was taken that the citizen thus employed has a constiutional right to appear before Congress or any Member of Congress or to petition Congress or any Member of Congress on anything appertaining to the general welfare of the country, as any citizen has that constitutional right. But it was believed by the committee that to recognize the right of the individual employee to go over the head of his superior and go to Members of Congress on matters appertaining to his own particular grievances, or for his own selfish interest, would be detrimental to the service itself; that it would absolutely destroy the discipline necessary for good service. The committee, I think, fully appreciated the rights of the employees and desired, as far as possible, to recognize those rights without the absolute destruction of the business in a coordinate branch of the Government.

I have also understood that the Committee on Civil Service, of which the Senator from Iowa is chairman, has this question up in connection with other matters in a study that he was making. Am I correct in that inference?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is correct. Unfortunately the committee has not been able to reach an agreement upon it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I heard aright the statement just read by the Senator from Oregon, that these employees are given hearings and are given an opportunity to reply to charges, then I want to say that if that is the rule in the Post Office Department now, it was not the rule a very few months ago in the particular case that came under my individual observation and under the observation at the same time of my colleague [Mr. STONE]. No such opportunity was given, and right in connection with the statements contained in this letter and in connection with the inquiry of the Senator from Iowa, I want to say that since I yielded the floor the following circular, which I understand to be the official circular of the Post Office Department, has been handed to me, and after I read a portion of it I shall send it to the desk to be incorporated in the RECORD:

Railway Mail Service.

(Third division.)

(Comprising Maryland (excluding the Eastern Shore), Virginia (excepting Accomac and Northampton Counties), West Virginia, North Carolina, and the District of Columbia.)

GENERAL ORDER.

[No. 2746. Washington, D. C., Mar. 28, 1911. Two pages.]

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Washington, D. C.

The general order is issued every Tuesday and Friday for the information and guidance of railway postal clerks and postmasters in the third division.

SECRET ORGANIZATIONS OF RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
DIVISION OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1911.

Mr. C. W. VICKERY,
Superintendent Railway Mail Service, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am sending you herewith a copy of a letter from the honorable Second Assistant Postmaster General in regard to the reported movement among the clerks to organize lodges of secret organizations in the service.

Please publish the same in your general orders for the information and guidance of the clerks.

Respectfully,

ALEXANDER GRANT,
General Superintendent.

Here is the letter or order:

OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, March 13, 1911.

Mr. ALEXANDER GRANT,
General Superintendent Division of Railway Mail Service.

SIR: Referring to the reports that postal clerks at various points are forming lodges of secret organizations of railway postal clerks, I desire that steps be taken at once to acquaint all in the service that such action is regarded as inimical to the interest of the Government. All clerks when they enter the service take an oath to well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office to which they are appointed and to perform all the duties required of them and to abstain from everything forbidden by the laws in relation to post offices and post roads. It is incompatible with their obligation to the department that they should assume another oath with a secret organization in the service which may at any time interfere with the obligations which they have assumed upon entering the service. This is not to be construed as interfering with any right which a clerk may have of acting personally and individually with reference to organizations outside of the postal service.

You are directed to advise all railway postal clerks as to these principles of employment and views here expressed, and that they shall be governed thereby.

Very respectfully, JOSEPH STEWART,
Second Assistant Postmaster General.

As I understand that, it does mean that the postal clerks of the United States shall not be permitted to form secret organizations, and that it is not limited to an inhibition of their right to form secret organizations which are affiliated with other labor organzations. I send the document to the Senator from Iowa, and I ask then that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BOURNE. The letter I read from is dated May 29, 1912. The order which the Senator read is dated March 28, 1911.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is perfectly clear, not only from the circular or the general order which has just been submitted by the Senator from Missouri, but from the letter of the Postmaster General, that the Post Office Department reserves to itself the right to pass upon the character of the organization to which the postal employee may belong, and without regard to whether it is an association composed wholly of employees or whether it is an association made up of citizens generally.

I do not intend to discuss the matter further now. I think the issue is very clearly made, and it is so clearly made that I, for one, would not be willing to see the first part of this provision stricken out, unless something else is substituted in its stead that would relieve us from the inference that we were willing to perpetuate the present policy of the Post Office Department. I, for one, am not, if it is correctly stated in the circular or the order or in the letter of the Postmaster General. I quite agree that there ought to be no organization of Government employees, whether in the Post Office Department or elsewhere, that would use or could use as a part of its instrumentalities the strike. If the Government can not settle its differences with its employees without the intervention of the strike, then the Government is a failure, and I have no doubt it can introduce other methods of dealing with such a subject. But that is very different from preserving a policy that gives to the Post Office Department the right to supervise the terms of the association or the articles of organization or the objects of the organization, and say that employees can not enter them unless they receive the approval of the Post Office Department.

Mr. BOURNE. As we have had a very long week, with long hours, and I presume Members of the Senate are pretty tired, after yielding to the Senator from New Hampshire, I shall make a motion that the Senate adjourn, to meet at 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. ASHURST. Will not the Senator from Oregon also yield to me to have an order entered for the printing of a document?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire first.

Mr. GALLINGER. The only purpose for which I rose was to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he make a request that the bill be reprinted, showing the amendments agreed to and the amendments which have been offered, so that we will have it before us.

Mr. BOURNE. I am very glad to make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be entered, as stated by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me to make a request?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

SPEECH OF HON. EDWARD T. TAYLOR.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I hold in my hand Senate Document No. 722, ordered to be printed on May 27, 1912. It was presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. It is the speech of Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado, in the House of Representatives on equal suffrage in Colorado. There is to be voted upon in Arizona at the next election a constitutional amendment granting the right of suffrage to the women of that State, and I ask unanimous consent that 5,000 copies of this speech may be reprinted as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly shall object to the Government printing any more copies of the speech made by Representative TAYLOR, and I do not believe that there is a Senator or a Representative who would agree to the Government printing them after his attention is called to the matter.

There have been very few occasions when speeches delivered in the Senate or in the House of Representatives have been printed as a public document. If we start printing speeches delivered in the Senate and in the House as public documents, and then order them reprinted by the thousands and tens of thousands to be paid for by the Government, I want to say to the Senate we shall have to have a new printing office with a new force, and it will take hundreds of thousands of dollars if the Government is to enter upon this system of printing speeches delivered in the Senate or House of Representatives.

I recognize the fact that the Senator from Arizona is interested in the subject, but——

Mr. ASHURST. I am interested.

Mr. SMOOT. But the speech has been made a public document, and I wish to say that if I had been in the Senate at the time the request was made I would have objected. The speech was delivered in the House of Representatives and printed in the RECORD. If any Senator or Representative wants extra copies, they can get them by paying for them. We have already made it a public document so that it can pass through the mails at the expense of the Government. As to the Government paying for printing public documents, if we open the door there will be no end to it. If this policy is adopted, whenever a speech is delivered in the Senate or House upon any subject that any organization in the country may want to have distributed, they will use this means to have it distributed at the public expense. This document can be sent through the mails already free of charge. If anyone wants to have additional copies printed——

Mr. NELSON. Is it not a fact that if it was a speech delivered in the other House it could be printed at the expense of the Member who delivered it?

Mr. SMOOT. I was just coming to that.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say further, if the Senator will allow me, that I have had occasion to circulate some of the speeches I have made, but I have never asked the Government to pay for them; I have myself paid for printing them.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have all done that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will just call the attention of the Senate——

Mr. ASHURST. I think Senators are under a misapprehension. It is not one of my speeches. I expect to pay for the printing and distribution of the speeches I inflict on the Senate and the public. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. If we should adopt such a policy, there will never be an end to it. Of course I would as soon have one of the Senator's speeches printed at the Government Printing Office and at the Government expense as the speech of any other Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I know that and thank the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. But the policy is wrong. I would ask the Senate not to grant a similar request made by any Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I make this request for the reason that another Senator made a similar request and permission was granted, and if the former publication was wrong my asking permission at this time to republish will accentuate the vice of former requests.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona and every other Senator that whenever a speech delivered in the Senate or the House of Representatives is asked to be printed as a public document to object to it, if I am not in the Chamber, because I say without hesitation it should not be.

I have had at least 20 Representatives approach me upon this identical subject, and when I have explained the situation to them there has not been a single one of them who did not say to me, "You are absolutely right."

I hope the Senator from Arizona, after the explanation I have made, will not insist upon his request.

Mr. ASHURST. I could not insist, Mr. President, after the Senator's statement.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to say, with reference to the request of the Senator from Arizona, that such a Senate document has already been printed at the request of a Senator. The Senator from Utah requested that a speech should be printed as a public document, and it was ordered printed. We should not make one rule for one side and not apply the same rule to the other side. If we are going to adopt a rule, let us apply it to both sides. It is not fair that the Senator from Utah should get up here and ask that a speech be printed as a Senate document, and when the Senator from Arizona makes the same request object to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator from Florida to put me in that position. This speech has been printed as a public document, and I have no objection whatever for any Senator to have it printed at his own expense and sent anywhere he desires under his frank. That privilege is already granted to the document. I wish to say to the Senator, as I said before, I would not care what Senator it was, if I had been in the Chamber when that request was made, I would have objected to printing it as a public document, and I ask every Senator hereafter to do the same.

Mr. STONE. I should like to inquire which side of the women's suffrage question this speech advocates?

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to inform the Senator from Missouri that I would not have asked for the publication of a Senate document in opposition to women's suffrage, as I am an advocate of women's suffrage.

Mr. STONE. I did not know the Senator was an advocate of it. That makes a difference.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want to be understood as objecting to the position taken by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, some days ago, on behalf of the ladies of my own State, I petitioned and supplicated the Senator from Utah to permit other copies of that speech to be printed. He then refused that permission, and the only recourse I had was to direct these ladies to his office; and I shall continue to so direct them hereafter.

Mr. SMOOT. And every other Senator can do exactly the same thing. I think I can convince the ladies that the request is absolutely wrong.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BOURNE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, August 12, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, without whom nothing is strong, nothing is pure, nothing enduring, since Thy laws are inexorable and Thy will is supreme. Increase our faith and confidence in Thee that we may be wise in our conceptions, firm in our convictions, that the purest, noblest instincts of our being may find their full fruition in obedience to the laws which Thou hast ordained, which express in full measure Thy will, and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the Journal is approved, I desire to say that in the reading of the Journal I did not hear whether it showed that last night at the evening session a point of no quorum was made and that the proceedings respecting that point of order were afterwards vacated. I notice from the RECORD that during the course of the evening session a point of no quorum was made.

The SPEAKER. The Journal clerk informs the Chair that all of those proceedings to which the gentleman refers were vacated and the proceedings were started de novo. The Journal does not show the vacating of the proceedings.

Mr. MANN. I wish to call attention to that fact.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think that that ought to be a part of the Journal?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a point of no quorum was made and the Chair, after counting, declared that no quorum was present. The RECORD shows that subsequently some one asked unanimous consent that all proceedings should be vacated. I am not very particular about what the Journal shows, but I wish to emphatically dissent from the idea that when the House finds itself without a quorum, the Chair having counted and declared there was no quorum present, that thereafter by unanimous consent that finding may be set aside until a quorum does appear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entirely correct, and all the proceedings that happened after that were in the nature of a mass meeting. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is what I think.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Journal ought to show what occurred, because the Chair has been as particular as anybody could be about not doing anything at all after the fact has appeared that there is no quorum present. Several times the Chair has been anxious to lay before the House reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills or a special request of a Member for leave of absence, but has never done it because he thinks the proceedings of the House and the Journal ought to be observed with the utmost integrity. The Chair has always believed that the RECORD itself ought to show exactly what happens in this House, and what is said in the House, and nothing else. The Journal will be corrected accordingly.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was approved.

JUDGMENT AND DECREES, UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 18017) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgment and decrees of the courts of the United States," with a Senate amendment thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the Senate amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment. It merely provides that the act shall take effect on January 1, and not before that time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MINORITY VIEWS, CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, GILL AGAINST CATLIN.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I present herewith the views of the minority in the contested election case of Patrick F. Gill against Theron E. Catlin, and ask that it be printed. (H. Rept. 1142, pt. 2.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents the views of the minority in the case of Gill against Catlin. It will be referred to the House Calendar and printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HUGHES of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of serious illness.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

LABOR LEGISLATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party, in its platform adopted at Denver four years ago, made a number of declarations and promises of legislative action favorable to labor and in the interest of the common people generally.

The present Democratic House of Representatives has redeemed every one of those pledges. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is, therefore, entitled to and should receive the earnest support of every person who is interested in human progress and the solution of the great problem that now confronts us, the problem of the proper distribution of the wealth that is created.

Human ingenuity has solved the problem of production. There is no longer any fear that the world will not be able to produce all that is necessary for the welfare and the comfort of all the people who are able and willing to work mentally or physically. The economic problem we now have to solve is the equitable distribution of the wealth which the physical and mental labor of man has produced. No one has, as yet, found a solution of the problem. Even the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER], who represents a party that claims to have discovered a way to solve the problem, has failed to present to Congress, either by bill or speech, any concrete plan for the consideration of the Members of this House. When our Socialist friends lay down as a premise for their line of reasoning that "every man is entitled to the full social equivalent of what his labor produces," there is not a man on either side of this House who will take exception to it.

Every man is entitled to the full social equivalent of what his labor produces, but the question naturally arises, How is the full social equivalent to be determined and who is to determine it? The Socialists contend that the only way in which a man can secure the full social equivalent of what his labor produces is for the people collectively to own all the means of production, distribution, and exchange; but even if the people owned collectively the machinery by which production, distribution, and exchange are conducted, the problem of what is the full social equivalent of what a man's labor produces would still remain. Take as an illustration a completed machine, like a locomotive engine. In that engine is the work of the geologist and prospector who located the mineral deposits used in the making of iron and steel; there is the work of the miner and mine laborer in the iron-ore mines, the coal mines, the limestone and feldspar quarries; the woodsman who cut the props used in the mines and ties used on the railroads, and the lumberman who sawed the timber; the railroad man who built and operated the railroad; the shipbuilder and seaman who built and operated the ships which carried the ore down the Great Lakes; the furnace man and the roller; the finisher, the pattern maker, the molder, the machinist, the buffer and polisher, the woodworker, and the common laborer; and, in addition to all of them, there is the skill of the manager and the genius of the inventor. All of these and many others have contributed toward the making of this completed machine ready for use. How is anyone going to determine what the full social equivalent is of the mental and physical labor that each man has contributed toward the building of the machine? Will the inventor receive during the balance of his life, as his share, all of the benefits which his improvement has produced? If his invention increases production in any given industry two or three fold, as has frequently been the case in the past, will all of the increase go to him? Will the manager receive all of the increase brought about by the skill of his management? If they do not, will they be receiving the full social equivalent of what their labor produces, and if they do, will they not be able to build up fortunes greater than has yet been dreamed of and have all the power over their fellows which comes from the possession of such great wealth?

And almost equally important with the question of how the division is to be made is the question of who is to make the division. Shall it be by one man with arbitrary power conveyed to him by the people? Shall it be by all of the people speaking through a referendum, or shall it be by industries, each industry having the power to determine the division for itself and the rate at which it will make exchanges with other industries?

Shall a majority, however small, have the power to say what the division shall be, taking the larger share to themselves and imposing a very much smaller share upon the members of a large minority?

Of still greater importance than the equal distribution of wealth is the question of how the collective control of all the means of production, distribution, and exchange will affect the individual liberty of the people. Will it destroy man's individuality, his initiative, and his independence? Will it subordinate man's intelligence to the dictations, whims, and caprices of some bureau created with power to direct? I do not know how others may feel, but I would rather live on the poorest fare with which life can be sustained and retain my freedom than to live on the fat of the land and be a slave. [Applause.]

These questions have not yet been answered by the Socialist Party, or any of its members, and until they do answer them they can not lay claim to having discovered a method by which the problem of distribution can be solved. While the final solution of the problem has not yet been discovered, every step that is taken, either in the economic field or by legislative action which gives the workers on the farm, in the mine, and the shop the opportunity of securing a larger share of the things their labor has produced, is a step in the direction of the solution of the problem of distribution.

The present House of Representatives has been the most progressive in that line in the history of our country. The first great step taken by this House was when it adopted the present rules of the House and provided that the House itself should select the members of the respective committees and the chairmen thereof instead of leaving it in the hands of the Speaker, who thereby became master of the legislative situation and could dominate Congress at will. By that change alone the lid was lifted from the various committees of the House, and bills were reported and placed upon the calendar in accordance with the judgment of those committees, and the House became a representative body having the privilege of expressing its views upon all questions of vital interest to the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What a change has taken place! The tariff has been considered schedule by schedule separately, each schedule being dealt with purely upon its merit.

The Republican contention that a protective tariff is necessary in order to protect the American wageworker no longer finds sympathetic response in the bosoms of intelligent workingmen. They know now that American wageworkers are the most productive workers in the world, and that the only means by which they have been able to secure even a reasonable share of what their labor produces has been through the power of their labor unions. [Applause.]

The policy of the Republican Party has been to build up a high protective or prohibitive tariff, in order that the employers of labor might be able to sell their goods at exorbitant prices to the consumer, and then depend on the generosity of the employer to give a share of that exorbitant price to the men whom he employs.

The miserable wages paid by the trust in the highly protected woolen industry, as shown by the hearings in the investigation of the Lawrence strike, and the conditions under which the men in the steel industry work 12 hours per day, 7 days per week, with barely enough wages in return to keep soul and body together, has demonstrated to the American wageworker the fallacy of the Republican claims and he can no longer be deceived by the campaign cry of "protection to American labor." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

He knows that everything he has to buy for his little household has been increased in price by virtue of these high and prohibitive tariffs, while the only thing he has to sell—his labor power—is sold in a market that has free trade with all the world except China. The difference between the wages he receives for producing an article and the price he must pay for the same article when bought upon the market are the profits which have gone to make multimillionaires more rapidly than has ever been known in the history of the world.

But these measures are not looked upon as being purely labor measures, although they will, if enacted into law, greatly benefit every man, woman, and child in the country who is not a member of a trust. There are many other measures which have been passed by this House which will benefit all of the people, including wageworkers. Among these are the excise bill, providing a tax upon incomes, so that the wealth of the country will bear a greater share of the burdens of the Government than it has heretofore borne.

The constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people will make the United States Senator more responsive to the will of the people.

The publicity bill, so that everyone may know before the election takes place who are are the contributors to the campaign expenses of their representatives.

The parcel-post clause in the Post Office appropriation bill and the provision for the selection of a committee to investigate and report upon a definite plan of parcel post and postal express, so as to bring the rural population into closer touch with the towns to the mutual benefit of both. [Applause.]

But I have not started out for the purpose of discussing these questions of general benefit, though they are interesting and important, but for the purpose of pointing out why, in my judgment, the wageworkers of the United States should cast their lot in the coming campaign with the Democratic Party and elect a Democratic Congress and a Democratic President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I desire to present a résumé of the work accomplished by the present House of Representatives in the interest of the wageworkers. In doing so, I would not detract one iota from the credit due to the gentlemen on the other side of the House who have supported any or all of these measures. They are deserving of the highest praise for rising above the policy of their party. But if their party had still been in power and their leaders still sitting on the lid of the committees, as they have done for the preceding 16 years, they would not have had an opportunity of voting upon these bills.

Among the bills recognized as labor measures passed by this House are—

First. The eight-hour bill, extending the operations of the eight-hour law to work done for the Government as well as work done by the Government.

It has been said on the floor of this House that the labor measures we have passed would not give an additional sandwich to any wageworker. This act alone will reduce the hours of labor of hundreds of thousands of workmen, directly or indirectly employed by or for the Government, giving greater opportunity for rest, recreation, and mental development to those who are affected by it. It will do more than that. While men working an eight-hour work day can naturally be more efficient per hour than when working 10 hours, it has never been contended that men can accomplish as much in 8 hours as they can in 10. The shortening of the work day therefore means the giving of employment to thousands of those who are now among the unemployed, giving them an opportunity of earning a livelihood which they do not now have, and that means not only a sandwich, but a full meal.

Second. The children's bureau bill, to promote the welfare of children and to devise means whereby the necessities of the parents can not be used to retard the development of the children, who are the citizens of to-morrow.

Third. The anti-injunction bill, to protect workingmen during the period of trade disputes, and to give to them the same protection in the courts that other men enjoy. For more than 30 years there has been a tendency on the part of the equity courts to assume legislative power and to declare by injunction certain acts to be criminal during labor disputes that are not criminal at other times, and then try men for committing these crimes without the protection of a trial by jury. That is contrary to the spirit of Democracy, and this House has put its stamp of disapproval on such usurpation on the part of the courts by the passage of the anti-injunction bill.

Fourth. The contempt bill, to provide a trial by jury in the cases of indirect contempt when the acts alleged to have been committed in violation of the orders of the court are of a criminal character, which would otherwise be tried by a judge and jury in our law courts.

Fifth. The Department of Labor bill, creating a department with a Secretary who shall be a member of the President's Cabinet, and who shall have the power of mediation in trade disputes and the right to appoint counciliators in such cases when, in his judgment, it is wise to do so, and while his good offices may be used for the purpose of bringing the contending parties together, he shall have no power to enforce his own views upon either of them.

Sixth. The industrial-commission bill to investigate the entire subject of industrial relations between employer and employee, with a view of ascertaining the best methods of dealing with industrial disputes, so as to protect the rights of all persons directly or indirectly interested.

Seventh. The investigation of the Taylor and other systems of so-called scientific shop management in order that the workingman might be protected against speeding up beyond his normal power. It can not be said that the interests of capital and labor are identical, but they have a mutual interest in securing the largest possible production with the same expenditure of labor. It is only when it comes to a division of that which has been produced that their interests diverge. That is true scientific shop management which secures a larger production with the same expenditure of labor power. The manager who can not secure a proper amount of production without speeding up his workmen beyond a normal and safe rate is not even an efficient manager, let alone a scientific one, and can only be classed as a man driver.

Eighth. The seamen's bill to give freedom to the seamen, provide a standard of skill for seamanship, promote safety of travel at sea, and equalize the operating expenses of foreign vessels with American vessels, so as to build up an American merchant marine without resorting to subsidies.

Ninth. The convict-labor bill requiring the sale of convict-made goods to conform to the laws relative to convict-made goods in the States in which they are sold. There are many States which provide by their laws that all prison-made goods shall be branded as such, and yet when these goods have been made in one State and shipped into another for sale they have not been branded in accordance with the laws of the State into which they have been shipped; customers have been deceived, and an unfair competition maintained with the products of free labor. This bill will remedy that defect and remove a part of this illegitimate competition with free workmen and the manufacturers who employ them.

Tenth. The Bureau of Mines bill, to widen the scope of the Bureau of Mines so that it may be better able to develop methods of preventing accidents in mines and have greater efficiency in rescue work when accidents occur, not only in the coal-mining industry, but in the mineral and miscellaneous mines as well.

Eleventh. The dredge workers' eight-hour bill, to remedy a decision of the Supreme Court that men engaged in dredging work in our rivers and harbors are not laborers and mechanics, but seamen, and therefore did not come within the provisions of the general eight-hour law.

Twelfth. An eight-hour provision included in the fortification bill to apply to civilians engaged in the manufacture of ordnance and powder for the Government.

Thirteenth. An eight-hour provision in the Post Office appropriation bill for post-office clerks and letter carriers.

Fourteenth. An eight-hour provision in the naval appropriation bill making the eight-hour workday apply to workmen employed under the current appropriations.

Fifteenth. A provision in the Post Office appropriation bill removing from post-office employees the gag rule which has been applied by Executive order, issued by President Roosevelt and broadened by President Taft. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This provision would make it possible for postal employees to bring their grievances to Congress without fear of being discharged for doing so. It seems strange, but it is nevertheless true, that Theodore Roosevelt, who has been traveling over the country for months parading himself as the friend of the common people, the farmer, and the wageworker, was the first President of the United States to issue an Executive order denying to the wageworkers employed by the Government the right of petitioning Congress for redress of their grievances unless their petitions had been passed upon and received the approval or consent of the heads of the departments, who may have been responsible for the grievances complained of.

Sixteenth. The phosphorus-match bill to protect the health of workers in the match industry.

Seventeenth. The bill to extend the provisions of the compensation-for-injury act to the employees of the Bureau of Mines.

Eighteenth. The bill to give to official papers of trades unions and fraternal organizations second-class mail privileges.

Nineteenth. A provision in the naval appropriation bill requiring all coal purchased for the use of the Navy to be mined on an eight-hour workday.

Twentieth. The masters and mates' bill to reduce the hours of masters and mates, making it impossible to require them to continue on duty for indefinite periods, as has been the case in the past. It has been shown by the testimony before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee that masters and mates have frequently been required to work 24 hours, and in some instances as high as 60 hours, continuously without a rest. This policy endangers the lives and property intrusted to their care. The bill passed by this House fixes the employment of masters and mates at 9 hours while in a safe harbor and to 12 hours while at sea, a restriction which everyone must admit is in the interest of safety as well as of humane treatment to masters and mates.

Never before in the history of Congress has such a great record been made in the way of progress or for the protection of the great mass of the common people. Yet this position is not a new one for the Democratic Party.

The first eight-hour law ever presented to Congress was introduced by Hon. A. J. Rogers, a Democrat from New Jersey, on February 19, 1866. It was not until two and one-half years later, after the bill had been vigorously championed by Representative Holman and Senator Voorhees, both Democrats from Indiana, that the law was passed providing that—> eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics now employed or who may hereafter be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

In March, 1878, the eight-hour law had become a dead letter, as is shown by the following extract from Circular No. 8 of the Navy Department, dated March 21, 1878. It said:

> All workmen electing to labor 10 hours a day will receive a proportionate increase in their wages.

Relying upon that circular many of them worked 10 hours per day, and yet they were never paid the proportionate increase in their wages which they had been promised. On April 21, 1879, Hon. John Goode, Democrat, of Virginia, offered a joint resolution in the House of Representatives for the enforcement of the eight-hour law. It was reported from the House Committee on Education and Labor with a favorable recommendation. When the resolution came up for consideration, on motion of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, the resolution was laid upon the table. On January 5, 1892, Hon. J. O'Neill, of Missouri, a Democrat, introduced an eight-hour bill, which was referred to the House Committee on Labor. On May 3, 1892, John C. Tarsney, a Democrat, reported a substitute for the O'Neill bill, which was passed by the House on July 1, 1892, and it became a law on August 1, 1892.

The eight-hour legislation passed by the present House is supplemental to that law, making the eight-hour legislation applying to the Government work of the United States the most complete of its kind existing anywhere.

The Committee on Labor was added to the list of committees of the House by the Democrats in 1883. The bill to create a national Bureau of Labor was passed by a Democratic House in 1884 and became a law in 1885. The bill to make Labor Day a legal national holiday was passed by a Democratic Congress in 1894. The bills granting 15 days and then 30 days' leave of absence with pay each year to the employees of the Government Printing Office were first introduced by Representative Matson, a Democrat of Indiana.

A great deal has been said during the present Congress on the subject of immigration. Up until 1864 the immigration to the United States was voluntary, and the oppressed of all nations could find an asylum here. In a letter dated March 30, 1864, addressed to the House Committee on Immigration, Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, said:

With abundance of capital and inexhaustible supplies of material, we want only cheaper labor and skill to establish our manufacturing interests on a firm and enduring foundation.

Note the language well, for in it is found the basis of the policy which the Republican Party has followed since that time. A high protective tariff to enable the manufacturers to sell their wares at high prices and then cheaper labor to reduce their cost of production. In July, 1864, immediately after the statement just quoted had been made by the Secretary of State, Hon. John Sherman, Republican, of Ohio, introduced a bill which became a law legalizing the importation of foreign labor under contract. With the passage of that law a change took place in the personnel of the immigration coming to the United States. It is true that thousands still came to this country for the purpose of seeking an asylum from the oppressive conditions existing in their native lands, but for every thousand who came for that purpose there were tens of thousands who were brought here under contract for the purpose of furnishing cheaper labor for the manufacturers at the expense of the American workingman. Through the impetus received under the operations of that law they still continue to come, not merely by the thousands but by the millions. Each additional shipload landed in the United States adds to the keenness of competition amongst the workers. Those who come are not only the competitors of native Americans but are competitors for the same job with millions of foreign subjects and naturalized citizens who have preceded them. To meet that situation Representative Foran, a Democrat of Ohio, in 1884 introduced a bill which was passed by a Democratic House and afterwards became a law, prohibiting the importation of labor under contract. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There have been many criticisms of Gov. Wilson, the Democratic candidate for President, because of his alleged position on the labor question in his writings. Extracts from them have been taken, garbled, and misconstrued, and a wrong interpretation placed upon them. But actions speak louder than words, and the American workingman is more interested in the acts of Mr. Wilson in his executive capacity as governor of the State of New Jersey than they are in any academic discussion he may have entered into in the past. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

For years the State of New Jersey has been noted as the home of corporations created by the masters of frenzied finance. The State has been dominated by "big business." In that condition Gov. Wilson found it, and in the brief time he has been governor of the State he has, by proper primary laws, restored to the people the power to control their own public affairs. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He has given the wage-workers more favorable legislation than they had ever secured before in any like period in that State. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Among the many beneficial laws affecting workmen enacted during Gov. Wilson's administration have been the following:

Chapter 24: Fire escape law, amending factory laws and placing New Jersey in the vanguard of States in the protection of workers in factories and workshops.
Chapter 42: Regulating employment agencies and licensing the same.
Chapter 94: Making a misdemeanor the improper influencing of labor representatives or foremen.
Chapter 95: Employers' liability and compensation act.
Chapter 136: Prohibiting the employment of children in mercantile establishments during school hours; providing for a 58-hour week, and prohibiting children under 16 years to work between the hours of 7 p. m. and 7 a. m.
Chapter 198: Appointment of commissioners on old-age pensions and old-age insurance.
Chapter 206: Providing for the safety and health of foundry workers by minimizing drafts and doing away with noxious gases, etc., by exhaust fans in foundries in the State.
Chapter 210: Increasing factory inspectors by the number of 6 (making in all a total of 17), for the better enforcement of factory and workshops laws.
Chapter 243: Eight-hour day on State, county, and municipal work.
Chapter 273: Providing for at least one-half-hour mealtime after six continuous hours of labor.
Chapter 307: A plumber's license act.
Chapter 327: Providing for sanitation in bakeshops, etc., and also compelling the licensing of same.
Chapter 363: Prohibiting the employment of persons under 21 years in first-class cities and under 18 years in second-class cities as telephone or telegraph messengers between the hours of 10 p. m. and 5 a. m.
Chapter 371: A semimonthly pay act for railroad employees.
Chapter 372: Eliminating contract labor in penal institutions and providing for a State-use system.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The facts I have stated relative to the history of labor legislation, the activities of this House, and the official acts of the Democratic candidate for President upon questions favorably affecting labor constitute a record of which both the party and its candidate may well feel proud. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Every one of those steps is a step in the direction of the solution of the problem of distribution and exchange. They are not merely promises made for the purpose of securing votes, but acts which speak for themselves, many of them made without any previous promise of fulfillment.

Compare this record with the promises of the Progressive candidate for President, Mr. Roosevelt, viewed in the light of his seven years' occupancy of the presidential chair, where he neither advanced nor attempted to advance the principles relative to labor which he now claims to stand for; where he issued the gag-rule Executive order, fostered the open-shop policy, which every workingman knows means the nonunion shop, and declared against labor's appeal for relief from the unjust and improper use of the writ of injunction by the equity courts.

Compare this record with the record of the Republican candidate for President, the present incumbent, Mr. Taft, who since he issued his first writ of injunction against workingmen during a strike has never had a sympathetic understanding of the needs and rights of the American wageworker. Yet it must be said to his credit that he has made no great claims in that direction. He has stood with his party in its determination to promote the interests of "big business" at the expense of the rest of the people. For a brief time only he wavered on the tariff question. During the campaign four years ago he declared for the revision of the tariff downward. Later he announced that some of the schedules in the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill were indefensible, but he is again back in the fold, standing with his party on that issue.

Compare the promises of these candidates with the record of achievements of the Democratic House and the Democratic candidate for President and you can not evade the conclusion that the Democratic Party is the party of progress, moving forward step by step, as the way becomes clear, to the solution of the great problems which confront mankind [applause on the Democratic side]; moving forward to a condition where swollen fortunes, gathered together through the sweat and worry and privation of the men, women, and children of labor, will be impossible; where poverty will be unknown and those willing to work will be able to secure comfortable homes, all the clothing and food they need or desire, and equal opportunities for themselves and their children for rest, recreation, and mental development with every other person in the land. Yes; I have dreams of the future with its ideal condition of the brotherhood of man, but I hope I shall never allow those dreams to interfere with my efforts to deal properly with the practical necessities of the present. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The great bulk of the American wageworkers who have studied the question take the same position, and it is with a knowledge of that fact that I have an abiding faith that they will in the coming campaign, in overwhelming numbers, cast their lot with the Democratic Party and its candidate for President, Woodrow Wilson. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

TARIFF LEGISLATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WEBB). In accordance with the order made yesterday, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] for 25 minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, in November, 1910, the people of the United States elected a Democratic majority to this House. The last Democratic House had been elected in 1892. The Republican Party, therefore, for 16 years was in continuous control in the House of Representatives. It might be well to bear in mind just here that a majority in the Senate, and the President as well, during that entire time were of the same political faith.

It is not my purpose to-day to review the legislation of those 16 years of continuous power of our political opponents, but I do propose to review briefly the record of this House of Representatives.

LEGISLATION UNDER OLD RÉGIME.

It is very probable that the rules under which this House enacted legislation during the aforesaid 16 years had much to do with the determination on the part of the people as expressed at the polls in November, 1910. Complaint was widespread; indeed it was well-nigh universal. The Speaker was charged with being an autocrat. It was charged and not denied that a Rules Committee of five, of which he was the chairman, absolutely controlled the fate of all legislation in this body. The individuality of each Member accounted for little. No matter what his convictions, no matter what his experience, no matter how closely the individual Member attended to his duties, all his efforts to secure legislation amounted to nothing unless he could secure the approval of the all-powerful Committee on Rules.

And right here I shall stop to remind the country that, in the last analysis of things, the Speaker himself was the Committee on Rules. The great power which he exercised gave him such a dominating influence that he was easily able to control the majority membership of this all-powerful body of men. It was repeatedly charged and but feebly denied that the House of Representatives had ceased to be a deliberative body. Those of us who served under that régime can never forget how, day after day, delegations representing large bodies of American citizens appeared before the Speaker appealing to him that this or that particular measure should have consideration by the House.

This condition of one-man rule continued until the House of Representative had ceased to perform its functions as contemplated by the Constitution. It was no longer a representative body. It was here to register the will of one man—the Speaker of the House. It had sunk to that point where, instead of being considered with respect by the American people, it was considered with ridicule and almost, one might say, with contempt. In the light of subsequent events it is not surprising that the people of the Nation decided to make a change. To-day no man charges that the Speaker is all powerful. He enjoys very little patronage. He neither appoints the committees of the House nor attempts to control legislation. Enjoying the respect and esteem of both sides of the Chamber, he is content to perform his duties as the presiding officer of this body, leaving the fate of legislation to the respective committees and to the membership of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is not a chairman on any one of the great committees who does not wield more power with respect to the fate of legislation than the Speaker of the House.

Our opponents made dire predictions as to the result of this reform. We were told that the House could legislate only with great difficulty if the powers which the Speaker enjoyed under the Republican régime were taken away. We were told that the people of the Nation expected the House to do business, to legislate rapidly; that time should not be wasted in debate; that measures must be forced through by whip and spur, in some instnaces without debate at all; that the membership of the House was too large to take away from the Speaker this autocratic power. I venture to assert to-day that not one of the dire predictions made has come to pass. [Applause.]

The record of legislation passed by this House is certainly larger than that of any House of which I have been a Member, and, if nothing else had been accomplished, I venture to say that this reform alone is sufficient to justify the action of the American people at the ballot box in November, 1910. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the great issue between the two parties is the manner in which import duties shall be levied. I shall not detain the House with a discussion of the several tariff bills which have been vetoed by the President or which have passed this body. But I do assert that the pledge of our party to pass certain bills reducing the tariff gradually toward a revenue basis has been fulfilled. Several bills which have been passed received the support not only of this side of the Chamber, but of that side as well. Bills have been passed revising and reducing the metal schedule, the chemical schedule, the woolen schedule, and the cotton schedule, and those in charge of these measures have been careful to report supplemental measures providing revenue to reimburse the Treasury for any revenue it might lose by reason of the enactment of this legislation. It would require too much time to review all of this legislation to-day. Indeed, such review is hardly necessary when one remembers the strong presentation of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and other Members of this House in setting forth reasons for the action taken.

ARE WAGES INCREASED BY HIGH TARIFF?

There is, however, just one contention of our political opponents which I would like to discuss briefly. Of course we have all heard for a generation the time-worn Republican cry: "Protection for American labor." This slogan is being worked to-day for all it is worth. During the debates on the respective tariff measures passed by this House and elsewhere the workers of the Nation have been repeatedly warned that the wages they receive are dependent upon the amount of protection against foreign competition afforded by law to the manufacturer. Surely by this time the American workingman has become convinced of the utter fallacy and hypocrisy of this contention. The rate of wages he receives never has depended upon the amount of tariff protection enjoyed by his employer. Such is not the case to-day. If any additional evidence were necessary, it can be found in the hearings before the Rules Committee of this House on the Lawrence strike.

I confess to you, Mr. Speaker, that hearing was a revelation to me. I confess to you that I did not dream such a condition could exist among American workingmen in any line of industry. I had heard this Republican contention so long, I had seen so many bright pictures of prosperity and contentment in the home of the American workingman painted before my very eyes by advocates of the protection cause in Congress and elsewhere, that no one could have induced me to believe that such a condition could exist anywhere as was developed by the hearings on the Lawrence strike.

Here was a great corporation engaged in the woolen manufacture, enjoying all the protection that anyone could ask, enjoying absolute immunity from all competition; yet I venture to assert that nowhere in the United States could there be found the same number of working men, women, and children so poorly paid, surrounded by so few of the comforts of life, as the men, women, and children who were in the employ of this corporation.

I was a member of the Ways and Means Committee when the Payne bill became a law. This same corporation—the American Woolen Trust—had its representative in Washington protesting against any reduction in duties in Schedule K. Those who wish to be put in possession of all the facts should first read the testimony of Mr. William Whitman before the Ways and Means Committee of the Sixty-first Congress, and then read the hearings before the Committee on Rules on House resolutions 409 and 433. Any fair-minded man who will read all of these hearings will, I think, come to two conclusions:

First, that this corporation—the American Woolen Co.—enjoys a protection so high that, practically speaking, all competition is cut off; a protection so high that it has been enabled to make enormous profits; a protection so high that its stock has been largely increased out of the profits of the company.

Second, that this selfsame trust pays a scale of wages to those in its employ so low that they are not even able to buy the necessaries of life, to say nothing of the comforts.

Every voter in the land who loves justice and who despises oppression should read the hearings before mentioned before the Rules Committee. Mr. Speaker, here were men, women, and children who told us that their wages were so low that they could not provide themselves with comfortable clothing in the winter. Few of them knew what it was to be provided with decent clothing at any time. Not only this, but with one accord these people testified that their wages were so low that, as a rule, they lived on bread and sirup, except one day in seven.

I was struck with the testimony of Miss Margaret Sanger. I shall not ask the House to accept my interpretation of her evidence; I shall quote from the hearings themselves. But I want to say to you in advance that the things I shall quote were not disputed, so far as I now recollect. By way of preface, I will remark that conditions in Lawrence were such that numbers of parents were willing and glad to send their children to kind friends in other cities, who had agreed to take care of them while the strike lasted. Some two or three hundred children were therefore sent to New York and Philadelphia.

I shall only pause here to wonder why it was the authorities of the town attempted to prevent the departure of these children. Suffice it to say that such an attempt was made. Why any person in authority should countenance such absurd and senseless action is a mystery which has never been explained.

It was my privilege, Mr. Speaker, to partially conduct the examination of Miss Sanger, from which I quote the following (p. 226, Hearings on House resolutions 409 and 433):

Mr. POU. You are from New York, are you?
Miss SANGER. Yes.
Mr. POU. You were instrumental in taking a number of children away from Lawrence, were you not?
Miss SANGER. Yes.
Mr. POU. I will be obliged to you if you will just go ahead and state in your own way what took place.
Miss SANGER. Well, I helped to take the first section of children, when there was no difficulty in getting them away. We brought them to New York and gave them supper; we took them to the Labor Temple, where people were waiting to take them to their homes; there they had a supper and they were distributed, and that was all there was to that.
Mr. POU. Did you talk with those children about their manner of living in Lawrence and about the food they got?
Miss SANGER. Yes, sir; I am a trained nurse, and I was especially interested in the condition of the children.
Mr. POU. Now, as a rule, is it true that the children of the working people in Lawrence—the class we are investigating now—only got meat once a week?
Miss SANGER. Those were the assertions of not only the children but of the parents that I interviewed.
Mr. FOSTER. How long were you in Lawrence?
Miss SANGER. I was only there one night.
Mr. FOSTER. You say you are a trained nurse?
Miss SANGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. And what was the physical appearance of these children that you took to New York? You know something about how they should look. Were they properly nourished?

Miss SANGER. Well, the condition of those children was the most horrible that I have ever seen.

Mr. FOSTER. Tell the committee something about how they looked.

Miss SANGER. In the first place, there were four little children who had chicken pox that we kept there; we would not allow them to go away; and then one of the children had just gotten over chicken pox, and the father begged us to let the child come; he had one 2 years old and another 3½ years old, I believe, and he begged us to let those children come, because he was a widower and had no wife or anyone to take care of these children; he left them with the neighbors during the day. So I took these little children and we isolated them on the way to New York and when we got there they were placed under the doctor's care. All of these children were walking about there apparently not noticing chicken pox or diphtheria; one child had diphtheria and had been walking around, and no attention paid to it at all, and had been working up to the time of the strike. Out of the 119 children 4 of them had underwear on and it was the most bitter weather; we had to run all the way from the hall to the station in order to keep warm; and only four had underwear.

Mr. FOSTER. You say only four had underwear?

Miss SANGER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the character of their outer clothing; was it woolen?

Mr. STANLEY. Were the people working in a woolen mill?

Miss SANGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STANLEY. Where they make underwear?

Miss SANGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. How about the outer clothing?

Miss SANGER. It was almost in rags; their coats were eaten off as though they were simply worn to shreds.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it woolen clothing?

Miss SANGER. No, sir; I do not think any one of them had on any woolen clothing—that is, to my own knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. What was their color? Did they seem to be well nourished?

Miss SANGER. They were very much emaciated; every child there showed the effects of malnutrition and all of them, or almost all of them, according to the doctor's certificate that night, had adenoids and enlarged tonsils. They were all examined at the station. We had a little time in the morning and they were examined before they left.

Mr. FOSTER. They all looked pale and thin?

Miss SANGER. Yes. I would like to say that when they had this supper it would bring tears to your eyes to see them grab the meat with their hands and eat it.

Mr. FOSTER. They ate the meat as though they really enjoyed it?

Miss SANGER. Yes; decidedly.

Mr. FOSTER. And you say that there were only 4 out of the 119 that had any underclothing?

Miss SANGER. Yes, sir; and it was the bitterest weather we have had this year.

Mr. FOSTER. And the outer clothing was ragged?

Miss SANGER. In rags. I think perhaps 20 of them had overcoats.

Mr. FOSTER. What kind of shoes did they have?

Miss SANGER. Almost on the ground, except some of the older girls, who had been working in the mills, they had better shoes; but the little ones, who had to depend on others, were in a most deplorable condition.

Mr. FOSTER. Did they have on woolen stockings?

Miss SANGER. I do not think any of them had a bit of wool on their bodies.

Mr. FOSTER. And yet working in woolen mills?

Miss SANGER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Kindly read the letter I now hand you to the committee.

Miss SANGER (reading):

NEW YORK, February 1, 1912.

To whom it may concern:

We, undersigned Italian doctors invited to make a preliminary physical examination of the Lawrence strikers' children, verified that all children were of poor physical build, defective, and underfed. The majority of them had enlarged glands; throat, nose, eyes defective and affected. All were poorly clad, even against the rigor of the season.

(And signed by six physicians.)

The CHAIRMAN. Can you read their names?

Miss SANGER. Diamede Petilex, M. D., 56 Mulberry Street; Dr. Exore Jeseau, 175 Worth Street; Dr. Alfredo de Filipi, 56 Mott Street; Dr. Rocco Bellantoni, 373 Broome Street; Dr. J. Loquito, 200 Grand Street, New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that refer to the same children of whom you have been speaking?

Miss SANGER. Yes, sir.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that this statement of Miss Sanger was corroborated by numerous other witnesses. We had before us some 30 or 40 of the employees of the American Woolen Co.; probably there were 20 children present. Never in my entire life have I seen the same number of little boys and girls with a look of hopelessness and suffering so plainly written on their little faces. One had but to look at them to realize at once that they were poorly fed and poorly clothed; that they were accustomed to suffering; that they knew nothing of the joy of childhood; and one was led to wonder how it was possible to expect that these little children could ever develop into normal men and women. They were starting out their poor little lives handicapped; not one of them had anything like an equal chance in the struggle of life. And one was forced to believe that somebody was to be blamed, that something was radically wrong somewhere, when the most highly protected trust in the Nation paid its employees a scale of wages which absolutely deprived them of most of the common necessities of life.

I wish I had time to read more of the evidence which was adduced before the Rules Committee. It is almost enough to wring tears from the eyes of the hardest-hearted man. There were little children barefooted in the cold winter. It will not do to say any other cause except the direst necessity of their parents left them so, because when a man is getting remunerative wages the first person he is going to provide with the comforts of life is his own little child. If there is anything in the world that stimulates man's better self and points him up the way that leads to God, it is the little children that spring up about his feet. Any man who has the instincts of a human being in his heart is going to see that they, first of all, are provided with the comforts of life as well as the necessities. He will deny himself, he may deny his wife, but there is one person of all others that is not going to be denied anything he has the money to pay for, and that is his little helpless child.

I think it would be well right here to refer to the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the Sixtieth Congress. On page 5376 I read the following from the examination of Mr. William Whitman, who was, I believe, at that time at the head of this great corporation; at any rate, he was its representative before the Ways and Means Committee. [Reading:]

Mr. COCHRAN. Now, we have arrived at a common point. You have $12,000,000 of tangible, actual property worth intrinsically $12,000,000, and you put in $4,840,000 in cash, so the difference between those figures represents the accumulated profits?

Mr. WHITMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCHRAN. You are paying dividends at the rate of 8 per cent, not merely on $4,840,000 cash that you put in, but on the six millions; is not that so?

Mr. WHITMAN. Yes, sir. We pay dividends on the capital stock, and we have been paying 8 per cent.

On page 5347 I also find the following: [Reading:]

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not quite understand one part of your testimony. I understand you to say that you have now exclusive control of the American market. I mean the producers of flannels and blankets.

Mr. WHITMAN. Of blankets, practically.

Mr. COCHRAN. They have practically exclusive control of the American market?

Mr. WHITMAN. Yes.

In the light of this testimony, Mr. Speaker, as compared with the testimony of Miss Sanger and other witnesses before the Rules Committee in the recent hearings, we begin to get a little insight into the true condition of affairs.

Here is a corporation which one of its officers declares is worth $12,000,000 when only $4,840,000 had actually been paid in. Where did the other $7,160,000 come from? Certainly the head of the concern and his board of directors could not sit in their office and convert $4,840,000 into $12,000,000. Good management on their part, no doubt, helped to bring about this result, but in the last analysis they were enabled to bring about such result only through the instrumentality of the hundreds of workers employed in their mills.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to consider this picture. Here is the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in session. The head of the American Woolen Co. is testifying. He is telling the members of that committee that his company has $12,000,000 of tangible, actual property; that that property is intrinsically worth $12,000,000; that his company is paying 8 per cent on $6,000,000; that only $4,840,000 has been paid in cash. Already enjoying a protection ranging from 50 to nearly 200 per cent, he is protesting against any reduction.

And, behold! I now show you another picture. Here is the cottage of one of the workers in Lawrence, Mass., a little 5-room cottage, for which the worker is paying from $8 to $10 per month. The head of the family is receiving between $9 and $10 per week wages. Around his table at mealtime is gathered his family—his wife and his little children. It is a cold, bleak winter day. Not one of them is provided with woolen clothing. With naked feet some of them have come home over the frozen ground. Not one of them is provided with a good overcoat. In rags, cold and shivering, suffering and hungry, they come to their everyday meal. And what does it consist of? I speak not upon my own authority but upon the authority of the undisputed evidence of the witnesses examined in that hearing. Common, coarse bread and sirup; not so much as an ounce of meat; not a single little dainty or relish is found upon the table. Bread and sirup, bread and sirup, bread and sirup forever, except one day in seven when the very cheapest meat that can be bought at the market is served upon the table.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, this is the sort of protection that the Republican Party has given to the workers of this Nation. The contention is and always has been a fallacy and a humbug, and it is time that the conscience of the Nation were awakened to the true condition of affairs. Some of these people were induced to come to this country with fair promises. Postal cards were sent throughout southern Europe with a picture of a factory and a bank; a great stream of people was shown struggling to get into the bank to deposit their surplus earnings, the wages promised were so high. But when these unfortunate people, knowing nothing of our language or customs, being little less than slaves, were brought to this country, they found that it was bread and sirup forever—bread and sirup with no warm clothing; that they were even made to pay for their drinking water while they worked in the mills. And yet the representatives of this corporation will tell you to-day that they can not do business if the rate of duties under Schedule K is reduced. They will tell you they can not maintain the "American scale" of wages if you tamper with the duties levied; they will tell the American workingman that the protection of the Republican Party protects him first of all. The answer to it all is found in the evidence taken before the Rules Committee. I dare say that if the investigation had been extended, all this talk about the high wages paid in other lines of industry would be found to be a delusion and a sham.

It is not pleasant to talk about this condition of affairs. As Americans we all ought to be ashamed of it. No man should for one minute continue in a political party which preaches such heresy. In the coming campaign, I am glad to say, it will be the paramount issue. We will know whether the American people are to be humbugged and duped longer. The truth is, the manufacturer gets his labor just as cheap as he reasonably can and he sells the output of his mills just as high as he can. Anybody but a lunatic knows that this is so. It is the way men have always acted and probably always will act.

Mr. Speaker, it is admitted on all sides that Schedule K is indefensible. Mr. Taft has said so more than once. It is hard to find a Republican of the stand-pat type even who is willing to deny that Schedule K ought to be revised. In the face of this condition, what is the attitude of the President of the United States? We find him on two different occasions vetoing a compromise measure agreed upon by Republicans as well as Democrats, imposing an ad valorem duty of 29 per cent on raw wool and a duty of 49 per cent ad valorem on woolen cloth. When this bill was first sent to Mr. Taft during the extra session we find him assigning as his reason for vetoing the same that it had been framed before the report of the Tariff Board. We find him now vetoing the same measure on the ground that its low rates would mean destruction to home industries. Also, it was pointed out by the President that in his opinion the bill was framed with disregard to the findings of the Tariff Board. Pray tell us, you gentlemen on the Republican side, who still are willing to defend Mr. Taft and his administration, what sort of a measure your President is willing to sign? He has admitted time and again that Schedule K is indefensible, yet he twice vetoes bills imposing an ad valorem duty of 29 per cent on raw wool and 49 per cent on wool cloth. Mr. Speaker, is Mr. Taft looking simply for an excuse to veto righteous legislation? What is the need of legislation by Congress at all if Mr. Taft is going to veto every measure which is not framed in strict accord with the finding of his Tariff Board? If this is to be the course of the President, then all that remains to be done is to ascertain the findings of his Tariff Board and draw and pass bills in accordance therewith. I firmly believe that he would veto any bill drawn even in this manner which in any degree deprived the trusts and combinations of any degree of the protection demanded by them. And, Mr. Speaker, in the light of this situation we are driven to the conclusion, whether willingly or not, that the Republican contention that the tariff ought to be revised by its friends is a humbug and a sham. The truth is, the tariff should not be revised by its friends, but by the friends of the American people.

But there are other measures, Mr. Speaker, in which the people of the Nation are deeply interested and with which this House of Representatives has been called upon to deal. A political party, to be really great, must make itself a servant, an agency for good for the average man. It must not be the servant of any particular class or set of men. If it is, it is not a truly representative party and does not deserve to be intrusted with power. Political parties ought to be the servants and not the masters of the people. I hope I am a Democrat because I believe that party is striving to make itself an agency for good for the average voter of this land.

It can not be denied that for a generation the Republican Party has been the chosen representative of capital. This must be true because, as long as I can remember, the trusts and corporations of the Nation have, to a very large extent, supported that party. It should be borne in mind that a large majority of our people do not live in our towns, but in the country. More than 53 per cent of our population is still living outside the corporate limits of towns of 2,500 inhabitants and more. And I charge here and now that this very large per cent of the American people has received scant attention at the hands of the party which has enjoyed such a long and continuous lease of power.

GOVERNMENTAL AID TO RURAL HIGHWAYS.

The record of the present House of Representatives should not be judged until it is fully made up; yet the record already made is one to which any Democrat may point with pride. In the Post Office appropriation bill which passed this House a provision was included by which rural highways used by the Government as mail routes are to be improved by Government aid. The majority in this House has not lost sight of the fact that the good-roads question is one of the most important problems of the hour. Both political parties have cooperated in providing daily, except Sunday, mail for millions of our fellow citizens who live outside the corporate limits of the town. I have heard it stated by those who have made a study of the good-roads question that the loss sustained by the American people by reason of the neglect of our rural highways is about half sufficient each year to pay the expenses of the Federal Government. Whether this estimate is exaggerated or not, we all known that millions are lost annually by reason of poorly constructed rural highways. This provision in the Post Office appropriation bill is very important, in that it constitutes the first step taken by either House of Congress in rendering governmental aid to rural highways. Why should not the Government render such aid?

For nearly a century a portion of the taxes paid by the people has been set aside by Congress after Congress for digging out our rivers and improving the harbors of great cities. Since the foundation of the Government $627,000,000 has been thus appropriated. Boston, New York, and other cities I might mention have received millions of dollars in governmental aid. Is it just, is it right, does it accord to every man a square deal to continue to appropriate the people's money in this manner to the utter neglect of the man who lives on the rural free delivery route in the country? Does not this man pay his pro rata part of the taxes, even as the man who lives in the city pays his pro rata part? Upon what principle of justice can the Government continue to help the great city to the utter neglect of the 53 per cent of our population who live outside our cities and larger town?

Mr. Speaker, during its life the Republican Party has done two things for the man who lives in the country. It has taxed him in time of peace and given him a musket when it needs his services in time of war.

It is the duty of the Democratic Party to address itself boldly to the accomplishment of this reform. Hereafter not one single dollar of the people's money should be voted for the digging out of rivers or in the improvement of great harbors unless an equitable and just proportion is also voted to improve our rural highways.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that this first step has been taken. The Senate may vote to eliminate this provision from the Post Office appropriation bill, but just so surely as the Democrats capture the next House of Representatives, in my humble judgment some such provision will be put back again, and we will continue to fight for this reform until it can be no longer said that the representatives of the American people are voting away millions of dollars to make our cities greater at the expense of the 53 per cent of the people who live along the rural highways, in the small villages, upon the hills, and in the valleys throughout the length and breadth of the land.

PARCELS POST.

Again, it was felt that there was a demand by this same class of our fellow citizens for cheaper transportation of small parcels through the mails. This reform is attended with many difficulties. An experimental parcel post was likewise included in the Post Office appropriation bill, and a commission has been created to study carefully the entire subject and make a report to the December session of this Congress.

And right here I will say that I am authorized to state that the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads expects to be ready with a complete scheme of a national parcel-post system in the form of a bill to be introduced early in the next session of this Congress. At present there are about 15 bills providing for the establishment of a parcel-post system pending before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. No man but an expert is competent to say which one of these bills should be enacted into law. The committee, therefore, pursued the prudent course of waiting until full information can be had.

But, Mr. Speaker, the first step has been taken and the time is not far distant, in my humble judgment, when a complete national parcel-post system will be in operation throughout the United States. And I predict right now that when this system is put into operation the retail merchant in the village will find his trade increasing instead of being injured thereby.

GAMBLING IN FUTURES.

Again, it has been universally believed and charged that the prices of some of our great staple agricultural products were affected by stupendous speculation upon the exchanges in our great cities. I have heard it stated, for instance, that more than 400,000,000 bales of cotton were bought and sold during one year in one city alone. The entire crop of the country during that year was thirteen and one-half million bales, while the number of bales actually sold and delivered in that particular city was less than 300,000 bales. Those who are engaged in the occupation of producing our great agricultural products are entitled to enjoy a price therefor fixed absolutely by the law of supply and demand.

Believing that this principle was sound, Mr. BEALL, a Democratic Member of this House introduced a measure which has recently been passed, providing that instrumentalities of interstate commerce should not be used for the purpose of gambling in a certain product of the farm. The grain producers of the Nation are entitled to the same protection against the effects of speculation as the producers of cotton. This House can well afford to give consideration to additional legislation in this respect before the next session shall have ended.

ABUSE OF WRIT OF INJUNCTION.

During the last few years, Mr. Speaker, repeated efforts have been made to amend the law with respect to the use of the writ of injunction. When the Sherman antitrust law, so called, was enacted by Congress, no one supposed that it could be used as an instrumentality to oppress the workingmen of the Nation. The demand for supplemental legislation to prevent the abuse of the writ of injunction has been well-nigh universal among those who are expecting no benefit from such abuse. In response to this universal and just demand, the Judiciary Committee reported, and this House has passed, a measure which, it is believed, will largely remedy the evil.

And I pause right here to say that the man engaged in agriculture is equally interested in this legislation with the man who works in the factory, for the time may come when the Federal courts will be appealed to to prevent the farmer from cooperating with others engaged in the same occupation to secure just and fair prices for the product of his toil, even as the writ of injunction has been used to prevent the workingmen of the Nation from uniting in a common effort to secure a fair and just rate of wages for their daily toil.

LAW OF CONTEMPT AMENDED.

Likewise, among thoughtful men throughout the land, there has been a demand that the law of contempt now in force in our Federal courts should be amended so that every man charged with the offense of contempt of court not committed in the presence of the court itself should be entitled to have his guilt or innocence passed upon by a jury of his fellow citizens. Who will stand up and say this is not a righteous measure? Against contempt committed in his actual presence the judge should have the right to proceed, but who shall say that the judge himself should be both judge and jury in passing upon the guilt or innocence of a man charged with contempt not committed in his presence? Why should this man not have the benefit of a jury trial? Who can assign any reason? Judges are human, Mr. Chairman; they must battle against their prejudices just as you and I. It remained, however, for a Democratic House of Representatives to pass a measure which, if ratified by the Senate and signed by the President, will forever remedy the abuse of this autocratic power by judges of our Federal courts. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have not the time to-day, Mr. Speaker, to review all of the beneficial measures which have been passed by this House of Representatives. I do contend that it has made good; that it has justified the action of the people at the ballot box in the last election. I do contend that the majority, on this side of the Chamber, has made an honest effort to carry into effect pledges made to the people prior to the last election.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The law with respect to publicity of campaign contributions has been amended. Ah, Mr. Speaker, I well remember how I myself was ridiculed by some of the great metropolitan dailies because, more than 10 years ago, I dared to introduce in this House a bill providing for an investigation of the vast fund used to corrupt the American people and to defeat Mr. Bryan in 1896. I said then that the time would come when the conscience of the Nation would be aroused over the debauchery of American elections by the wholesale use of money.

If $2,000,000 was used in bringing about the election of Mr. Taft, how many millions, Mr. Speaker, were used in accomplishing the defeat of Mr. Bryan in 1896? I have heard it said by Republicans that the amount used in 1896 was greater by far than any amount used in any prior or subsequent campaign. I have heard it said that the amount so used probably exceeded $10,000,000. Is this true or not true? Somebody is living to-day who can answer the question.

The wholesale use of money by either political party is wrong. The use of one single dollar in the purchase of votes is a crime against the Nation. But it remained for the Democratic Party to force this reform.

And I pause right here to say that Mr. Bryan occupies a most enviable position in the minds of men of all political parties who love clean methods. Three times defeated for President, he has lived to see reform after reform for which he struggled adopted, not only by men of his own political faith, but by his fellow citizens of the opposite political party.

Also a bill introduced by Mr. LEVER, of South Carolina, extending the activities of the Agricultural Department in practical farm demonstration work has been favorably reported and a rule has been adopted insuring early consideration of this measure in which our fellow citizens engaged in agriculture are so deeply interested.

GAG RULE OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES REMOVED.

I wish to call attention right here to the order of this House with respect to a ruling made by Mr. Roosevelt when President and thereafter affirmed and adopted by President Taft. Without permission of Congress Mr. Roosevelt ruled that the thousands of employees in the service of Government should not petition Congress or any of its Members respecting any measure to better the condition of such employees. Even a constituent of a Member could not call upon the Member and present reasons why any measure in which the employee was interested should pass. This tyrannical ruling is still in force, but the House has incorporated a provision in one of the appropriation bills restoring to the employees of the Government the right enjoyed by other citizens, a right which never should have been taken away. [Applause.]

OTHER IMPORTANT MEASURES.

Mr. Speaker, I will enumerate right here several additional measures which have passed this House: (1) Eight-hour bill, now a law; (2) Children's Bureau bill, now a law; (3) convict labor bill; (4) bill creating department of labor; (5) industrial commission bill; (6) dredgemen's eight-hour bill; (7) a bill to avoid repetition of the Titanic disaster and to protect lives of seamen; (8) bill abolishing involuntary servitude by seamen; (9) amendment to Constitution providing for election of Senators by direct vote of the people. All of the foregoing are supplemental to the great tariff measures which I have heretofore mentioned. Surely no one can justly charge that the Democratic Members of this House have been idle or that they have failed to make an honest effort to carry out our pledges to the people. I belive it can be safely said that the calendar of the House Committee on Labor has never been so completely disposed of. Under the Republican régime this great committee, created by the rules of the House to represent the workers of America, was so constituted that all legislation desired by our working men was stifled. How different under the organization of this House by the Democratic Party. A distinguished Representative of organized labor from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] is chairman. Our colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] and other gentlemen who have made a life study of labor questions are given places on that committee. And it is remarkable that the several measures reported out by that committee have received overwhelming support in this body. The measures reported out were so righteous, that not a few of our Republican colleagues felt it their duty to support them.

There are several measures pending which are yet to be considered. To those who would criticize the record of the Democrats of this House of Representatives I would say that it is only fair and just to withhold that criticism until the record of the party in this House is finally made up and ready to pass into history.

CRITICISM NOT FAIR UNTIL RECORD IS COMPLETE.

Suppose there is some particular measure in which some one of our colleagues is particularly interested. What course should he pursue with respect to that measure? Should he stand up in this Chamber and criticize his colleagues because they have failed to do all that he thinks they ought to do? Let the man who would criticize the record of this House remember, first, that the progress of all legislation is more or less slow. Let him not forget that the Republican Party enjoyed complete power in all the departments of the Government for 16 years.

Mr. Speaker, we are all collectively responsible to the people for legislation which either passes or does not pass this House of Representatives. I mean the Democratic membership is collectively responsible. No Democrat can go home to his people and justify himself by contending, "I fought for this or that measure, but failed."

The Rules Committee has not escaped its share of the criticism. On behalf of the majority members of that committee I wish to say that we have, as best we could, carried into effect what we believed to be the pledges of our party to the people. We have not been able to respond to every demand that has been made upon us, but before the end of the next session the committee calendar will be completely disposed of. I believe that the great power of the Rules Committee should be invoked only when it becomes absolutely necessary to do so, but when such necessity does arise no Democratic member of that committee will be found shirking any responsibility or duty.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that if any gentleman feels it to be his duty to criticize the majority of this House or the majority of any committee for failing to do all which in his judgment ought to be done it is only fair for such gentleman to give credit for all those measures which have received practically unanimous support on this side of the Chamber.

In conclusion I would remind any one of our colleagues who feels disposed to criticize the Rules Committee or any other committee that the record of measures already passed through this House is very much larger than that of any House within my recollection. And why is it, Mr. Speaker, that this Democratic House is called upon to enact into law so many measures. The answer is plain. It is because during 16 years the Republican majority, feeling that it was secure in its power, dared to ignore the voice of the people. We have done much during this session and during the special session called by President Taft, but we have not done all that we expect to do. All men do not think exactly alike upon great questions. We will proceed cautiously and deliberately, but with a determination at all times to carry into effect our promises and pledges to the American people.

And thank God, Mr. Speaker, the old Democratic Party is at last united for the conflict upon which we are now entering. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Whom will the American people choose to lead in the great battle for the restoration of the Government to the people? Shall it be the man whose administration is admitted upon all sides to be a failure? Shall it be either one of the gentlemen who are now supported by certain powerful interests in this Nation? Shall it be either one of the gentlemen who were put forward by certain great interests in the Republican convention at Chicago? I shall not indulge in harsh criticism of anyone, but certain facts are known of all men.

I pause only to remark that if the American people believe one-hundredth part of what either one of these candidates has said about the other, then neither should ever again be elected to occupy the presidential chair.

In the last 10 years, Mr. Speaker, a new figure has loomed up large against the horizon. He is a well-poised, prudent, conscientious leader, faithful in his allegiance to the interest of all the people as God gives him light to see. He is not weak or vacillating when called upon to act. He is not an egotist. He does not brag about his own achievements. He does not think that he is the only American ordained of God to lead the people up to a higher plane. He does not think that when he dies the instrumentality of all righteousness will be buried. He knows little of the lingo of the prize ring. When struck by an antagonist he does not cry for quarter.

Loyal to friend and generous to foe, he himself never strikes below the belt. In honorable, dignified contest for nomination to the greatest office in the world he has never become so desperate as to compare himself to a rat in a corner. It is not one of his characteristics to find pleasure in useless animal slaughter. Those who know him best are strongest for him.

In manner he is a simple gentleman. The son of a clergyman of moderate means, he has fought his way, surmounting many obstacles, to the very top. Being one of the people, he knows of their manner of life, of their necessities, of their privations, of their struggles. He has kindled no fires of hate. He has made no schisms in his own party. He has not arrayed class against class. He believes in equal and exact justice to all, special privileges to none. He believes that the entire procession of the human family ought to move together forward and upward. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If he is elected President of the United States, as I believe he will be, Woodrow Wilson will be found always performing the duties of that great office in the fear of God. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] was given leave yesterday to address the House for 20 minutes. He is detained by attendance on a funeral, and I ask unanimous consent that he be given the right to address the House later in the afternoon when he comes in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WEBB). The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota may have leave to address the House later in the afternoon when he comes in. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REGULATION AS TO THE OFFICERING AND MANNING OF VESSELS.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, under the special order I call up the bill (H. R. 23676) to regulate the officering and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4463 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4463. Any vessel of the United States subject to the provisions of this title or to the inspection laws of the United States shall not be navigated unless she shall have in her service and on board such complement of licensed officers and crew as may, in the judgment of the local inspectors who inspect the vessel, be necessary for her safe navigation. The local inspectors shall make in the certificate of inspection of the vessel an entry of such complement of officers and crew, which may be changed from time to time by indorsement on such certificate by local inspectors by reason of change of conditions or employment. Such entry or indorsement shall be subject to a right of appeal, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to the supervising inspector and from him to the Supervising Inspector General, who shall have the power to revise, set aside, or affirm the said determination of the local inspectors.

"If any vessel of the United States subject to the inspection laws is deprived of the services of any number of the crew without the consent, fault, or collusion of the master, owner, or any person interested in the vessel, the vessel may proceed on her voyage if, in the judgment of the master, she is sufficiently manned for such voyage: Provided, That the master shall ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same grade or of a higher rating with those whose places they fill. If the master shall fail to explain in writing the cause of such deficiency in the crew to the local inspector within 12 hours of the time of the arrival of the vessel at her destination, he shall be liable to a penalty of $50. If the vessel shall not be manned as provided in this act, the owner shall be liable to a penalty of $100, or, in case of an insufficient number of licensed officers, to a penalty of $500."

SEC. 2. That the board of local inspectors shall make an entry in the certificate of inspection of every ocean-going and coastwise merchant vessel of the United States propelled by machinery, and every ocean-going vessel carrying passengers, the minimum number of licensed deck officers required for her safe navigation according to the following scale:

That every ocean-going and coastwise vessel subject to the inspection laws of the United States shall not be navigated unless she shall have on board and in her service one duly licensed master.

That every ocean-going and coastwise vessel of 1,000 gross tons and over, propelled by machinery, shall have in her service and on board three licensed mates, who shall stand in three watches while such vessel is being navigated, unless such vessel is engaged in a run of less than 400 miles from the port of departure to the port of final destination, then such vessel shall have two licensed mates; and every vessel of 200 gross tons and less than 1,000 gross tons, propelled by machinery, shall have two licensed mates.

That every ocean-going and coastwise vessel of 100 gross tons and under 200, propelled by machinery, shall have on board and in her service one licensed mate; but if such vessel is engaged in a trade in which the time required to make the passage from the port of departure to the port of destination exceeds 24 hours, then such vessel shall have two licensed mates.

That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent local inspectors from increasing the number of licensed officers on any vessel subject to the inspection laws of the United States if, in their judgment, such vessel is not sufficiently manned for her safe navigation.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for the master, owner, agent, or other person having authority, to require any officer of any vessel to take charge of the deck watch of the vessel upon leaving or immediately after leaving port, unless such officer shall have had the preceding watch off, and no licensed officer on any ocean or coastwise vessel shall be required to do duty to exceed 9 hours of any 24 while in port, including the date of arrival, or more than 12 hours of any 24 at sea, except in a case of emergency when life or property is endangered. Any violation of this section shall subject the person or persons guilty thereof to a penalty of $100.

SEC. 4. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 2, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "of the United States, subject to the inspection laws," and insert the word "such" in line 9 before the word "vessel."

Lines 9 and 10, page 3, strike out the words "every ocean-going and coastwise vessel, subject to the inspection laws of the United States," and the word "not" in line 10, and insert in line 9, after the word "that," the words "no such vessel."

Line 13, page 3, strike out the words "ocean-going and coastwise" and in lieu thereof insert the word "such."

Line 23, page 3, strike out the words "ocean-going and coastwise" and insert the word "such."

Page 4, at the end of line 9, insert the following:

"Provided, That this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels or yachts or to motor boats as defined by the act of June 9, 1910, chapter 268 of the Statutes at Large of the United States."

Page 4, line 11, strike out the word "require" and insert instead thereof the word "permit."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct a misprint in the first line on page 2, where the word "her" is printed "ner."

Mr. MANN. It is a defective type.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be corrected.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, in line 4, page 4, after the second word "hundred," I move to amend by inserting the words "gross tons," so that it will read: "That every such vessel of 100 gross tons and under 200 gross tons," and so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, there is another amendment which I wish to offer, which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out the words "the preceding watch off," in line 22, page 4 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "At least 6 hours off duty within the 12 hours immediately preceding the time of sailing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want to make a few observations in connection with this bill, H. R. 23676, known as the Hardy bill, to regulate the officering and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States. In the beginning I want to say that this bill comes from the Committee on Merchant Marine by unanimous report, and I have been requested by one of the members of the minority, Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, to say that he is not here to-day because of unavoidable absence, but that he would like to let it be known that personally he favors the bill. It seems to me that the bill is the complement and rounding out of the seamen's bill, "A bill to abolish involuntary servitude," and so forth, that has been passed by this House. There is this difference, however, between the two measures—that measure was stubbornly contested in many of its features, while there appears to be no objection to this from any quarter whatever. Still some explanation of this bill and its purposes and the reasons in support of it is due the House and the country.

The law at the present time provides that the various boards of local inspectors of steam vessels shall make an entry in the certificate of inspection of every vessel subject to the inspection laws of the United States of such complement of licensed officers and crew as may, in their judgment, be necessary for a vessel's safe navigation, but that is a very general requirement, and it is believed that some standard ought to be prescribed by law, as is done in section 2 of this bill. Furthermore, there is now no provision in the law that regulates the watches of the officers as to how they shall be divided, or the maximum number of hours out of the 24 that an officer may be required to do duty at sea or in port. The absence of any such provision leaves room for great abuse.

The officer while in charge of a watch is responsible according to law for the vessel's safe navigation, and the master is at all times held responsible for the vessel's safety, and in thick or stormy weather or in dangerous waters the master must be on duty.

The officers on the great majority of our merchant ships are required to be on duty every day while at sea from 12 to 14 hours out of every 24 hours, regardless of the conditions of the weather or the length of the voyage, and in a great many instances after a vessel arrives in port the mates are required to superintend the unloading and loading of cargo from 9 to 40 consecutive hours without rest or sleep, and then they are compelled to stand a six-hour bridge watch after the vessel sails before they are relieved from duty.

Section 5344, Revised Statutes, provides that a master or mate by whose misconduct, negligence, or inattention to duty, the life of any person is destroyed shall be deemed guilty of the felony of manslaughter, and upon conviction thereof before any circuit court of the United States he shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than $10,000 or to confinement at hard labor for a period of not more than 10 years, or either or both. This apparent or perhaps real negligence or inattention may be the result of such overwork as passes endurance, and such overwork ought not to be permitted.

Section 4449, Revised Statutes, provides that "if any licensed officer shall to the hindrance of commerce wrongfully or unreasonably refuse to serve in his official capacity on any vessel as authorized by the terms of his certificate of license, his license shall be revoked or suspended upon the same proceedings as are provided in other cases of revocation or suspension of such license." This section also, in the absence of any law limiting the hours of work, may and does frequently result in great hardships and injustice.

The law also provides that when any licensed officer's eyesight becomes defective in colors or vision, and also when his hearing becomes defective, his license shall be suspended. We are told that these defects are sometimes caused by long strain and overtasking the physical powers. This bill, by prescribing regular and reasonable hours for labor and watches, seeks to, and does cure the evils which I have pointed out and which are justly complained of.

The only change made in the first section of the bill from the existing law is in the second paragraph, on page 2, line 18, beginning with "providing" and ending with the word "fill," on line 22, page 4. The amendment makes it obligatory on the part of the master in case he has been deprived of the service of any member of his crew by desertion or casualty to ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number whose services he has been deprived of.

Section 2 of the bill is new and is very important.

The first paragraph of section 2 of the bill makes it obligatory on the part of the local inspector to make an entry in the certificate of inspection of every vessel subject to the inspection laws of the number of licensed officers necessary for a vessel's safe navigation according to the scale as provided in the second, third, and fourth paragraphs of the section. The second paragraph requires that at least one duly licensed master be on board in any case; the third paragraph of section 2 provides that every ocean and coastwise merchant vessel propelled by machinery of 1,000 gross tons or over, and being engaged in a run of 400 miles or over, shall have three licensed mates who shall stand in three watches while such vessel is being navigated. If any such vessel is engaged in a run of less than 400 miles, she is required to have not less than two licensed mates, and every vessel of 200 gross tons and less than 1,000 gross tons, regardless of the distance is required to have two licensed mates.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not ask for any more time, but will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. So that it may be fully understood, why this legislation is wise under leave to extend I will give a brief outline of some of the more pertinent and convincing evidence, given before the committee, I think it right to say that the committee, in its investigation owes much to the honest, earnest, and intelligent assistance and testimony of Capt. William A. Westcott. Besides his own evidence Capt. Westcott submitted, in the hearings, evidence in letters and sworn testimony of many other ship captains given before inspectors. For example, the evidence before Inspector Birmingham of Capt. Hansen, who swore that he was captain of the steamer Talloc and, in substance, that he sometimes worked his men from the time they got in port up to the time of putting to sea again, that being, sometimes, from 2 or 3 o'clock p. m. to midnight, and that then he who had so worked had to go "on the bridge and take the watch." That he had, sometimes, "put in 60 hours at a stretch without any sleep, lots of times 24 hours." The witness stated: "I admit that I can stand 24 hours at a stretch, and many a time I have done 48 hours, and have even done 60 hours." But, he was asked, is it not undermining your constitution and injuring you? and he answered, "Yes; I think it is. I could do it five or seven years ago and I can not do it now. I am 44 years old now and not as young as I was." This testimony seemed to have been dragged from the witness. Here is part of the proceedings before Inspector Birmingham:

By Mr. Westcott:

Q. Well, Captain, do you think that a man after working all day and leaving the port of San Francisco, taking charge of a watch, and a port and a coast that is more crowded than any other port, don't you think the man should be fresh and alert in case of any emergency, and that he should be bright and not be overworked?—A. Yes; I admit that.

By Capt. Birmingham:

Q. (To Mr. Westcott and witness.) I think we understand this case. I am convinced since taking the testimony of several masters and mates that mates are undoubtedly overworked on the occasion of going to sea and taking the bridge, going to sea at night after working all day, then taking the bridge for four or six hours.

That evidence seemed to me to be pitiful. It was accompanied by affidavits from a number of other captains and mates of similar import, who asked that their names be not published; the affidavits are on file.

Not all shipowners have been guilty of such oppression and many—in fact, I think most of them—would gladly welcome this legislation.

From the other side, therefore, of this question, I insert from the testimony of Mr. I. N. Hibberd, of San Francisco, superintendent of one of the steamship lines, taken before the committee on June 6, 1912:

Mr. HARDY. You have not said anything about this other bill, 23676.
Mr. HIBBERD. This bill 23676 is the only bill I am talking about.
Mr. HARDY. You were talking about the seamen's bill.

Mr. HIBBERD. That is it—that bill of Mr. Wilson's is the bill I was talking about.

Mr. HARDY. I thought you desired also to be heard on the bill also introduced by myself with reference to officering and manning the vessels?

Mr. HIBBERD. I did not, Mr. Hardy. I confess I read your bill and I did not think there was anything I objected to in it, as I remember it now.

Mr. HARDY. Your vessels are even more highly equipped than this bill of mine provides?

Mr. HIBBERD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARDY. You have a master and four mates?

Mr. HIBBERD. We have on all our passenger vessels, except one of the very smallest ones; on our freighters we carry a master and three licensed men.

Mr. HARDY. That is the highest number?

Mr. HIBBERD. Your bill calls for nothing which we are not already doing.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it call for anything not reasonable, do you think?

Mr. HIBBERD. So far as I recollect it now, it does not. I read Mr. Hardy's bill and did not find anything there that I thought was unreasonable enough to criticize.

Mr. HARDY. In fact, the practice required is not quite as onerous as the practice you follow?

Mr. HIBBERD. As far as manning is concerned that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else?

Mr. HIBBERD. No, sir. I have already taken up too much time of the committee. I am much obliged to you for giving me a chance to come and tell my side of the story.

The CHAIRMAN. Just one question at this juncture: Is it your opinion that an ocean-going vessel is sufficiently manned if the captain is required to stand his regular watch and also required to be on watch during foggy and stormy weather?

Mr. HIBBERD. The captain has no right to stand watch on any vessel that goes to sea. The captain is on deck all the time when there is any necessity.

The CHAIRMAN. In foggy weather and stormy weather?

Mr. HIBBERD. Any other time. He is always on the deck when there is any necessity. The captain should never stand any watch. That is my opinion.

I will only add to these citations the following letter which was read before our committee:

STEAMSHIP "HAZEL DOLLAR,"
China Basin, March 17, 1910.

Mr. WESTCOTT.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 11th instant, and in reply would state that I am only too pleased to do anything that may help raise the status of the profession in general. In the above vessel we carry three officers, and each takes his regular watch of four hours on the bridge—that is, 8 hours out of every 24.

As in most British ships, the chief officer is on duty from 4 to 8; the third officer from 8 to 12, and myself from 12 to 4.

While discharging cargo in port we are on duty while the stevedores are working, but, of course, one officer must remain on board at night; and upon our return to this coast arrangements are made enabling each officer to have a short holiday (on full pay).

The gross tonnage of the vessel is 4,304, and she plies between the Pacific coast and the Orient; the round trip averages about five months. She is certified to carry passengers.

It seems needless to say that the officer who does not get his proper amount of sleep can not possibly be as reliable as the one who does, and when a vessel is in crowded waters it stands to reason that the officer on watch should have a clear head, and this he can not have if he does not obtain his proper rest.

I am pleased to say that there are very few British steamers (personally I know of none) which still have that out-of-date health-breaking system of two watches.

With best wishes for every success in the work you are carrying on, I remain, Yours, faithfully, HUBERT F. RADFORTH.

I will conclude by simply saying that the whole evidence before our committee conclusively shows that this bill (H. R. 23676) is not only a just and conservative measure, but one greatly needed for safety of navigation and imperatively demanded in the interest of humanity. About its passage there ought to be no two minds and no delay.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

IMPORTATION OF NURSERY STOCK.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 24119, to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests; to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 24119, and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that the bill shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that the unrestricted importation of any plants, fruits, vegetables, roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant products not included by the term "nursery stock," as defined in section 6 of this act, may result in the entry into the United States or any of its Territories or Districts of injurious plant diseases or insect pests, he shall promulgate his determination, specifying the class of plants and plant products the importation of which shall be restricted and the country and locality where they are grown, and thereafter, and until such promulgation is withdrawn, such plants and plant products imported or offered for import into the United States or any of its Territories or Districts shall be subject to all the provisions of the foregoing sections of this act: Provided, That before the Secretary of Agriculture shall promulgate his determination that the unrestricted importation of any plants, fruits, vegetables, roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant products not included by the term "nursery stock," as defined in section 6 of this act, may result in the entry into the United States or any of its Terriories or Districts of injurious plant diseases or insect pests he shall, after due notice, give a public hearing, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, at which hearing any interested party may appear and be heard, either in person or by attorney.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have corrected the spelling of the word "hereafter," in line 22, page 4.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, or of the rules or regulations herein provided for, or who shall forge, counterfeit, alter, deface, or destroy any certificate provided for in this act or in the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That no common carrier shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of any of the foregoing sections of this act on proof that such carrier did not knowingly receive for transportation or transport nursery stock or other plants or plant products as such from one State, Territory, or District of the United States into or through any other State, Territory, or District; and it shall be the duty of the United States attorneys diligently to prosecute any violations of this act which are brought to their attention by the Secretary of Agriculture or which come to their notice by other means.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "or of the rules or regulations herein provided for."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That there is hereby appropriated, out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the purposes and objects of this act, the sum of $25,000, which appropriation shall become available on July 1, 1912.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "which appropriation shall become available on July 1, 1912."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That this act shall become and be effective from and after the 1st day of July, 1912, except as herein otherwise provided.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 15, strike out the word "July" and insert in lieu thereof the word "October."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RADIO COMMUNICATION ON OCEAN-GOING STEAMERS.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 24025) to amend sections 4400 and 4488 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the inspection of steam vessels, and section 1 of an act approved June 24, 1910, requiring apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean-going steamers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4400 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4400. All steam vessels navigating any waters of the United States which are common highways of commerce or open to general or competitive navigation, excepting public vessels of the United States, vessels of other countries, and boats propelled in whole or in part by steam for navigating canals, shall be subject to the provisions of this title.

"And all foreign private steam vessels carrying passengers to or from any port of the United States to any other place or country shall be subject to the provisions of sections 4417, 4418, 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, 4470, 4471, 4472, 4473, 4479, 4482, 4488, 4489, 4496, 4497, 4499, and 4500 of this title, and shall be liable to visitation and inspection by the proper officer in any of the ports of the United States respecting any of the provisions of the sections aforesaid.

"That there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States the same fees for the inspection of foreign passenger steamers carrying passengers from the United States that any foreign nation shall charge the merchant vessels of the United States trading to the ports of such nationality: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have the power to waive at any time the collection of such fees upon due notice of the proper authorities of any country concerned that the collection of fees for the inspection of American steam merchant vessels has been discontinued."

SEC. 2. That section 4488 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4488. Every steamer navigating the ocean or any lake, bay, or sound of the United States shall be equipped with such lifeboats, floats, rafts, life preservers, ring buoys, water lights, ring-buoy lights, line-carrying projectiles, and the means of propelling them, as will best secure the safety of all persons on board such vessel in case of disaster, and in addition thereto steamers navigating the ocean shall be provided and equipped with a sufficient number of seaworthy lifeboats to carry and transport at one time every passenger and every member of the crew licensed to be carried on board such vessel, and every such vessel shall have such lifeboats provided and equipped with suitable boat disengaging apparatus so arranged as to allow such boats to be safely launched while such vessel is under speed or otherwise, and so as to allow such disengaging apparatus to be operated by one person, disengaging both ends of the boat simultaneously from the tackles by which it may be lowered to the water; and every vessel shall be equipped with a searchlight of sufficient power to be an efficient aid in the safe navigation of said vessel in the nighttime.

"The Board of Supervising Inspectors shall fix and determine by their rules and regulations the character and equipment of lifeboats, floats, rafts, life preservers, ring buoys, searchlights, water lights, ring-buoy lights, line-carrying projectiles and the means of propelling them that shall be used on such vessels, and also the character and capacity of pumps or other appliances for freeing the steamer of water in case of heavy leakage, the capacity of such pumps or appliances being suitable to the navigation in which the steamer is employed, but shall have no discretion whatever with respect to the number of lifeboats on steamers navigating the ocean, such number to be determined solely by the actual capacity of such lifeboats to carry and transport at one time all of the passengers and members of the crew licensed to be carried on board the vessel.

"Every vessel subject to the provisions of this title shall, while in operation, carry one life preserver for each and every person allowed to be carried on said vessel by the certificate of inspection, including each member of the crew. It shall be unlawful for any such vessel to sail from any port of the United States without first obtaining from the local inspectors a certificate specifying the number of passengers and crew licensed to be carried on board, and that such vessel is fully equipped as hereinbefore provided.

"Every captain, owner, and charterer of such vessel, and, when the owner or charterer shall be an association or corporation, every executive officer and every resident general agent of such association or corporation for the time being actually charged with the control and management of the operation, equipment, or navigation of such vessel, who shall knowingly and willfully cause or allow or permit such vessel to sail from any port of the United States without being equipped as hereinbefore provided, and without obtaining the certificate hereinbefore provided, shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and may, in addition thereto, be imprisoned not exceeding 10 years, in the discretion of the court.

"Any person who knowingly or willfully manufactures or sells, or offers for sale, or has in his possession with intent to sell, life preservers containing metal or other nonbuoyant material for the purpose of increasing the weight thereof, or more metal or other such material than is reasonably necessary for the construction thereof, or who shall so manufacture, sell, offer for sale, or possess with intent to sell, any other material commonly used for the preservation of life or the prevention of fire on board vessels subject to the provisions of this title, which articles shall be so defective as to be inefficient to accomplish the purposes for which they are respectively intended and designed, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $2,000 and may, in addition thereto, in the discretion of the court, be imprisoned not exceeding five years."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, section 3 of the bill has already been enacted into law, and it is hardly worth while reading it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that section 3 may be stricken from the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to strike section 3 from the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 24, strike out "Sec. 4," and also strike out the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I now present the following amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, strike out from lines 24 and 25 and line 2, on page 8, the following: "So far as it relates to the Great Lakes, shall take effect on April 1, 1913, and so far as it relates to ocean-going cargo steamers."

And in line 2, page 8, strike out the word "July" and insert in lieu thereof the word "January," so that the section shall read:

"That this act shall take effect on and after January 1, 1913."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have that last section made section 3.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with reporting the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 1, after the word "States," insert the word "public."

Page 3, lines 15 and 16, after the word "them," insert "and such other life-saving and fire-fighting devices."

Page 4, line 11, after the word "them," insert "and such other life-saving and fire-fighting devices."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by adding at the end of line 22, page 4, the following words: "and for the purposes of this act seine boats carried by vessels engaged exclusively in fishing shall be held and considered to be lifeboats."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. There is a provision requiring steamers to have lifeboats, preservers, and so forth. Would that include the ordinary steam tugs?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; it would not, in my judgment, and that is the opinion of the Commissioner of Navigation.

Mr. MANN. I would ask the gentleman, then, in line 22, page 3, the language occurs—

And every such vessel shall have such lifeboats provided and equipped, etc.

And previous to that, in the same section, in one place it require that "every steamer navigating the ocean or any lake, bay, or sound of the United States shall be," and so forth, and in another place, "steamers navigating the ocean shall be provided," and so forth. I judge that the intention was to make the reference to steamers navigating the ocean or any other such vessel, but I think it is not clear, and if it is the intention, would it not be well to strike out the words "such vessel" and insert "or steamers navigating the ocean," to make it perfectly clear?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Where is that?

Mr. MANN. Page 3, line 22.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Now, going back to line 17, it says, "and in addition thereto steamers navigating the ocean shall be provided with a sufficient number of seaworthy lifeboats to carry and transport at one time every passenger and every member of the crew licensed to be carried on board such vessel, and every such vessel shall have lifeboats provided and equipped with suitable boats' disengaging apparatus." Now, I think instead of "such" there the provision which we intended to apply was that "all vessels be equipped with lifeboat-disengaging apparatus." I think we had better strike out the word "such."

Mr. MANN. Better say "all steam vessels."

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is, every steamer shall have such boats.

Mr. MANN. Better strike out "such vessel" and insert "steamer," so it will read "every steamer shall have." That is the intention, I take it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the words "such vessel," where it occurs the second time in line 22, page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the word "steamer."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, strike out the words "such vessel," where it occurs the second time in the line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "steamer," so that the line will read "and every steamer shall have such lifeboats," etc.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. On page 4, line 4, where it reads "every vessel shall be equipped with a searchlight with sufficient power," and so forth, I take it the intention is to confine that to the steam vessel——

Mr. ALEXANDER. In the ocean. After the word "every", insert the words "steamer navigating the ocean."

Mr. MANN. Do you want that to apply to the Lakes? If you insert the word "such" that would cover it.

Mr. ALEXANDER Well, after the word "every" insert the word "such."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 4, after the word "every," insert the word "such."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PANAMA CANAL BILL.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the canal bill has come back from the Senate with sundry amendments. It is on the Speaker's table, and I ask unanimous consent to take it up, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 21969, the canal bill, to disagree to the Senate amendments and to ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. SIMS, and Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota.

CONDITION OF HEALTH OF INDIANS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 907).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The present conditions of health on Indian reservations and in Indian schools are, broadly speaking, very unsatisfactory. In many parts of the Indian country infant mortality, tuberculosis, and disastrous diseases generally prevail to an extent exceeded only in some of the most insanitary of our white rural districts and in the worst slums of our large cities.

The death rate in the Indian country is 35 per thousand, as compared with 15 per thousand—the average death rate for the United States as a whole. The average death rate in some of the healthiest of our cities is as low as 12 per thousand. No exact figures are yet available for infant mortality among Indians, but field studies now being made show that while proportionately more Indian babies than white babies are born, very many more Indian babies die.

Last year of over 42,000 Indians examined for disease, over 16 per cent of them had trachoma, a contagious disease of the eye, frequently resulting in blindness, and so easily spread that it threatens both the Indian communities and all their white neighbors. It is a disease so serious that at no port of entry in this country is the immigrant with trachoma allowed to land. On the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservations 71 per cent of the school children have trachoma. The curing of this disease frequently requires years of constant care. Of the 40,000 Indians examined, 6,800 had tuberculosis. On the White Earth Reservation, in Minnesota, a house to house canvass in 1910 and 1911 revealed that of 3,300 Indians, 600 had tuberculosis. An examination of half the Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation, Mont., shows that one-third of that number have tuberculosis. Of the total population of the Colorado River Reservation, Ariz., 20 per cent have tuberculosis. At the school of the Mescalero Reservation in New Mexico, where climatic conditions are ideal, 5 per cent of the children in school have tuberculosis. Of the 7,000 Indians of the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak., over one-fourth have tuberculosis. Even in southern California at least 10 per cent of the Indians have this dread disease. In addition to these scourges and the special lowering of vitality which exists in these sections where the Indians can procure intoxicants, they are more subject than the average white man to the whole list of acute diseases. Few Indian homes anywhere have proper sanitary conditions, and in many instances the bad condition of their domestic surroundings is almost beyond belief.

As guardians of the welfare of the Indians, it is our immediate duty to give to the race a fair chance for an unmaimed birth, healthy childhood, and a physically efficient maturity.

The most vigorous campaign ever waged against disease among the Indians is now under way. I began in 1909. Prior to that time little attention had been given to the hygiene and health of the Indians. On some reservations, equal in area to a State, there were not more than two physicians, frequently only one. In 1909 tens of thousands of Indians were substantially without any chance to reach a doctor. The Government was startled into a reform in this matter through the discovery that at the Phoenix Indian School, Arizona, more than 65 per cent of the children were infected with trachoma. In response to the showing then made, Congress immediately appropriated an emergency sum of $12,000. Physicians sparsely scattered over the Indian country were then organized as the nucleus of an efficient fighting force, and the fight has been conducted not only on curative, but on preventative lines. As the need for this work has become more apparent, congressional appropriations have steadily increased; but even to-day the effective fighting force of the service is so disproportionate to the ground to be covered and the problems to be met that it is impossible to make even a medical survey of the whole field.

The Indian service has under its general supervision 296,000 Indians, and of these it is a conservative estimate to say that 160,000 are still entirely dependent on the Federal medical service. This service has 160 physicians, over a third of whom, under their terms of employment, devote only a part of their time to Indians. When it is remembered that Indians are so scattered that a physician frequently has to drive a day or more out, and a day or more back, to reach one family, the inadequacy of such service is plain. While there are many efficient and self-sacrificing physicians in this service, the smallness of the salaries, which average only $1,186 a year, necessarily affects the qualification and ability of the physicians engaged. In spite of adverse conditions, thousands of cases of tuberculosis and trachoma are being systematically treated, and serious epidemics of diphtheria, measles, cerebrospinal meningitis, and other infectious diseases have been checked. Hundreds of lives have been saved, and a distinct start has been made in getting fresh air and generally better sanitary conditions into the homes.

The Indian medical service should, therefore, be substantially increased in size, and should be lifted into efficiency through the better men whom as a rule only better salaries can command. Of course this change should take place along carefully planned business lines and without extravagance, and after a comparative study of other medical services, National, State, and local.

Through the proper channels is now submitted to Congress an estimate for the Indian medical service for $253,350, accompanied by a detailed statement of the expenditures required. This sum, together with an addition to the amounts which will probably be available in the Indian appropriation bill for the current year, and which were asked for in that bill before all the data now available were at hand, will enable the Indian service to make a complete medical and sanitary survey of the whole field, with a view to curing existing troubles and to the prevention, so far as may be, of their recurrence. With this additional appropriation, if granted by Congress, it is believed that the tide can be turned, that the danger of infection among the Indians themselves and to the several millions of white persons now living as neighbors to them can be greatly reduced, and genuine cooperation with local State boards of health now already under way can be adequately provided for. It is not expected to build up a highly organized Indian medical service, but rather to put efficient physicians and nurses and field matrons, properly equipped to reach all the Indian families, in the field where service under the best conditions is one of constant self-sacrifice and hardship, but where constant application to those methods which the study of modern hygiene has developed will show results so encouraging as fully to justify the expenditure of the sums herein asked.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1912.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 126, authorizing Federal bureaus doing hygienic and demographic work to participate in the exhibition to be held in connection with the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to make one statement, and that is that the rule provides for a Unanimous Consent Calendar, and the Chair is not disposed to violate that rule any more than any other Member of the House, but there are certain little things which if you do not do them at a particular time there is no use in doing them at all, and this is one of them. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the several Federal bureaus doing hygienic and demographic work are hereby authorized to prepare and install exhibits at the exhibition to be held in connection with the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography, at Washington, D. C., September 16 to October 4, 1912: Provided, That such exhibits shall consist of such materials as are now available in such bureaus or can be prepared and installed without requiring any special appropriation for this purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LEVY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5958. An act to provide for the registry and enrollment of vessels built in foreign countries when such vessels have been wrecked on the coasts of the United States or her possessions or adjacent waters and salved by American citizens and repaired in American shipyards; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 22002) supplementing the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled "Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits," and so forth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MARTIN of Colorado). The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] asks unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 22002. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. Should not the bill be reported first?

Mr. MANN. I think the title would indicate it. The bill is pretty long.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is quite a lengthy bill. There is a substitute to the original bill.

Mr. MANN. Has consent been given to consider it? I do not think it worth while to have it read unless it can be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the substitute reported by the committee be read in place of the original bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to report the substitute reported by the committee in place of the original bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of forfeiture heretofore or hereafter asserted by the Attorney General on behalf of the United States in or by any and all suits in equity, actions at law, or other judicial proceedings instituted pursuant to the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled "Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits," etc., be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed and are hereby declared to be of the same force and effect as declarations of forfeiture by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 2. That none of the lands reverting to the United States by virtue of any right of forfeiture thereto as aforesaid shall be or become subject to entry under any of the public-land laws of the United States, or to the initiation of any right whatever under any of the public-land laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That no suits in equity, actions at law, or other judicial proceedings shall be instituted pursuant to said joint resolution approved April 30, 1908, that shall involve any lands sold by the Oregon & California Railroad Co. prior to April 30, 1908, unless the same shall be instituted within one year from the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to apply to any suits in equity heretofore instituted, nor to any parties thereto, nor to any of the lands involved therein, nor to the institution of any further suits in equity, actions at law, or other judicial proceedings relating to any of the lands that are involved in said pending suits.

SEC. 4. That the Attorney General is hereby authorized to compromise in the manner hereinafter provided any suit heretofore or hereafter instituted pursuant to the provision of said joint resolution approved April 30, 1908, involving lands purchased from the said Oregon & California Railroad Co. prior to September 4, 1908. In any such suit the Attorney General may, in his discretion, stipulate with the defendant or defendants who purchased said lands, or are the successors or assigns of such purchaser or purchasers, that decree shall be entered adjudging that the lands involved therein have been and are forfeited to the United States. Such decree shall recite that the same was entered pursuant to such stipulation. If said purchaser defendant or defendants, or their successors or assigns, shall within six months from the entry of said decree file with the Secretary of the Interior a certified copy of said decree, together with an application to purchase all of the lands adjudged by said decree to have been forfeited to the United States as aforesaid, and shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States the sum of $2.50 per acre for all of the lands so applied for, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to be issued conveying to said purchaser defendant or defendants, and their successors and assigns, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all of said lands; and such purchase shall operate as a compromise of any and all claims of the United States for waste or trespass upon any of said lands committed by such purchaser defendant or defendants or their successors or assigns, respectively: Provided, That the benefits of this section shall not be exercised or enjoyed except in cases where decree shall have been entered pursuant to stipulation entered into as aforesaid: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any lands that have not been patented to said Oregon & California Railroad Co.: And provided further, That the aforesaid privilege of purchasing said forfeited lands shall not be exercised or enjoyed as to less than all of the lands involved in said suits, respectively, the purpose hereof being to prevent the elimination from any purchase of any lands from which timber has been removed or upon which any other waste or trespass has been committed, or the elimination of any part whatever of any land from such purchase.

SEC. 5. That the provisions of section 4 of this act shall not be construed to apply to the suit involving approximately 2,360,000 acres, now pending in the District Court of the United States for the District of Oregon, wherein the United States of America is complainant and the Oregon & California Railroad Co., the Southern Pacific Co., Stephen T. Gage, the Union Trust Co., and others are defendants, being designated in the records and files of said court as suit No. 3340; nor shall the provisions of said section 4 of this act be construed to apply to any of the lands involved in said last-described suit; nor to create any rights or privileges whatever in favor of any of the defendants therein.

SEC. 6. That nothing in this act contained, nor action taken pursuant to the provisions of this act, shall be construed as a condonation of any of the breaches of any of the conditions or provisions annexed to any of the grants designated in said joint resolution approved April 30, 1908, nor as a waiver of any of said conditions or provisions, nor as a waiver of any right of forfeiture in favor of the United States on account of any breach or breaches of any of said conditions, nor as a waiver of any cause of action or remedy of the United States on account of any breach or breaches of any of said conditions or provisions, nor as a waiver of any other rights or remedies existing in favor of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended by the adoption of the substitute.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

QUALIFICATIONS OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to print in the RECORD a speech made in 1908 by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] on the subject of qualifications of presidential electors. It contains the general principles of law, the Federal statutes, and a good deal of other valuable information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech by the Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON, of Alabama, delivered in the House of Representatives on Monday, April 27, 1908, on the qualifications of presidential electors. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask about what is the length of this speech?

Mr. STERLING. It is of about six pages, I think—good-sized pages. It is not lengthy.

Mr. FINLEY. It is a speech made by the Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON, of Alabama?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, this has already been printed in the RECORD?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; four years ago it was printed in the RECORD—in 1908.

Mr. FOSTER. I misunderstood the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], which he will do after he has disposed of a few of these routine resolutions that are necessary.

Mr. FINLEY. I have no objection to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] being recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS IN STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 22871, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 22871.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. RAKER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 22871, which the Clerk will report.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, quite a number of gentlemen are desirous of discussing this bill, and on account of the lateness of the evening and it being Saturday, many of them are not here. I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and had come to no resolution thereon.

FORT LOGAN H. ROOTS, ARK.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 6926) to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This is a matter which the United States Government is directly interested in having it passed as soon as possible, so that it can get stone to do certain work. That is the reason why the Chair has recognized the gentleman. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed, upon the payment by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, of such sum as he may determine to be the reasonable value of the premises, to convey to the said company the following-described portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, near the city of Little Rock, State of Arkansas, to wit:

Beginning at the intersection of section line between sections 20 and 29, township 2 north, range 12 west, with the left bank of the Arkansas River; thence east along section line to the northeast corner of section 29; thence south along east line of section 29, 1,050 feet; thence south 31 degrees 5 minutes east, 1,025 feet; thence south 33 degrees 34 minutes east, 1,036 feet; thence south 54 degrees 30 minutes west, 250 feet to southeast corner of the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co.'s property; thence following the east and north boundaries of said company's property to intersection with left bank of river; thence north along left bank of river to place of beginning; containing 18.75 acres.

Also the following described tract of said reservation, to wit:

Beginning at the said southeast corner of the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co.'s property; thence south 33 degrees 34 minutes east, 350 feet; thence south 54 degrees 30 minutes west to left bank of river; thence north along the river bank to the southwest corner of said company's property; thence north 54 degrees 30 minutes east along said company's property to the point of beginning; containing 2 acres.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby further empowered to require, as one of the conditions of the sale herein authorized, that the grantee shall execute a bond to the United States, in such amount and with such sureties as the said Secretary shall prescribe, conditioned that the said grantee shall hold the United States harmless as against any damage that may be done to the part of the premises retained by the United States by any use to which the said grantee may devote that part hereby authorized to be conveyed; and that whenever, in the judgment of the said Secretary, the use to which the said part is being devoted shall interfere with the proper use by the United States of the said remaining part for any of the purposes to which the same is now being devoted, the said Secretary may direct a suspension of such interfering use for such time or with such restrictions as to him shall seem proper.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I will state for the benefit of the House that this bill has been unanimously reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. JACOWAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CLERICAL ASSISTANCE TO COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 678 (H. Rept. 1176).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House not to exceed $100 for additional clerical assistance to the Committee on Enrolled Bills during the remainder of the present session upon the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the usual resolutions passed just before the close of the session. Heretofore the resolution has provided for $200 and this provides for only $100. That is the only difference between this and prior resolutions.

Mr. MANN. If we were sure this was passed "just before" the close of the session we would be glad to make it $200. [Laughter.]

The resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING IN THE RECORD.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter, together with an editorial by the St. Louis Republic, from one of the leading Republicans of Missouri, who resides in my district. The letter was printed in the St. Louis Republic, and I have been requested to have it put in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman what is the nature of the letter.

Mr. HENSLEY. This letter was written by Hon. B. B. Cahoon, of Fredericktown, Mo., who was a colonel in the Union Army, and has been at all times prominent and a very able Republican leader in Missouri. He was at one time a leading candidate for governor in the Republican State convention, and has always stood high in the councils of his party, and no one enjoys the confidence and esteem of all the people more than he.

Mr. MANN. Is he going to support Wilson?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes. And he assigns many good reasons why he is going to support Wilson. He also gives many good reasons why he can not support either Taft or Roosevelt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

THE COTTON WORM.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, and also published as a House document, Bulletin 164 of the Alabama Agricultural Experiment Station of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute on the cotton worm or caterpillar. I will say to the Members from the cotton States that this is perhaps the most up-to-date and authoritative work on the subject of the cotton worm that has yet been published.

Mr. MANN. Which would the gentleman prefer, printing it in the RECORD or printing it as a House document?

Mr. HOBSON. I should like both.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked for both.

Mr. MANN. I know he did; but I do not think we should begin that practice.

Mr. FINLEY. I suggest that the gentleman from Alabama ask to have the document printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOBSON. Then I will just ask that it be published as a part of my remarks, which I will extend in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the cotton worm or caterpillar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLAIM OF UTE INDIANS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the afternoon, when the time came which was allotted to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], unanimous consent was given that he might address the House when he came in, he having been detained by a funeral ceremony. The gentleman is now present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for his courtesy in requesting that I be granted the time that has been allotted to me, and I also want to thank the House for its courtesy in giving me the time.

When the deficiency appropriation bill was pending in Committee of the Whole I offered an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,500,000 to pay a judgment in favor of the Ute Indians, a final judgment of the Court of Claims, the time for appeal having expired. The amendment that I offered is as follows:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,305,257.19, being the net amount of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, dated February 13, 1911, exclusive of the amount awarded for attorney's fee, pursuant to the provisions of the jurisdictional act aproved March 3, 1909, the same to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after the date of said judgment, the amount thereof and the interest accruing thereon to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians and be held as a trust fund in accordance with the act of June 15, 1880, being "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes.

The amendment was not adopted, though it was practically conceded that it was a proper item for the deficiency bill, and that it has always been the practice for the House to make appropriations for such judgments when properly certified by the Secretary of the Treasury, and this judgment was so certified. There was some discussion upon the amendment, and, by implication at least, it was suggested that the Court of Claims in rendering the judgment had not fully and carefully considered the case, and that possibly amounts claimed as a set-off by the Government should have been allowed and deducted from the amount found to be due the Indians, and it was also implied that the Department of Justice had not been diligent in not appealing the case to the Supreme Court. There was also much criticism indulged in because the attorneys who represented the Indians had been paid a large fee, about $211,000, for their services, and the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury was questioned for having paid the same before an appropriation had been made and before the judgment had been collected. I said at that time, Mr. Speaker, that in regard to this Ute case and in other similar cases where there has been more or less scandal connected with large attorney's fees having been paid on old Indian claims, that Congress itself is more responsible than the departments of the Government or the courts, and I want to reiterate that statement now for the purpose of emphasizing the necessity of discontinuing the practice of providing on appropriation bills, in conference, legislation conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to try and determine claims without an opportunity for any committee to scrutinize and examine into the merits of them, and without the House having any opportunity to discuss or ascertain what the claim is or how much may be involved.

I have a letter from the Attorney General that was prompted by the debate when my amendment was being discussed in the House, and before I conclude I am going to ask to have it read, and I hope Members will observe carefully what is contained in the letter. It appears by this letter that the amount claimed in the petition subsequently filed in the case, exclusive of all set-offs, to be exact, was $16,624,122.40. The Attorney General calls attention to the fact that in reply to a call upon the Secretary of the Interior a map was prepared and furnished by the Geological Survey showing that a large area of the land that had been included in the forest reservation was underlaid with coal-bearing rocks, the area being 204,510.54 acres, and if classified as coal lands they would be subject to sale at the statutory price, or from $10 to $20 per acre. On a basis of $10 per acre, the value of that much land would have been $22,496,279.54 and there might have been a finding of a value, as the Attorney General states, of "stupendous proportions." As it was, Mr. Speaker, a judgment was entered for $3,305,257.19, and I am satisfied that the Department of Justice not only ably defended the suit, but is to be congratulated that a much larger judgment was not obtained, considering the very large amount that was claimed, and especially in view of the jurisdictional act which directed the Court of Claims in a way I am sure Congress would not have directed had the legislation been considered as it should have been. The Attorney General in this letter goes into much detail with regard to the case, commenting on the jurisdictional act and the facts, and clearly demonstrates that the court could hardly have done otherwise than to have made the findings that were made and in rendering the judgment that was finally entered.

I think, in view of what the Attorney General states with reference to not having appealed from the judgment of the Court of Claims, that he was fully justified and acted for the best interests of the Government in not doing so. He also comments upon the amount that was allowed by the court for compensation to the attorney and again calls attention to the jurisdictional act which directed the court to fix the fee upon a quantum meruit basis without any limitation being fixed. If we pass jurisdictional acts, such as was passed in this case, making it possible for such large amounts to be recovered, the attorneys are entitled to substantial fees, but if I could have my way the amount beyond which they could not be compensated would always be limited, and if the compensation is limited it will not be possible to obtain legislation by the reprehensible methods that usually have prevailed when an Indian claim has been sent to the Court of Claims. In this case the court said:

It appears that the principal services rendered in this matter were before committees in Congress. Such services can hardly be allowed for on the basis of the professional services of a lawyer, and this fact renders it somewhat difficult to determine the amount properly to be fixed.

I might add that the service usually is not even before committees of Congress, for my observation has been that what is accomplished is done largely by lobbying with a few individual Members and by retaining, on a contingent basis, some one who is known to be close to the particular Member or Senator whose influence is desired. In this particular case it would be quite interesting if we could know just how the $211,000 fee was divided and who the persons are that received a share of it.

The Attorney General's letter also explains how it happened that the attorney got the $211,000 without an appropriation and before the judgment was paid and again shows that because it was authorized by the jurisdictional act passed by Congress, which expressly provided that the compensation awarded to the attorney—shall be paid to such attorney by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury arising from the sale of said ceded lands or from the proceeds of said judgment.

In addition to being desirous of exonerating the Department of Justice and the Court of Claims from any blame in regard to the judgment that was rendered in this case, and the Secretary of the Treasury for paying the large attorneys' fees, I am presenting this letter and have made these few brief observations in the hope that hereafter Congress will adopt a strict rule and refuse to pass any appropriation bill, Indian or otherwise, that contains a provision sending any claim to the Court of Claims, and if such a rule is adopted, I prophesy that attorneys' fees aggregating in the hundreds of thousands of dollars will be a thing of the past, and the Capitol will be less infested by unscrupulous and dishonest lobbyists.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask the Clerk to read, in my time, the letter of the Attorney General.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, August 7, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been directed to the debate on an amendment offered by you during the consideration of the general deficiency bill in the Committee of the Whole House on July 27 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, No. 195, pp. 10383–10385), which amendment was rejected, however, providing for the payment of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims, dated February 13, 1911, in favor of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians.

Had I known that the committee who framed the bill desired further information concerning this judgment, I should have been glad to furnish it. I have concluded, however, to take this means of advising you of the actual facts involved so that you may have them, should the subject come again before the House for consideration.

The criticisms directed against the judgment in the debate were:

First. That the court refused to charge the Indians as a set-off against their claim with sums aggregating $2,251,860.86 (see Finding X, p. 454, incorrectly stated in debate as $3,322,305.34), which it found had been expended for their benefit by the United States under treaties of 1863 and 1868, and that no appeal was taken on behalf of the United States from the judgment.

Second. That the court fixed the compensation of counsel for the Indians at 6 per cent of the amount of the judgment, which included $1,250,000 already in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians, and stated that such compensation was for services rendered almost entirely in the work before the committees of Congress.

In order to fully understand the attitude of the court with respect to these questions and the omission of the Government to appeal from the judgment rendered, it is necessary to briefly review the litigation and some of the provisions of the jurisdictional act.

The suit was one in the nature of an accounting brought by the Indians under a provision inserted in the general Indian appropriation act (approved Mar. 3, 1909; 35 Stat., 788–789) conferring special jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims to final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases and with a direction to the court to allow certain set-offs and counterclaims therein mentioned.

The amount claimed in the petition subsequently filed, exclusive of all set-offs, was $16,624,122.40. Judgment was rendered (less amount of attorneys' fees) for $3,305,257.19, from which it will be seen that the Indians' claims were denied by the court to the extent of over $13,000,000.

An examination of the findings and opinion of the court discloses the fact that the United States established every proposition for which it contended at the trial except one, namely, the right of the Government to charge the Indians with all expenditures made for their benefit under the treaties of 1863 and 1868 (13 Stat., 673, and 15 Stat., 619), upon the ground that no adequate consideration moving from the Indians to the United States had been shown.

The court found the amount of such expenditures under the treaties to be $2,251,860.86, but declined to charge this sum against the Indians for reasons stated in the opinion, as follows:

"While it may be true that the Indian title of the plaintiffs to any territory prior to the treaty of 1863 was not such a title as the defendants would recognize, yet the plaintiffs were located within this territory and had the claim of occupancy of other Indians. Their claim was considered of such importance that the defendants, during the year following the Guadaloupe-Hidalgo treaty, entered into a treaty with them and secured from them a concession for the right of free passage through their territory. (9 Stats., 984.) By the treaty of 1863 (13 Stats., 673) the defendants considered these claims to territorial occupancy of sufficient importance to obtain from them a cession of all "claim, title, etc., to lands within the territory of the United States," excepting certain lands which were set apart to them as their hunting grounds. By the treaty of 1868 (15 Stats., 619) the reservation in question was set apart to the plaintiffs, and by the third article of the treaty the plaintiffs relinquished "all claims and rights in and to any portion of the United States or Territories except" such reservation. Even if we may admit that they had no valid title to any lands, yet they claimed some title and honestly claimed it, and the yielding of such a claim to a party who wishes to purchase it is a good consideration.

"In the case of Sykes v. Chadwick (18 Wall., 141) the Supreme Court, in discussing the sufficiency of consideration, said:

"'If any release is deemed requisite to confirm the title of lands with which one has been connected, though by a proper construction of the law he has no interest in them whatever, still such release will be a good consideration for a promise or for the payment of money.'

"Congress from time to time made appropriations of money to the plaintiffs, which, in terms made in pursuance of the treaties of 1863 and 1868 (13 Stats., 560; 17 Id., 457), after such treaty stipulations with the plaintiffs and after such recognition of their validity for more than 40 years, we do do not think the defendants can successfully set up the claim that these payments were made without adequate consideration. Certainly no such claim would ever be made against any people other than Indians. We do not think, therefore, that the plaintiffs are properly chargeable with any payments made to them under and pursuant to the treaties of 1863 and 1868."

It will thus be seen that the possibility of the Government securing an allowance of this sum, or some part of it, as a counterclaim against the Indians presented the only ground for an appeal on behalf of the United States.

The advisability, however, of prosecuting an appeal as to this single item, notwithstanding the large amount involved, presented a very grave question if for no other reason than that it would afford an opportunity to counsel for the Indians by cross appeal to reopen all the various issues decided adversely to the plaintiffs.

The most serious and perplexing problem presented at the trial of the case was with respect to the value to be placed, under the terms of the jurisdictional act, upon 3,199,258 acres of the plaintiffs' former lands which have been withdrawn from sale by Executive proclamations from time to time, beginning in 1891, and are now contained in eight national forests in the State of Colorado.

The jurisdictional act directed the court to include in the judgment rendered "the value of all lands ceded by the said Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations, or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement, and the money due therefor."

Vast areas of these lands are unquestionably of great value, not only for their coal deposits, but also for their mineral wealth, as well as their enormous growth of timber. The jurisdictional act directed the court to render judgment for the value of the lands thus withdrawn as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by the ratified agreement of 1880. This agreement declared that none of the ceded lands should be liable to entry or settlement except for cash only in accordance with existing law. The cash entries to which, under existing law, the lands were thus subject, were: Preemption and town site, at $1.25 per acre; homestead, at $1.25 per acre; timber and stone, at $2.50 per acre; mineral lands, at $2.50 to $5 per acre; coal lands, at $10 to $20 per acre.

One instance will serve to illustrate the nature of the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs upon the question of value of the land withdrawn. In reply to a call upon the Secretary of the Interior, dated May 12, 1909, a map was prepared and furnished by the Geological Survey, from which it appeared that substantially all of the Battlement National Forest and a large part of the Gunnison Forest are underlaid with coal-bearing rocks. Applying a survey of this field published by the Geological Survey (Bulletin 341 C) to the areas of the ceded lands lying within and forming a part of the forests above named, counsel was enabled to compute upon an apparently conservative basis a total area of 1,112,298 acres of coal land within the ceded limits, which, if disposable under the public-land laws, would essentially be classified as coal lands subject to sale only at the statutory price of from $10 to $20 per acre. It thus became apparent at the outset of the case that the United States was confronted with a possible finding of value under either of the last-named classifications of stupendous proportions. The court, however, adopted the Government's contention and fixed the value of all the ceded lands lying within these forest reservations at a uniform rate, viz, $1.25 per acre, the minimum statutory price for cash entries.

The principal consideration which led to my determination not to take an appeal from the judgment was that in the event of such appeal the plaintiff would have also appealed and thus opened up the case to a contention that certain evidence of value of the lands had been erroneously excluded, which, if admitted, would have resulted in a much larger award than was made. Thus, e. g., a report of an expert board appointed by the Secretary of the Interior from the Geological Survey, which was not admitted in evidence, classified by section, township, and range 204,510.54 acres of the ceded lands lying within the Battlement and Gunnison Forests at a valuation of approximately $22,495,279.54; and the effect of this as evidence of value may readily be imagined.

Under these circumstances and after careful consideration of the findings of fact, opinion, and judgment of the court, it appeared to me that the danger of a larger recovery being enforced against the United States on appeal than that awarded was much greater than the chance of increased advantage to the Government in the higher court. Accordingly I directed that no appeal should be taken from the judgment.

By accepting the decision of the Court of Claims as a final adjudication of the case the following results have been achieved:

The title to 3,199,258 acres of the ceded lands lying within the national forests has been quieted in the United States at the minimum statutory rate of $1.25 per acre.

A long and complicated account between the Indians and the Government, extending from 1863 down to June 30, 1910, has been adjusted and finally settled.

The annuity of $50,000 paid by the Government to the Indians since 1880 is terminated and the credit of $1,250,000 set apart in the Treasury, upon which that annuity has been estimated, has ceased to exist as a trust fund.

The second criticism made in the debate on the proposed amendment appears to have been based upon a misapprehension of fact and also from failure to observe the terms of the jurisdictional act itself under which the case came before the court. That act provides in express terms that upon the rendition of the judgment not only that the credit of $1,250,000, set apart in the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians under the agreement act of 1880, shall cease to exist as a trust fund and that no annuity shall thereafter be estimated or paid therefrom; but, further, that the court should set off against any sum found due the Indians all annuities which they receive under the agreement of 1880 up to the date of rendition of final judgment in the cause, which the court found to be $1,490,075.13, and which amount is accordingly charged against the Indians in the judgment rendered.

It is therefore quite obvious that the compensation of the attorneys for the Indians, which was fixed on a percentage basis on the whole amount of the final judgment, did not include the credit of $1,250,000, set apart in the Treasury and upon which the annuities had been estimated.

While it is true that in a per curiam opinion delivered after the rendition of the judgment upon motion of the Indians' attorneys to fix the amount of fees to be allowed them it was found "that the principal services rendered in this matter were before committees of Congress," and "that such services can hardly be allowed for on the basis of the professional services of a lawyer" (46 C. Cls., 225), it should be observed that the jurisdictional act expressly directs that—

"In rendering judgment herein the court shall fix upon a quantum meruit and set apart just and reasonable compensation to the attorneys on behalf of plaintiffs who have rendered actual services in prosecuting said claim before the committees of Congress and in conducting the said cause before the courts in the name of the attorney of record in the said pending cause or any attorney by him specifically authorized."

It is therefore clear that the court was obliged, under these direct and mandatory terms however unusual in enactments of this character, to consider services before committees of Congress, which, upon the oral argument of the motion to fix fees and in the printed briefs filed in support thereof, counsel for the Indians were able to show extended as far back as 1896.

In the light of this showing and after careful consideration of the whole matter, the court, exercising its best judgment, awarded the attorneys for the Indians 6 per cent of the amount of the judgment, which appears to have been paid to Josiah M. Vale, the attorney of record in the case (under stipulation between plaintiffs' counsel for himself and all other attorneys interested), in accordance with the further direction of the jurisdictional act providing that "said compensation shall be paid to such attorney by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury arising from the sale of said ceded lands or from the proceeds of said judgment."

In conclusion, permit me to add that I have this day addressed the foregoing communication to Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. MANN, and Mr. GILLETT.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

LETTER OF HON. B. B. CAHOON.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to publish in the RECORD the letter of Hon. B. B. Cahoon, which was objected to a little while ago.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I made objection under a misapprehension, and I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD the letter of Mr. Cahoon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

[Editorial from St. Louis (Mo.) Republic of Aug. 5, 1912.]

"A LIFELONG REPUBLICAN FOR WILSON.

"The Republic regards as of deep significance the communication from B. B. Cahoon, sr., one of the well-known Republican leaders of the State, in which he gives his reasons for supporting Woodrow Wilson for President. There is within the Republican Party a progressive element which has found expression in the Republicanism of such leaders as MURDOCK, NORRIS, and the lamented Dolliver which can be satisfied with neither the timid conservatism of Taft nor the time-serving, made-to-order radicalism of Roosevelt. These men represent the best brain and conscience of the party, and their natural place in the campaign upon which we are entering is with the supporters of Woodrow Wilson. In a letter accompanying his communication, Mr. Cahoon says: 'I feel the need is on us that men who think and feel as I do—independent Republican progressives—should not only have a hearing, but that they should speak out freely.' Such men are finding their way to a place among the supporters of Wilson and Marshall by natural gravitation. We bid them welcome:

"FROM A LIFELONG REPUBLICAN.

"To the editor of the Republic:

"These are my reasons for refusing to vote for Roosevelt or Taft and why I mean to vote for Wilson:

"1. While Roosevelt deserves credit for preaching, in generalities, reforms, because thereby he aroused the people from their lethargy and set them to the work of emancipating themselves from the slavery from which they now suffer, because the trusts and the predatory rich have, with the aid of excessive high tariffs—so high they exceed the total labor cost in all manufactured products—destroyed the laws of competition, demand, and supply, yet Roosevelt's promises in nowise comport with his reform performances, for when in power he permitted without a protest the trusts to vastly water stocks in the lawless combinations in restraint of trade, when, under the Sherman interstate-commerce law he could have, as he would had he been a true reformer, enjoined such combinations. No man, save Hanna's vast political assessments in 1896 and 1900 on the predatory rich classes in consideration of permitting them to continue plundering the people, ever controlled in American politics more of that sort of corrupt-election funds than has Roosevelt. He, with Morgan and Perkins's backing, is doing it to-day. For him, then, to pose as a progressive reformer is absurd. He means but to deceive too many good people who are misled by his false protestations of sympathy for the enslaved masses. He simply means to regain power to gratify his vanity. He is so erratic, so unreliable, so untrue, and so outrageous in his political methods, so wedded to notoriety seeking, and so inconsistent as a late-day progressive reformer, that it is sad he is able to deceive so many voters. It is only because they believe he is the embodiment of the reforms they know they must secure to obtain commercial freedom. But truth as to Roosevelt is coming. For one, I do not forget that when LA FOLLETTE, CUMMINS, and other pioneer Progressive Republicans were heroically creating public opinion for the genuine reform that is now to fuse itself into executed laws, Roosevelt had no sympathy or encouragement for them. He seeks now to steal the fruit of their work, to the extent even that in the Chicago convention, when it was put to him by many influential supporters of Taft, who knew he can not be elected, to throw his strength to and thus nominate Hadley or a like progressive reformer, he brutally spurned that offer and thereby placed his coarse selfishness ahead of the harmony and success of the Republican Party and destroyed its only chance to make a winning campaign. On that point he and Taft are dog eat dog. Taft means to run, with inevitable crushing defeat confronting him. Had he been a true Republican, having the success of the party at heart, he, too, would have got out of the way and permitted the nomination of a Progressive Republican, thereby giving us a fighting chance to win.

"Roosevelt's violation of the third-term pledge is consistent with his character. He has no regard for his pledges, and will break them any hour to minister to his ambition. I opposed the third-time nomination of my old commander, Grant, in 1880, as I oppose it now, because the principle is too dangerous to be tolerated by a Republic. Two terms of four years each was long enough for Washington and is long enough for any one to-day. To set, by the third term, a precedent of Diazize-Mexicanize this Government is out of the question. The proposed one term of six years as President is long enough for any man. We utterly refuse to admit the destinies of our country depend on one man; they rest solely on the morality, intelligence, and patriotism of the average American voter, with his voting opinion unfettered by the corrupt manipulation of bosses resulting in such a fraudulent hocus-pocus nomination as was Taft's, whose chief backing, under such boss rule, came from southern delegates who cast no Republican votes. The blind bosses imagine the old days, when men were supposed to vote for yellow-dog candidates, so they had a corrupt party nomination, are still with us. The coming election will open their eyes. Hereafter Presidents will not be nominated as was Taft, in utter disregard of public sentiment. They will be nominated at presidential primaries. This campaign ends boss rule in American politics. It has always been corrupt, always in partnership with the predatory rich, whose special privileges to rob the people the bosses, irrespective of party, conserved. Thereby they lived; thereby they were enriched.

"I refuse to support Taft because he was and is false to the progressive Republican sentiment that nominated and elected him and false to his preelection pledges. He betrayed that sentiment when, immediately on his election, he threw himself into the arms of Aldrich, CANNON, and the reactionaries and sought to persecute real progressive Senators and Congressmen who were in good faith only seeking to carry out the 1908 national Republican platform pledges, especially as to downward tariff revision, consonant with the difference between foreign and domestic cost of manufactured product. Taft's original railroad bill was a pure sell-out to the railroads. His Canadian reciprocity betrayed American farmers, sought to deprive them of all benefit of a protective tariff, and its effect for one year was to cause them to lose 10 cents on each bushel of wheat they sold. Had Taft been firm and but redeemed his own and his party's 1908 pledges and been true to reform progressive Republicanism, the Republican Party would to-day be, as of old, in the ascendency, with this gain:

"He would have sloughed off the Aldrich-Cannon standpat and reactionary Republican bosses and won thousands of progressive Democratic votes while he held the Republican masses. So it is he and Roosevelt have disrupted the Republican Party and destroyed all present hope of victory by it. To vote for Taft is to reward him for all his follies, mistakes, and political crimes. If elected, he would be, as he has been, the tool of the reactionaries in both parties, especially of the high-tariff plunderers, whose excessive profits have been added to for four years past because Taft approved the Aldrich monstrous tariff-revision act and vetoed the lower tariff bills of 1910, not one of which violated the Republican 1908 platform; not one of which but left enough protection to cover the total labor cost in every manufactured article it listed. It will be remembered that the Department of Commerce and Labor several years ago investigated the difference between foreign and domestic cost of production and found the total American labor cost in it averaged about 26 per cent of its wholesale price, which was less than the protection given in every bill Taft vetoed. His admission of ignorance as to that cost difference and asking light as to it by the Tariff Board's findings, which but confirm the progressives' efforts to revise downward the tariff, have been but pretexts to enable him to keep his sell-out pledges and abide his surrender to Aldrich and the reactionaries and to enable the tariff extortionists for four more years to plunder, by their excessive prices, the people; they thereby exacting from them over a billion dollars a year. In short, the money loss to the American people saddled on them by Taft's weak, stupid, or corrupt breaking of his pre-1908 election pledges and our then platform, including the Canadian reciprocity loss to the farmers, has been fully $5,000,000,000—too much money lost to justify our voting for him. Nor have his trust prosecutions resulted in anything but paper trust dissolutions, with increased prices since on all trust products and increased prices of and increased dividends on all so-called divided up trust stocks. The reverse of the restoration of competition has been reached, to say nothing of the restoration of the laws of competition, supply, and demand. In the Tobacco Trust cases Taft's Attorney General, Wickersham, of course with Taft's approval, refused to allow an appeal from the unfair judgment of dissolution and distribution of the assets of the trust. The Government counsel who won the cases condemned that judgment. That proves Taft's administration is a trust buster only to be a trust enricher. Taft's record simply proves he has been a failure and is a political fraud or fool.

"I intend, as do thousands of Republicans, to vote for Wilson, because he stands for all that is good, as neither Roosevelt or Taft do, in our politics; because he represents 95 per cent of the principles we believe in, which principles are approved by 90 per cent of the American voters, irrespective of their past political affiliations; because we believe he will cause to be enacted and enforced the reformatory measures necessary for the emancipation of the American people from the commercial slavery imposed on them by the trusts and the predatory rich; because his nomination was the result of honest public opinion, with Democratic corrupt bosses in the Baltimore convention unhorsed, whereas in the Chicago convention they ruled; and because we believe Wilson is able and patriotic and will restore our Government to our people and divorce it from the rule of the bosses, as heretofore. In this matter our souls are our own, and we have the courage of our convictions. It is not lightly that I, an old Union soldier and a Missouri voting Republican for 44 years, thus, for the first time, resolve to vote against a so-called Republican candidate for President and for the candidate nominated by the Democratic Party. But I clearly see my duty, not alone to the country but even to my own party, to rebuke, by so doing, the infamous methods by which Taft was nominated and his miserable betrayal of the best interests of the American people. Under the chastisement of national defeat, certainly awaiting Taft's candidacy in November, the Aldrich class of corruptionists will be deprived of future political influence and the Republican Party can, and will, in 1916, reorganize, with its honest reformers like LA FOLLETTE, CUMMINS, and Hadley wisely and patriotically leading it, for social and political justice. Therefore, in voting for Wilson, I shall not leave the Republican Party. I shall vote for Wilson expecting to get for the country the same good results that would have followed Hadley's nomination and election as President, if Roosevelt had not at Chicago been the dog in the manger and prevented his nomination.

"As to Missouri politics, believing the rule of Missouri Democracy was for years inimical to the State's good; that the old Democratic guard is still in the saddle and predominates that party in this State, and that Hadley's administration is and has been all that is good and desirable, I shall vote the Republican State ticket, trusting the good done in that administration will be perpetuated under Republican rule.

"FREDERICKTOWN, Mo., August 2, 1912."

HOT SPRINGS OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 639 (H. Rept. 1172).

Resolved, That there be printed as a document 500 copies of the report of the Secretary of the Interior, dated June 7, 1912, and accompanying papers, on H. R. 24737, to authorize the investigation of the physiological and therapeutical effects of the waters of the hot springs of Arkansas and to report upon the application of these waters to the alleviation and cure of diseases.

Mr. MANN. Has this document been printed at all?

Mr. FINLEY. It has not that I know of.

Mr. MANN. Will 500 copies enable the gentleman from Arkansas to send out all he wishes to?

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman will accomplish his purpose, but he can speak for himself. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I introduced the resolution at the urgent request of the Secretary of the Interior. A request has been made several times by the authorities of the Interior Department. I do not expect to distribute it myself, and no motive of that sort moved me in introducing the resolution, ever does, ever has, or ever will. The document will be distributed by the Interior Department, and the gentleman from Illinois may have such reasonable number as he desires.

Mr. MANN. I did not know the gentleman from Arkansas had introduced the resolution. Where is the document?

Mr. FINLEY. I had a copy of the document, which I sent to the Government Printing Office to get an estimate upon. I will say that this matter pertains to the public health, and the Committee on Printing in the House for the last six years—as long as I have been a member of that committee—has always printed matters pertaining to the public health without very much delay.

Mr. MANN. Five hundred copies of the document about the public health will not do much good.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say that that will be obviated. There will be no trouble about that.

Mr. MANN. What is the size of the document?

Mr. FINLEY. About 20 or 30 pages.

Mr. MANN. Does the report show what the cost will be?

Mr. FINLEY. I think the cost will be about $168.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is considerably more than 20 or 30 pages.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not remember how many pages there are.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

TAYLOR SYSTEM OF SHOP MANAGEMENT.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the following privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows.

House concurrent resolution 45 (H. Rept. 1173).

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 10,000 copies of the hearings on the Taylor and other systems of shop management held before the special committee appointed under House resolution 90, passed August 21, 1911, all to be delivered to the superintendent of the document room of the House of Representatives for distribution.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, this resolution speaks for itself, but I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he wishes time.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from South Carolina says, the resolution speaks for itself. There has been an unusual demand for copies of these hearings coming from efficiency engineers throughout the country, from all classes of colleges and universities that desire to have them in their libraries, and from others who are interested in shop management.

The supply which the committee was authorized to have printed has been exhausted for many months, and there have been requests from scores of Members of Congress for copies which we have been unable to supply.

Mr. MANN. What would be the cost of this?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I think about $8,000.

Mr. FINLEY. Eight thousand six hundred and fifty-three dollars and forty-five cents.

Mr. MANN. Is this a joint resolution?

Mr. FINLEY. It is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman expects that there will be an additional number of copies printed for the Senate? This is to print 10,000 copies for the use of the House. Why should they all go to the document room, where Members will not be able to get them?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will answer in my own way, unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania wishes to answer the question. I presume there are quite a number of Members of Congress whom it was supposed by the author of the resolution would not be particularly interested in the disposition of the document, and for that reason they were sent to the House document room. Publications of this sort, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, are not of very great interest in every congressional district of the United States, but they are in many districts, and when they are sent to the document room they are usually disposed of. They are all used and sent out.

Mr. MANN. A report that is on the subject of economy and efficiency, efficiency in shops, I should say would be of general interest throughout the United States. I have no objection, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] wants to have a large number of these printed, in order to meet demands upon him.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. The object we had in mind in having them go to the document room was this: That undoubtedly there will be, as there has been, a greater demand for these hearings in districts where the population is largely industrial or commercial, and there would not be the same demand for them in districts where the population is principally agricultural. By having those hearings go to the document room those districts where the greatest demand is for them could be supplied accordingly. That is the only purpose.

Mr. MANN. The document room does not have very good facilities for handling a large number of bulky documents.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that he and I are both well aware that the folding room is the place that is usually loaded down with uncalled-for documents; that is, the Members of Congress to whom they are credited do not send them out. That is not true of the document room. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

COMMISSION ON MILK STANDARDS.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 676, authorizing the printing and delivery of 10,000 copies of the "Report of the Commission on Milk Standards, appointed by the New York Milk Committee," which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 676.

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Members of the House of Representatives, and delivered to the House document room for distribution, 10,000 copies of the "Report of the Commission on Milk Standards, appointed by the New York Milk Committee," as published in the Public Health Reports, volume 27, No. 19, May 10, 1912.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will also call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report (H. Rept. 1175), as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the House resolution providing for the printing of 10,000 copies of the "Report of the Commission on Milk Standards, Appointed by the New York Milk Committee," reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to with the following amendments: On lines 1 and 2 strike out the words "the Members of the House of Representatives and delivered to"; second, on line 3 strike out the words "ten thousand" and insert the words "fifty thousand."

The estimated cost will be $473.14.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the gentleman has amended that so as to have more than 10,000 copies.

Mr. FINLEY. The Committee on Printing anticipated the gentleman. This is a very valuable publication, and I am sure that 10,000 copies are entirely too small a number.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On lines 1 and 2 strike out the words "the Members of the House of Representatives and delivered to."

On line 3 strike out the words "ten thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifty thousand."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

LAWS RELATING TO HOMESTEADS.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now call up House resolution 573, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 573.

Resolved, That 100,000 copies of the public act entitled "An act to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to homesteads," approved by the President June 6, 1912, and known as the 3-year homestead act, Sixty-second Congress, second session, be printed for the use of the House document room.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read the report (H. Rept. 1171).

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 573) providing for the printing of 100,000 copies of the 3-year homestead act, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The estimated cost will be $51.90.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PROPAGATION OF FRESH-WATER MUSSELS.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 483, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 483.

Resolved, That there be printed as a House document 3,000 copies of the publication issued by the Bureau of Fisheries entitled "Studies on the Reproduction and Artificial Propagation of Fresh-Water Mussels," by Prof. George Lefevre and Prof. W. C. Curtis, of the University of Missouri, for the use of the House document room.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask that the Clerk read the report (H. Rept. 1174).

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing having had under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 483) providing for the printing of 3,000 copies of the publication issued by the Bureau of Fisheries entitled "Studies on the Reproduction and Artificial Propagation of Fresh-Water Mussels," reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION COMMISSION.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate concurrent resolution 5, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 5.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound, with accompanying illustrations, for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives, 2,175 copies of the reports of the Immigration Commission, 475 for the use of the Senate, 1,200 for the use of the House of Representatives, 250 for the use of the Senate Committee on Immigration, and 250 for the use of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization; and that there be printed 8,000 additional copies of the abstracts of reports of the commission, 1,900 for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,250 for the use of the Senate Committee on Immigration, and 1,250 for the use of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the resolution.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read the report (H. Rept. 1178).

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5) providing for the printing of 500 copies of the report of the Immigration Commission and 8,400 copies of the abstracts of the report of the Immigration Commission, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to with the following amendments: On line 4, after the word "Commission," strike out the words "two hundred and fifty for the use of the Senate Committee on Immigration and two hundred and fifty for the use of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization" and insert the words "five hundred for the use of the Senate and sixteen hundred for the use of the House of Representatives," and that four sets be supplied to all members of the Immigration Commission who are not Members of Congress. On line 8, after the words "abstracts of reports of the Commission," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert the following: "Five thousand five hundred for the use of the House of Representatives, two thousand five hundred for the use of the Senate, two hundred for the use of the Committee on Immigration of the House of Representatives, and two hundred for the use of the Committee on Immigration of the Senate."

The estimated cost will be $18,765.40.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the point of order upon the resolution, let me ask the gentleman: There have already been ordered printed the usual number of this report, I think?

Mr. FINLEY. Only printed by the Immigration Commission; not otherwise, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. Well, they are in the document room unobtainable, but they are there, and they would not be in the document room unless the usual number had been printed.

Mr. FINLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. I do not understand there is but one set for each Member obtainable in the document room.

Mr. MANN. I understand; I am not complaining that we are going to order too much printing. They are delivering this report printed in the document now, where Members can not as yet obtain it. They are holding them until it is complete. Now, does the gentleman think ordering printed what purports to be two sets for each Member, but which will not be as much as two sets for each Member of Congress, is enough?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman this will only give each Member of Congress one set.

Mr. MANN. This gives the House 400 and they have already 300, which is not enough to go around, under the usual number.

Mr. FINLEY. The 300 are not provided for in this resolution.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. There are not enough provided for. Is it possible you are only going to provide two sets for each Member for the entire United States? The cost of printing two or three additional sets would not cost very much.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman had paid close attention to the resolution——

Mr. MANN. I did.

Mr. FINLEY. The hearings, etc.——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand.

Mr. FINLEY. There are 5,500 copies of that report of the commission for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,500 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how many volumes there will be——

Mr. FINLEY. There will be forty-odd.

Mr. MANN. There will be a great many volumes and it ought to be of some interest or else it never should have been printed. If it is of any interest at all upon as important a subject as that, there ought to be more than one copy for each Member of Congress. I might want to keep my set for my library; certainly there are some people in my district, at least one I know, who would like to have a set and the libraries would desire them.

Mr. FINLEY. This resolution is one of the first passed by the Senate. It is Senate concurrent resolution No. 5.

Mr. MANN. Why not make the number for the House at least 2,500? That will not cost very much more, it will not cost anything but the paper.

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. I will say to him if it is found necessary and there is a demand for additional copies, why it will be a very easy matter to have a reprint——

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that. Here these plates are put upon the press to print 40 volumes, 500 copies. The gentleman sees it will not cost a great deal more to print 500 additional copies—it will be only the paper—but it is different if there is a demand and you have to put it on the press again.

Mr. FINLEY. I said if there is a demand for this publication it would be an easy matter to have a reprint, and at a small cost—at no greater cost than it would cost now.

Mr. MANN. The mere putting of these plates on the press again will cost more than the additional number of copies printed of which I have spoken.

Mr. FINLEY. I am not a printer, but I do not quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I am not, but I have been, and I may be mistaken on that.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois offer an amendment to increase the number of copies?

Mr. MANN. I will, if I am recognized for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose now.

Mr. MANN. I move to increase the number for the Senate so as to make it read 500, and for the House 1,500.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, the gentleman means the hearings?

Mr. MANN. Yes; the hearings.

Mr. BURNETT. The whole set.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, as it originally came from the Senate it only provides for 200 copies for each of the two committees, the Committee on Immigration of the Senate and the Committee on Immigration of the House.

I went before the Printing Committee and I stated I thought it would be very unjust in us, that I did not see why the committees should have all and the Members of the House should have none. Of course, there will be more calls made upon the committees for copies of this, but certainly many calls will be made upon the Members of the House, and my suggestion to the Printing Committee was that we have 40,000—at least 10,000 for the use of the House—and I believe 30,000 volumes of that print could be sold, because I understand there have been requests and demands for this publication from a number of European colleges and universities, and many from all over this country, but upon inquiry of the chairman of the committee it was thought the expense of even printing 10,000 copies of the publication would be perhaps too great. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what idea he has about the cost of printing the number suggested?

Mr. FINLEY. I have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. There is another practical question to which I would like to call attention, and that is whether the plates can not be held and not distributed or broken down so as to have a reprint of this if necessary? I do not believe the number the gentleman asked for is anywhere adequate or will prove to be near adequate.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman, doubtless a great many people will apply for a complete set, and they ought to be in the libraries where people can read, follow, and consult them.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I think so, too.

Mr. MANN. That was the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I think the Members ought to have one or two. I think there ought to be several copies for them.

Mr. FINLEY. I understood the gentleman's amendment to apply to the number required for the use of the House and the Senate, copies which would go to the Members of these two bodies.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. And be distributed through the folding room?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I think that is a wise suggestion. I would like to ask the gentleman if the plates could not be retained for a further printing? The gentleman from Illinois says that he was once a printer.

Mr. MANN. Yes. I said the getting out of the plates hereafter would cost more than the additional number of copies to be printed would cost now.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman's amendment apply to the abstract or to the full sets?

Mr. MANN. My amendment applies to the full sets of hearings.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "one" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five," and by striking out the word "four" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen," so that the amendment will read "five hundred for the use of the Senate and fifteen hundred for the use of the House of Representatives."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois and to the gentleman from South Carolina that this arrangement of fifteen hundred would give only about three copies to each Member of the House.

Mr. MANN. Then make it sixteen hundred.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest that it be made 2,000 copies.

Mr. MANN. Make it sixteen hundred.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes; make it sixteen hundred copies.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, "fifteen hundred" will be changed to "sixteen hundred."

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. There are several members of the commission who are not now Members of the House. That resolution, as it now stands, would make no provision for giving copies to those gentlemen who have gone out. There were three gentlewho were civilians, appointed by the President, and there were two Members of the House, as I remember, Mr. Bennett and Mr. Howell, who were members of the commission and who are not now Members of the House. It strikes me that it would be proper courtesy to those gentlemen not to require them to depend on Members for receiving their copies. I suggest that an equal number be given to the members of the commission who are not now Members of the House as would be accorded to the Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. Let this amendment be disposed of first. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Now, as to the amendment spoken of by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that four sets be supplied to each member of the commission who is not now a Member of Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. At this time—who are not now Members of Congress?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; who are not now Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of the amendment, the following words: "And that four sets each be supplied to the members of the Immigration Commission who are not Members of Congress."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 8, after the words "abstracts of the reports of the commission," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert the following:

"Five thousand five hundred for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,500 for the use of the Senate, 200 for the use of the Committee on Immigration of the House of Representatives, and 200 for the Committee on Immigration of the Senate."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the amended concurrent resolution.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

HANDBOOK OF AMERICAN INDIANS.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 2.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of Bulletin No. 30, in two parts, of the Bureau of American Ethnology, entitled "Handbook of American Indians," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Bureau of Ethnology.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report (H. Rept. 1177).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Are those to be distributed from the folding room?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FINLEY, from the Committee on Printing, makes the following report to accompany Senate concurrent resolution 2:

The Committee on Printing having had under consideration the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 2) providing for the printing of 3,500 copies of Bulletin No. 30, in two parts, of the Bureau of American Ethnology, entitled "Handbook of American Indians," reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The estimated cost will be $3,961.26.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend that resolution by making the number 4,000 for the House and doubling the number named in the resolution for the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two," and strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four," so that the resolution will read, "of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Bureau of Ethnology."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Is this the resolution which I introduced?

Mr. FINLEY. This is Senate resolution No. 2.

Mr. MANN. I think I introduced a resolution for printing 10,000 copies. However, I am satisfied with this.

Mr. FINLEY. I have no objection to the gentleman having his day in court.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina what will be the cost of printing this document?

Mr. FINLEY. It is $3,961.26.

Mr. FOSTER. So that this would make it something over $7,000?

Mr. FINLEY. No; it would not be that much. The initial cost is a very large part. I would say it would cost something like $5,000.

Mr. MANN. Is my colleague familiar with the work?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, the reason I ask for this increase in the number is that I have already received a great many requests for the book, and I presume the same is true of the other Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

Mr. WILLIS. Are these to be distributed through the folding room?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE ROAD HORSE.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read House joint resolution 280, to provide for the printing of 100,000 copies of the special report on "The Road Horse," used in Rural Delivery Service, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed as a House document 100,000 copies of a pamphlet entitled "The Road Horse," as edited and prepared by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, with special application to the selection and management of the road horse used in the Rural Delivery Service; 30,000 copies thereof for the use of the House of Representatives, 20,000 copies thereof for the use of the Senate, and 50,000 copies thereof for distribution through the Post Office Department to rural delivery carriers and other postal-service employees using horses in the transportation and delivery of the mail.

The Clerk read the report of the Committee on Printing, as follows:

The Committee on Printing having had under consideration the House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 280) providing for the printing of 100,000 copies of the special report on the "Road horse," as used in the Rural Delivery Service, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to with the following amendments: On lines 2 and 3 strike out the words "one hundred thousand" and insert the words "ninety-three thousand"; on line 8, after the word "Service," strike out the semicolon and insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph; on line 3, after the word "document" and before the word "one," insert the words "for the use of the House document room"; fourth, strike out the enacting clause and in its place insert the word "Resolved," and amend the title so as to read "Resolution," making the resolution a House resolution.

The estimated cost will be $500.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to make this suggestion to the gentleman, that instead of trying to convert a House joint resolution into a House simple resolution the committee report a House resolution in lieu of the House joint resolution and that the House joint resolution be laid upon the table. No one can keep track of bills and resolutions of the House in the attempt to convert bills by number into resolutions by different numbers.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that he and I have been here long enough to know that if we undertake to correct every bill, joint resolution, concurrent resolution, and simple resolution that comes to our attention it will take a great deal of time. This certainly accomplishes the purpose and makes it a simple House resolution.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can simply report a House resolution in lieu of the House joint resolution and ask that the House joint resolution be laid on the table. That disposes of the joint resolution and provides a new simple resolution, which the House can pass.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman objecting or not?

Mr. MANN. I am trying to find out whether I am going to object. Unless that is to be done, I will not consent to try to change the character of the resolution.

Mr. FINLEY. I have some doubt as to whether the gentleman's objection will lie or not.

The SPEAKER. This is a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. FINLEY. The reason why I asked unanimous consent is because a certain number of these copies are to go to the Post Office Department.

Mr. MANN. Oh, an objection lies. It can only come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. FINLEY. If it is on the ground that 50,000 copies are to be distributed through the Post Office Department, I think that objection is good. I do not concede that the other ground is a good one. If the gentleman from Illinois wishes to make that objection it is good. I do not concede the other ground, that the resolution as originally introduced was not privileged.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object or not?

Mr. MANN. Unless the gentleman offers it as a new resolution, instead of endeavoring to amend a House joint resolution by changing what is after the title, what is in the title, and what is before the title, I shall object.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman makes his objection on the ground——

Mr. MANN. I have not stated the ground of my objection.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman makes it on the ground that a number of these documents are to go to the Post Office Department, his objection lies. Otherwise I do not concede it at all, and I submit my request.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois makes his objection on that ground the Chair sustains the objection.

Mr. MANN. I suppose I can object on any ground I please, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. FINLEY. If it is on the other ground, I think it will be overruled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consider it as objected to on that ground.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit a request for unanimous consent. Senate bill 2117 has been reported by our committee, and a somewhat similar bill passed this House unanimously reported by our committee last year. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 2117, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and change the title to correspond.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of Senate bill 2117 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States shall hereafter be known and designated as the Public Health Service, and all laws pertaining to the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States shall hereafter apply to the Public Health Service, and all regulations now in force, made in accordance with law for the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States shall apply to and remain in force as regulations of and for the Public Health Service until changed or rescinded. The Public Health Service may study and investigate the diseases of man and conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof, including sanitation and sewage and the pollution either directly or indirectly of the navigable streams and lakes of the United States, and it may from time to time issue information in the form of publications for the use of the public.

"SEC. 2. That beginning with the 1st day of October next after the passage of this act the salaries of the commissioned medical officers of the Public Health Service shall be at the following rates per annum: Surgeon General, $6,000; Assistant Surgeon General, $4,000; senior surgeon, of which there shall be 10 in number, on active duty, $3,500; surgeon, $3,000; passed assistant surgeon, $2,400; assistant surgeon, $2,000; and the said officers, excepting the Surgeon General, shall receive an additional compensation of 10 per cent of the annual salary as above set forth for each five years' service, but not to exceed in all 40 per cent: Provided, That the total salary, including the longevity increase, shall not exceed the following rates: Assistant Surgeon General, $5,000; senior surgeon, $4,500; surgeon, $4,000: Provided further, That there may be employed in the Public Health Service such help as may be provided for from time to time by Congress.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to move to amend by changing the date from July 1 to October 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this Senate bill, and to lay on the table a similar House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, just a moment. This bill which the Clerk has read is the bill which passed the House in the Sixty-first Congress, is it?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is right; it passed this House after an all day's discussion, and was a unanimous report from our committee.

Mr. FOSTER. And it contains the same language that was in the bill at that time?

Mr. ADAMSON. This is the same bill. The only change is in the date of July 1 to October 1, when it shall take effect.

Mr. FOSTER. This next coming October?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What increase of appropriation is there? Does it provide for any increase of appropriation?

Mr. ADAMSON. It provides for a much smaller sum than is fixed in the Senate bill. It is the administrative features we want.

Mr. FOSTER. I agree with the gentleman that the bill is of a good deal of importance, and it does have some features not provided for in the present law.

Mr. MANN. This bill gives the longevity pay that they now have in the Navy and the Army, but does not increase the allowances to the men that they have in the Army and Navy.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is a good deal less than the Senate bill provides for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill, and moves to amend by substituting the House bill after the enacting clause.

Mr. ADAMSON. To substitute what the Clerk read for all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause with the date changed from July 1 to October 1.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amended bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER, COLO.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3974) to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Denver, Colo.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I told the gentleman from Colorado that I should object to the consideration of this bill in the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who told me that he did not desire the bill to come up in his absence.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not understand the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Illinois does not mean to say that he told me that he would object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I thought I did. If the gentleman thinks I did not, I will withdraw the statement.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if he makes objection at the instance of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. MANN. I shall not put myself under cross-examination.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is not obliged to answer the gentleman from Colorado. Every man has the right to object to anything called up by unanimous consent without giving a reason.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say that I misunderstood the gentleman from Illinois.

UNITED STATES COURT, EASTERN AND MIDDLE DISTRICTS OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25520) to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 107 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 107. The State of Tennessee is divided into three districts, to be known as the eastern, middle, and western districts of Tennessee. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Bledsoe, Bradley, Hamilton, James, McMinn, Marion, Meigs, Polk, Rhea, and Sequatchie, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Anderson, Blount, Campbell, Claiborne, Grainger, Jefferson, Knox, Loudon, Monroe, Morgan, Roane, Sevier, Scott, and Union, which shall constitute the northern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Carter, Cocke, Greene, Hamblen, Hancock, Hawkins, Johnson, Sullivan, Unicoi, and Washington, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the southern division of said district shall be held at Chattanooga on the fourth Monday in April and the second Monday in November; for the northern division, at Knoxville on the fourth Monday in May and the first Monday in December; and for the northeastern division, at Greeneville on the first Monday in March and the third Monday in September. The middle district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Bedford, Cannon, Cheatham, Coffee, Davidson, Dickson, Franklin, Giles, Grundy, Hickman, Humphreys, Houston, Lawrence, Lewis, Lincoln, Marshall, Maury, Montgomery, Moore, Robertson, Rutherford, Stewart, Sumner, Trousdale, Warren, Wayne, Williamson, and Wilson, which shall constitute the Nashville division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Clay, Cumberland, Dekalb, Fentress, Jackson, Macon, Overton, Pickett, Putnam, Smith, Van Buren, and White, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the Nashville division of said district shall be held at Nashville on the second Monday in March and the fourth Monday in September; and for the northeastern division, at Cookeville on the third Monday in April and the first Monday in November: Provided, That suitable accommodations for holding court at Cookeville shall be provided by the county or municipal authorities without expense to the United States. The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Dyer, Fayette, Haywood, Lauderdale, Shelby, and Tipton, which shall constitute the western division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Benton, Carroll, Chester, Crockett, Decatur, Gibson, Hardeman, Hardin, Henderson, Henry, Lake, McNairy, Madison, Obion, Perry, and Weakley, including the waters of the Tennessee River to low-water mark on the eastern shore thereof wherever such river forms the boundary line between the western and middle districts of Tennessee, from the north line of the State of Alabama north to the point in Henry County, Tenn., where the south boundary line of the State of Kentucky strikes the west bank of the river, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the western division of said district shall be held at Memphis on the fourth Monday in May and November; and for the eastern division, at Jackson on the fourth Mondays in April and October. The clerk of the court for the western district shall appoint a deputy, who shall reside at Jackson. The marshal for the western district shall appoint a deputy, who shall reside at Jackson. The marshal for the eastern district shall appoint a deputy, who shall reside at Chattanooga. The clerk of the court for the eastern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Knoxville, at Chattanooga, and at Greeneville, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee if this bill changes the boundaries of certain judicial districts in Tennessee?

Mr. AUSTIN. It does not change the boundaries, it is only the time of holding the Federal courts that it makes a change in.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this provide for any additional officers?

Mr. AUSTIN. None whatever.

Mr. MANN. There is no additional expense put upon the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this satisfactory to the rest of the delegation?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; it was reported by my colleague, Judge HOUSTON, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee, and he will verify the statement I have made.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill makes no change whatever except in the time of holding the courts in the eastern and middle divisions of Tennessee. There is no change in the western division. That is the only object of the bill. It is entirely satisfactory to the courts and it is requested by the presiding judges. It is satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. AUSTIN. And it is for the convenience of the court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague, Judge HOUSTON, to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 4, line 3, by striking out the word "west" and inserting the word "east." This is a copy of the latter part of section 107 without any change whatever, but it appears that it was not called to the attention of the committee until the bill was reported. The word "west" is evidently a mistake. The boundary is fixed at the east bank of the Tennessee River, and by some inadvertence the word "west" is inserted, whereas it should be "east," and that makes it conform to the other part of the same section.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 3, strike out the word "west" and insert in lieu thereof the word "east."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amended bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. AUSTIN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRAGG HILL LAND CO.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 19276) authorizing the Secretary of War to convey by deed to D. B. Loveman, or D. B. Loveman, president of the Bragg Hill Land Co., of Hamilton County, a strip or parcel of land in Hamilton County, Tenn., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to D. B. Loveman, or D. B. Loveman, president of Bragg Hill Land Co., by deed in fee simple, a strip of land 15 feet wide off of the reservation, east side of the Crest Road, north end, adjoining north side of the iron fence, from lot 63 to the Crest Road, so as to secure ingress and egress to lots Nos. 63, 64, 65, 66, and 67, Crest Road Government Reservation, all in township 2, range 4, west basis line, Ocoee and Hamilton Counties, Tenn., it being a part of the United States reservation called Bragg Hill Headquarters, as shown in map hereto attached. This conveyance is made for the purpose of correcting the error made in the granting of the reservation and Crest Road by said Loveman and Bragg Hill Land Co. to the Government, by which the lots mentioned were unintentionally cut off from the Crest Road.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire only to say that I thought the House had adopted the rule which required the printing of a Unanimous Consent Calendar so that Members might know what was coming on for consideration. The evils of the former system were apparent, very apparent. I do not think that anybody in the House wishes to go back to the old way of bringing up at haphazard bills for consideration by unanimous consent.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Is it not true that it is impossible to get a bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar from the Private Calendar? This bill is on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. No; it is not.

Mr. LAFFERTY. My understanding is that that is contrary to the rule.

Mr. MANN. It is not on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin and to the House practically what he said this morning. The Chair has no more desire to break down that rule than any other Member of the House, but there were four or five matters in which the Government of the United States is interested, and if certain bills or resolutions did not go through it would stop Government work. The Chair made that statement this morning. If matters of that kind address themselves to the good judgment of the House and to the Speaker, well and good, but the Chair took precaution to state that so that if any gentleman wanted to object, he would have an opportunity to do so. The Chair has no disposition to break down that rule.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I knew that, of course.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair had to do it over again, he is inclined to think that he would have shut it off this morning.

Mr. COOPER. I knew the attitude of the Speaker on this subject from what I have heard him say in debate and in private conversation. The former system was absolutely intolerable. At times it presented the greatest opportunity for abuse.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make one more statement: He refused to recognize any of these gentlemen until, in the first place, they had gone to the minority leader to see if he had any objection. Of course, the Chair does not want to violate the Rules of the House and only desired to help out where it would affect the Government.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. PAGE. Very well, I will withhold it for a while.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it requires an explanation, but this bill, when reported, was placed on the Private Calendar through a natural, but still an erroneous, reference. It came up on the Private Calendar and was given consideration by the House as a unanimous-consent matter. I had it stricken off the Private Calendar because I did not think it ought to pass on the Private Calendar when it did not belong there. I think no one in the House at that time was opposed to the bill upon its merits, and therefore I stated to the gentleman from Tennessee that I would not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, holding still in reserve my objection for a moment, I simply wish to state that where there is a real Government emergency involved I can well see how there might be unanimous consent asked to consider legislation of a remedial nature. I do not know as to the pending bill and shall not enter any objection to it, after the statement of the gentleman from Illinois as to its having been placed on the wrong calendar and its now being before the House as it is. I wish, however, to give notice that never again will I refrain from objecting to similar matters, except in the case of great emergency, in which the Government of the United States is interested, or where some Member of the House or his family is affected in a serious way. The House is entitled to notice, by printed calendar, of what bills are coming on for consideration.

The SPEAKER. There is no real difference between the gentleman from Wisconsin and the Chair. For instance, not long ago the Chair recognized a gentleman to call up a resolution affecting the flood sufferers in the South. Everybody wanted that resolution to go through, and wanted it to go through immediately. It would not be well to wait until the time came for the next day for the consideration of bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. The Chair assumed to sit somewhat in the nature of a court of equity in that matter and let the resolution have the right of way.

Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 4, strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and" in lieu thereof.

On page 2, line 3, after the word "attached," insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That the said D. B. Loveman, or D. B. Loveman, president of the Bragg Hill Land Co., cause the park fence of the Chickamauga National Park to be moved the necessary distance under the supervision and to the satisfaction of the park commission, and without expense to the Government."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was engrossed and ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "Authorizing the Secretary of War to convey by deed to D. B. Loveman, and D. B. Loveman, president of Bragg Hill Land Co., of Hamilton County, a certain strip or parcel of land in Hamilton County, Tenn."

On motion of Mr. MOON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 333. To authorize the loan of obsolete Springfield rifles, etc., to the historical pageant committee, Philadelphia, Pa.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, August 12, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, August 12, 1912.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the order of the Senate of August 10, 1912.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the Post-Office appropriation bill, without interfering with the unfinished business, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911.

At this stage of the session, when we ought to do nothing except complete the great supply bills, I am opposed to calling up any new legislation, and I should not ask for the consideration of this bill were it not that it is to carry out a convention with three other countries. We are now behindhand on our pledges made under that treaty, and if this bill does not pass it will leave the United States in a most embarrassing and unfortunate situation. If the convention with England, Russia, and Japan should be abrogated by the other powers owing to failure on our part to fulfill the terms, it will mean the resumption of pelagic sealing and the absolute destruction of the seal herds.

The Committee on Foreign Relations is unanimous in desiring the passage of the bill. There is one amendment which will be debated, but I think not at length. The bill ought to be disposed of before this session of Congress adjourns if we are to keep our faith with foreign countries.

Mr. SMOOT. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that there is a special order that, immediately following the disposition of the Post Office appropriation bill, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 7343, to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala. Would not that conflict with the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to interfere with that measure. It is for the Senate to say whether our convention with Russia, England, and Japan shall be set aside or not. My only duty is to call it up and lay it before the Senate, and I shall do so at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I am in full accord with the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I know it. I do not want to interfere with the bill for a dam across the Coosa River at all, but I think the convention with three other powers, which we have agreed to and which I have been trying for weeks to get up, ought, for the sake of our good name and good faith, to be disposed of by the Senate before we adjourn.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: In the notice which I gave this morning immediately after the Senate assembled, I find some Senators did not quite understand what I intended. The notice I give is that if the Post Office appropriation bill shall be disposed of to-day, I shall move, immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow, to take up the seal bill, in order to carry out our convention with Russia, Japan, and England. If the Post Office appropriation bill is not finished to-day, that will be taken up to-morrow immediately after the routine morning business, and I desire to give a similar notice in that case for Wednesday.

I should like those notices to be entered on the calendar.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to give notice that, immediately following the bill to which the Senator from Massachusetts referred, I shall call up Senate joint resolution No. 78, being a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the election of President.

Mr. KENYON. In connection with the matter referred to by the senior Senator from Iowa, I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill (S. 4043) to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases.

Brown, on behalf of the Utah Indian War Veteran Association, extending an invitation to the Senate of the United States to attend the second grand State camp fire and reunion of the Utah Indian war veterans, to be held at Springfield, Utah, August 20 to 23, 1912, which was ordered to lie on the table.

RURAL CREDITS IN EUROPE.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I give notice that on Wednesday next, immediately after the close of the routine morning business, I shall ask to submit some remarks on the joint resolution (S. J. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted, insert the words "one hundred"; and the House agree to the same.

HENRY E. BURNHAM,
REED SMOOT,
BENJAMIN F. SHIVELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
WILLIAM A. DICKSON,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2117) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States shall hereafter be known and designated as the Public Health Service, and all laws pertaining to the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States shall hereafter apply to the Public Health Service, and all regulations now in force, made in accordance with law for the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States, shall apply to and remain in force as regulations of and for the Public Health Service until changed or rescinded. The Public Health Service may study and investigate the diseases of man and conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof, including sanitation and sewage and the pollution either directly or indirectly of the navigable streams and lakes of the United States, and it may from time to time issue information in the form of publications for the use of the public.

SEC. 2. That beginning with the 1st day of October next after the passage of this act the salaries of the commissioned medical officers of the Public Health Service shall be at the following rates per annum: Surgeon General, $6,000; Assistant Surgeon General, $4,000; senior surgeon, of which there shall be 10 in number, on active duty, $3,500; surgeon, $3,000; passed assistant surgeon, $2,400; assistant surgeon, $2,000; and the said officers, excepting the Surgeon General, shall receive an additional compensation of 10 per cent of the annual salary as above set forth for each five years' service, but not to exceed in all 40 per cent: Provided, That the total salary, including the longevity increase, shall not exceed the following rates: Assistant Surgeon General, $5,000; senior surgeon, $4,500; surgeon, $4,000: Provided further, That there may be employed in the Public Health Service such help as may be provided for from time to time by Congress.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes."

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I had understood that the only amendment made to the bill was in the way of increasing salaries. I should be glad if the Senator from Florida would allow the matter to stand over until I can look into it a little further. It seems to be quite a radical change of the bill which was originally passed by the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are some changes, but I think the House amendment is substantially the same as the Senate bill.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator will allow the matter to lie over until I can look into it, it may be that I shall not desire to object to its consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I will not press the matter at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter will lie on the table for the present.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 23676. An act to regulate the officering and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States; and

H. R. 24025. An act to amend sections 4400 and 4488 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the inspection of steam vessels, and section 1 of an act approved June 24, 1910, requiring apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean-going steamers.

H. R. 19276. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convey by deed to D. B. Loveman, and D. B. Loveman, president of Bragg Hill Land Co., of Hamilton County, a certain strip or parcel of land in Hamilton County, Tenn., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 22002. An act supplementing the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled "Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits," etc., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 25520. An act to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 24119. An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests; to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That bill is exactly like Senate bill 4468, Order of Business No. 842, on the calendar. I ask that the House bill be substituted on the calendar for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made, and the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

H. R. 25806. An act to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SMOOT. A similar bill (S. 7339) passed the Senate July 24, 1912. The bill as passed by the House is word for word the same as the bill passed by the Senate on that day. I ask that the House bill be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks now for the consideration of the House bill.

Mr. REED. I do not like to object to that, but I have some protests in regard to the bill. I want to look at them, and I hope the Senator will not press his request.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask that the bill go to the calendar. I have not heard of any protests or I would not have asked for immediate consideration of the bill. I ask that it go to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the bill be placed on the calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered SYSTEMS OF SHOP MANAGEMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

House resolution 45.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 10,000 copies of the hearings on the Taylor and other systems of shop management held before the special committee appointed under H. Res. 90, passed August 21, 1911, all to be delivered to the superintendent of the document room of the House of Representatives for distribution.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the unanimous-consent agreement will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Monday, August 12, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department, etc., and will first dispose of the paragraphs relating to the subject of Federal aid in the construction of highways and amendments that may be pending or offered to such paragraphs; that no Senator shall be permitted to speak more than once or for a longer period than 10 minutes.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum, and the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Clark, Wyo.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Bailey	Cullom	Massey	Smoot
Bankhead	Cummins	Nelson	Stone
Bourne	Dillingham	Overman	Sutherland
Brandegee	Fletcher	Page	Swanson
Bristow	Gallinger	Perkins	Thornton
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Pomerene	Tillman
Burnham	Johnston, Ala.	Reed	Townsend
Burton	Kenyon	Root	Works
Catron	Lodge	Sanders
Chamberlain	McCumber	Simmons

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was requested to state that the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] are engaged in committee work, and are therefore detained; but I understand that they will come into the Senate if their presence is necessary to make a quorum.

I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names, not a quorum. Without objection, the list of absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. OLIVER answered to his name when called.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. JONES, and Mr. CLAPP entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute found on page 37, the motion being made to strike out and insert.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the amendment which I have introduced to perfect the amendment, and it comes first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's amendment was to the text of the bill. The amendment will be read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have changed the amendment as amended at the suggestioin of some Senators who thought the amount was too large. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that this is a substitute or recommendation to strike out and insert.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. I reserve the point of order on the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 15, in lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out by the Senate committee it is proposed to insert the following:

That there shall be, and is hereby, annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid as hereinafter provided, to each State for the building and repairing of good roads for star and rural routes now established, or which may be hereafter established, the sum of $250,000 for the year ending June 30, 1913, and an annual increase of the amount of such appropriation thereafter for 10 years by an additional sum of $25,000 over the preceding year, to be applied only for the building and repairing of good roads for rural and star routes, established or hereafter established: Provided, That no State shall receive any of the benefits of this act unless such State shall appropriate a sum at least equal to the amount herein appropriated for a similar purpose.

SEC. —. That the sums hereby appropriated to the States for the support and maintenance of good roads for rural and star routes now established, or hereafter to be established, shall be annually paid on or before the 31st day of July of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Secretary of Agriculture and Postmaster General, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the State treasurer, or to such officers as shall be designated by the laws of said State to receive the same, and such treasurer shall be required to submit to the governor of each State, and the governor to the Postmaster General and the Secretary of Agriculture, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement of the amount so received and of its disbursements. The grants of moneys authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States to the purpose of said grants: Provided, That payment of such installments of the appropriation herein made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of the legislature of such State meeting next after the passage of this act shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. —. That if any portion of the moneys received by the designated officers of the State for good roads for rural and star routes as provided in this act shall, by any action or contingency, be diminished or lost or be misapplied, it shall be replaced by the State to which it belongs, and until so replaced no subsequent appropriation shall be apportioned or paid to such State; the governor of each State shall report to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General regarding the condition and progress of the road built or repaired, including statistical information in relation to its receipts and expenditures.

SEC. —. That on or before the 1st day of July in each year, after the passage of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State whether it is entitled to receive its share of the annual appropriation for good roads for rural and star routes under this act, and the amount which thereupon each is entitled, respectively, to receive. If the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General shall withhold a certificate from any State of its appropriation, the facts and reasons therefor shall be reported to the President, and the amount involved shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the close of the next Congress, in order that the State may, if it should so desire, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Secretary of the Interior. If the next Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury. And the Secretary of Agriculture and Postmaster General are hereby charged with the proper administration of this law.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Interior shall annually report to Congress the disbursements which have been made in all the States, and also whether the appropriation of any State has been withheld; and if so, the reasons therefor.

SEC. —. That Congress may at any time amend, suspend, or repeal any or all of the provisions of this act.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this is practically a motion to strike out the House provision and to insert what has been read. There is already a motion pending from the committee to strike out the House provision and to insert the amendment offered by the committee. My point of order is that we must first vote on the committee amendment to strike out and insert, instead of the amendment now proposed by the Senator from North Carolina. The motion of the Senator from North Carolina is to strike out the House provision for road improvements and to insert the provision he has offered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this is an amendment to perfect the House provision before the Senate amendment is voted on. That has been held time and again to be in order so as to perfect the text. If my amendment is adopted as stated by the Presiding Officer on Saturday, then the question will come upon the motion of the committee to strike out and insert. That is the parliamentary situation as stated by the Presiding Officer on Saturday.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I stated on Saturday that as between the two provisions the Senator's amendment and the Shackleford provision as it appears in the House bill, I prefer his for the reason that it provides for cooperation; but I stated further that I should vote against its adoption, because I thought it better to have the committee substitute than either.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is at least one amendment pending to the House provision. I submitted an amendment to the House provision which has been printed, and I think we are first entitled to perfect the House provision before any amendment in the nature of a substitute should be inserted.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has offered an amendment to the House provision which is to perfect the text. Of course, the Senator from North Carolina is right that the text must be perfected before a motion is made to strike out and insert; but that is not the motion of the Senator from North Carolina. The motion of the Senator from North Carolina is to strike out the House provision and to insert his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was not informed of the fact that there was any motion pending to perfect the House provision.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My amendment has been printed, and I should be glad to have it read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unquestionably the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia is first in order and will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 18, after the words "Postmaster General," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of said funds shall be paid to an officer in any State until the legislative authority of such State shall by law designate the officer or officers to receive it, and fix the manner of its use in aid of road improvement, and prescribe safeguards to enforce such use.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] now moves to strike out the provision and to insert the matter which has heretofore been read. The question is on that motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. As some Senators were not present when I offered the amendment, I will now explain it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this amendment provides for a cooperative system of working on public roads. If the Government is going to enter upon that operation, it is proposed to provide that the Government shall give $250,000, and before the States shall receive their proportion they shall appropriate a similar amount, which would make $500,000. Then, in dividing the money among the counties of the State, that the counties shall appropriate a certain amount, the townships so much, and the road districts so much. So that they will all be in cooperation with the Federal Government, and the State governments, the counties, the townships, and the road districts will all be contributing, and there will not be a State in the Union which, under this proposed appropriation, will not receive as much as a million dollars for road work, the Government appropriating but $250,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina provide that there shall be the same appropriation of $500,000 to each and every State, regardless of its population and regardless of the number or the length of the roads, whether improved or unimproved? In other words, that the State of Delaware and the State of Rhode Island would receive exactly the same amount as would be received by the State of New York, the State of Texas, or the State of Ohio?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is exactly right, except that I have modified the amendment so as to appropriate to each State $250,000 instead of $500,000. I ought to say that that has been the policy of this Government for 75 years or more. In 1832, on motion of Mr. Clay, money was divided in that way, and the money under the Morrill Act in aid of education was divided the same way, and to-day every State, including Delaware and New York and North Carolina and Ohio, are receiving the same amount of money from the Public Treasury for the purpose of education.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the Morrill Act; but does it not seem to the Senator that school funds should be distributed per capita rather than given to a State without respect to population?

Mr. OVERMAN. That has not been the policy of this Government. It divides such money equally. Your experiment station to-day in Ohio is getting the same amount as the experiment stations in Delaware and North Carolina. There is only one way to work such a matter out. The State is the unit of this Government. My idea is: If the Government is going to extend aid, give each State the same amount and then let the States administer the fund. Let the States take the money, let the States appropriate similar amounts, let the counties appropriate, and we will have a working system in which the Government, the road districts, the counties, and the State governments will cooperate.

Mr. POMERENE. I agree with the Senator that every political unit of the State should participate in this movement for good roads. The States should take a hand, as should the counties and the road districts; but at the same time it does seem to me that it is unfair to the great State of New York, the great State of Texas, and the great State of Ohio, that they should get as much and no more than is to be distributed to the small State of Delaware, the small State of Rhode Island, or such States as New Mexico and Arizona, which have substantially no improvements whatsoever so far as public highways are concerned.

Mr. OVERMAN. The State of Delaware has two Senators here and the State of Nevada has two Senators. There is no other way to make such a distribution that I can conceive of. If we should divide the money according to population, New York would get so much more than Delaware and Ohio that it would not be fair. Delaware contributes to this Government as a unit; so does North Carolina; so does New York; so does Ohio; and so do all the other States.

Mr. POMERENE. My thought is now and has been that the Federal Government should do everything it can do for the purpose of encouraging the building of permanent roads.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator and I agree on that, except as to the method of distributing the money.

Mr. POMERENE. I think we do, and I hope that some method may be devised whereby we can bring about a just and equitable arrangement.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama rises to a point of order. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that no Senator shall speak more than once on this question, or for a longer period than 10 minutes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Have I spoken for 10 minutes?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. It also provides that no Senator shall speak more than once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has not as yet exhausted his time.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that no Senator shall speak more than once nor for a longer period than 10 minutes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Have I spoken more than 10 minutes?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The Senator has spoken more than once.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it has not been my desire to take up the time of the Senator from North Carolina, but I will be obliged in a few moments to leave the Chamber, and I wanted to bring out distinctly what were the provisions of the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have tried to explain to the Senator. I think if this proposition could go into conference, probably some idea might be suggested along this line which would be better than the House provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to have read at the desk a letter which I have received with reference to this matter from the Hon. H. S. Earle, for several years road commissioner of the State of Michigan, who I think is perhaps as much interested in the subject as any man of whom I know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read in the Senator's time.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

H. S. EARLE MANUFACTURING CO.,
Detroit, Mich., August 10, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your telegram which reads as follows:

"Hon. HORATIO S. EARLE,
"Detroit, Mich.:

"House bill provides for Federal aid to roads of $25 per mile for stone, $20 for gravel, and $15 for dirt. Senate proposes to amend by appointing a commission to investigate and report a plan at next session of Congress. What in your opinion should be done? Personally, I believe House provision is worse than useless.

"CHAS. E. TOWNSEND."

In answer to the above you are right in your opinion regarding the matter.

To scatter money, like House bill proposes, all over the United States would be as foolish as to sow a pint of wheat to the acre and expect to get a good crop.

"What is worth doing at all is worth doing well."

The National Government can not afford to become a party to flimsy road building.

Congress should appropriate $200,000 to pay for a preliminary survey and estimate of cost for a great national highway, connecting all States in the Union, and provide for the appointment of a commission to be composed of men of national repute in the work, and they should be given power to employ the best civil engineers for the purpose.

When this report is filed Congress would know how many miles long the whole road would be and how many miles there would be in each State.

Then Congress should pass the necessary enabling act to sell sufficient bonds to raise sufficient money to build this entire road, and also provide for its permanent repair at the expense of the National Government.

It should be completed in five years, and one-fifth of the miles to be built in each State should be built each year.

As a military road, as a post road, as a property value-raising road, and as a sample road it would be of inestimable value to every State.

It would educate in the art of road building hundreds and thousands in every State.

It would be following the precedents established in other civilized countries.

Respectfully, yours,

H. S. EARLE.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I only wish to take about five minutes.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and adopted, eliminates practically all objections which have been urged against the House provision. The House bill provides for the distribution of about $18,000,000 for roads all over the country if they are improved up to certain standards fixed in the bill. The objection has been urged against that provision that it provided no safeguard to see that the money was properly expended in the future for the improvement of roads. That objection has been strenuously urged in the Senate; but the Senator from Georgia has offered an amendment to the House provision, and it has been adopted, which provides that the money shall be paid to a person authorized by the legislature in each State, and the legislature of each State shall pass a law determining how the money shall be spent; so that it is left to the authorities of the State to determine in what manner the amount shall be expended. The State will be authorized to provide, if it so desire, that the money shall be expended on the condition that the county or the local authorities will furnish an equal amount, and the State will have the right to expend that money in permanent road improvement—for the construction of macadam roads—if the State so wishes.

Unless Senators think a State is incompetent to do what is right and wise for road improvement, unless they think the State governments are useless and have proven failures, there can be no objection to the House provision as amended on motion of the Senator from Georgia. If any State receives, say, a million dollars or a half million dollars under the bill as amended, it would be left to the legislative authority of that State to determine how that money should be expended. I have confidence in the wisdom and in the integrity and in the good intentions of the State legislatures, and I believe there will be no waste of the money under the road provision of the House bill as it has been amended.

What will be the advantage that will accrue from the adoption of this measure? In the first place, for the next 12 months every road in the United States must be improved, must be made to conform to a certain standard or condition provided in this bill, in order to obtain the aid provided. For the next 12 months efforts will be made by the supervisors of the roads to get them in good condition, so that their States can receive the Federal aid. I believe if this bill is passed, for the next 12 months in the United States there will be more activity, more energy, and more effort directed toward the improvement of roads than ever existed before. It will be a stimulus. Here is a reward or a prize given to every road overseer in the United States, whether his jurisdiction extends over dirt roads or hard-surface roads or macadam roads. We say to him, in effect, "Improve your roads for the next 12 months, get them in good condition, have them well drained, have them smooth, fill up the mudholes, and if you will keep them so for 12 months, at the end of that 12 months the Government will give you the amount named in the bill." It is an effort to stimulate the local authorities. It is an effort to get the people, by the offer of this prize, to improve their own roads.

But the bill as amended goes further. After that money is paid it is turned over to the officer designated by the State; and the officers in each State must determine the best methods of its expenditure and make provision to see that it is wisely spent in the improvement of the roads. As I have said, with the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, if we are going to venture into the field of national aid to roads, we have before us a good provision. It is a fair distribution of the money; it is a distribution according to the miles of road used by the Federal Government itself; and it is a just distribution, so far as you can get one. As I have said, it gives stimulation to the local authorities; it is like offering a prize to every road overseer in the United States to get the dirt roads, the hard-surface roads, and the macadamized roads in good condition for 12 months, and then, after the money is given, it is left to the State to see that it is wisely and judiciously spent. With that amendment, it seems to me, all objections that have been urged against the provision have been eliminated and that it is deserving of the support of all those who believe in national aid to good roads.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to hear the amendment of the Senator from Georgia read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been agreed to; but in the absence of objection it will be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am a great believer in good roads. I believe the National Government should bear its proportionate and reasonable share of the expenses of good roads; but I am not enamored of this proposed measure to that end. I do not think it is the right way for the National Government to enter upon the improvement of public highways. It seems to me that, if the Government is going to act at all and expend the money of the people of this country for good roads, it should be done in the construction of main or national highways, leaving the States and the counties to take care of the smaller or shorter roads.

In California we need no such stimulus as is mentioned by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. Our people have within the last few months voted $18,000,000 for the improvement of the highways of California. My own county of Los Angeles has voted three and a half million dollars for the improvement of the roads in that county; and other counties in the State have taken like action. I am not disposed, therefore, to vote for the provision of the House bill for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the advocates of the House provision unwarrantedly assume that they are the only people who are in favor of Federal aid to good roads. I do not believe there is a single member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads who is opposed to Federal aid to good roads, but it seemed to a majority of the committee that there was no occasion to act hastily in the matter.

There were about 40 good-road bills introduced in the House, which were referred to the appropriate committees, and the provision in the House bill as to good roads is a result of a conference by all the gentlemen who had introduced bills upon the subject. No extended examination, no comprehensive study, was given, or is claimed to have been given, to the subject.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] urges that at this time upon this appropriation bill we enter upon this work. Mr. President, there will be no delay, in view of the fact that there is no opposition to the general principle of Federal aid to roads, if the provision in the House bill be not adopted. It does not become effective until July 1, 1914, and surely we would not suffer much by taking the opportunity during the vacation to have a joint committee of the House and the Senate investigate and look into the various propositions.

During this discussion four or five methods of aid to roads have been presented. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] thinks the best plan would be to appropriate by States. Forgetting the difference in population of the States, forgetting the vast difference in the areas of the various States, acting upon the theory that, inasmuch as in the distribution of funds for the advancement of agricultural education we have thus acted, it is stated that therefore it would be proper to do the same thing with reference to roads. If, Mr. President, there was an injustice in the division of the funds appropriated under the Morrill Act, it seems to me that is no argument why we should perpetrate and continue that injustice when we enter upon this great subject of Federal aid to good roads. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are not losing any time by not adopting the House provision to-day and simply allowing during the recess an opportunity for the Members of the House and of the Senate—a committee of the two Houses—to investigate the subject and to call before it men who have devoted years of study to this question, and every one of them who has made a statement upon the question is bitterly opposed to the House provision.

The Chief of the Office of Good Roads in the Agricultural Department has placed himself upon record as believing it would be a sheer waste of the money appropriated. The gentleman who wrote the letter to the Senator from Michigan, which was just read, coincides in that view. Now, if they are wrong and the gentlemen who advocate this provision are right, that will be developed in the course of the investigation. Surely when we start upon a matter of such vast importance we can afford to take sufficient time to become acquainted with the facts and the circumstances that will confront us.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I shall vote against Federal aid for roads in any State. Every State in this Union has its own peculiar resources. Colorado has its mines of gold and silver and copper. Washington has its vast forests and its products of timber. Each of the Eastern States has its great manufacturing industries. Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Alabama have their wealth of coal and iron, with their wealth-producing industries. Ohio is a great agricultural State as well as a great manufacturing State. The State in which I live has none of those great resources. We have nothing but agriculture. When we tax our own people for our own roads, and we must tax that industry alone, we have none of these other resources on which to levy an assessment for road building.

Here we have a sister Commonwealth, which adjoins the District of Columbia, that has practically no roads worthy of the name, except it be perhaps a few miles here and there near some great city. I am opposed myself to taxing the people whom I represent to pay for the roads in all the States.

Some of these States are nearly 300 years old; and if they have not seen fit to tax their great resources, so great and so manifold, what right have they to ask my State, devoid of their particular resources, to build their roads for them.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield in just a moment. If I go into the Eastern States I find the topography somewhat difficult for road building, and yet I find that those thrifty people have taxed themselves for years and have built their own roads at their own expense; and they have good roads. But my main objection is that under the provision we would tax the people of all the country to make roads in some particular sections of the country, when the people themselves have so far preferred to use the taxes raised by them for other purposes.

I will now listen to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I simply wanted to inquire of the Senator what State adjacent to the District of Columbia he referred to when he said that it has no roads worthy to be mentioned?

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like very well to be able to travel from here to Arlington, for instance. Here, very close to the city of Washington, if anyone will show me a road fit to travel all seasons of the year between Washington and Arlington, I will be very glad to receive the information.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will state to the Senator that our roads in Virginia are certainly very poor as a rule. The National Government owes Virginia $125,000 that it loaned the National Government when it constructed the buildings here at the National Capital. The Legislature of Virginia has donated that money for the building of a road where the Senator says, to Arlington, but Congress will not pay the debt. In the meantime if something——

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope, if the United States is owing Virginia anything, the United States will make good its obligations and pay it and let Virginia do whatever she has a mind to with that money—build roads or use it for other purposes. What I object to is that those States which have built their own roads at their own expense should now be called upon to build roads for these States which have not done so. Then, if the people of Virginia want to expend it in roads, all right, and if they desire to expend it somewhere else, all right; but I am somewhat opposed to taxing the people of the State of North Dakota for a road between Washington and Mount Vernon. I should like, at some time, to drive down to the home of the father of our country; be able to drive from the city of Washington that little distance. Yet there is no road by which you can go from Washington to Mount Vernon that is fit to travel over at any season.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The State of Virginia has dedicated this debt due to her from the National Government to that very purpose, to building a road from Washington to Mount Vernon. But I did not rise to go into a discussion of that matter. I wish simply to inform the Senator that he is very much mistaken about what he has said in respect to Virginia roads. There are very many good macadam roads through the State, and a million dollars have been spent in four counties in one part of the State. They have voted a bond issue of $2,000,000 for road improvements, and immense progress is being made. We are simply asking the National Government to come to our aid and help to carry on the work which we are doing now so generously.

Mr. McCUMBER. There are a great many things in which I should like to have the Government come to our aid in upbuilding my own State. We have no great coal fields which we can tax and no great output of mine or forest. We have no great resources such as they have in the State of Virginia and many of the other States that may be taxed for building roads. Why, then, should my people, who have none of those resources, be taxed to build the roads for the people who have them? For after all, Mr. President, the roads are mainly for the benefit of the people who will use them every day. Our people will not be using the roads to any great extent out in Washington or in Maine or Virginia. We are willing to build our own roads, and build them as well as we can with our available means, and open them to the public of the entire United States, but I confess I do object to help building the roads in Maine or Texas. The people there may not be as desirous of having good roads as our own people, and if they are desirous of it, they have assets that they can tax to raise the funds necessary to build their roads.

But, Mr. President, if we are to go into this matter of road building, let us build a road that we can use. I should like to ask the Senator who has charge of the bill and who has reported this amendment why he limits the width of the road to 9 feet? Two teams could not meet and pass each other without at least the whiffletree striking, when the space is only 9 feet wide. It seems to me that if we are to have Government roads, we should macadamize a portion which may be wide enough to use, unless we are to have sidetracks here and there at which teams can back up to when they meet. The roads should be of sufficient width so that teams can pass each other without inconvenience or crowding.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will pardon me, this provision was put in by the House, not by the Senate committee. I presume the idea was that if there were 9 feet of public macadam road, it would be graded off at the side, and it would be very easy to use the part of the road which is not so good to turn into to let a team pass.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me a moment——

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is the common practice with reference to such roads. I think the standard width is 18 feet, but there is a practice which I know is very common in my State, and I think it is very general in other States, to improve by some artificial surface or covering about half of the road, so that during the season of the year when roads are not good by reason of rains or something of that sort the 9 feet are used, but when the roads are good the unimproved part is just as desirable as the improved part.

Mr. McCUMBER. The main object is to have a road which you can use when the conditions are unfavorable to roads. When it is dry and hard you do not need to macadam any of it. The only object of macadamizing a road is that it may be absolutely good at all times, so that you may use it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator overlooks the fact that a clay road during the summer months is as good as a macadam road. During the winter it may be that no part of that clay road is in good condition. Now, they will take an 18-foot road and they improve 9 feet of the road and the 9 feet are in good condition all the year round.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but in the wintertime outside of the 9-foot strip the road is bad and you have to run one wheel of a vehicle over on the bad road every time you meet or pass another vehicle.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield, and to whom?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia. He was on the floor first.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say to the Senator from North Dakota that I have seen that done in a great many instances and it worked admirably. The macadam part carries the heavy, constant travel, and the portion of the road outside the 9 feet is seldom used except when teams pass. So it is not cut up and becomes muddy and impassable. I know what the Senator desires and what I say is not in criticism of it, but I have seen clay roads built with 9 feet of macadam in the center and they were admirable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In rains or in bad weather the other portions would not cut up because the heavy and constant travel went on the 9 feet of macadam road, and the little use of the other portion was merely by teams turning into it. So it practically makes a very good road.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not used much time so far.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator yielded his time to other Senators interrupting.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota that 9 feet would be too narrow for a road, I beg to say that the first macadam roads laid in the State of New Jersey were 9 feet, and only 9 feet, and it acted in a very satisfactory way. Of course as the population increases and there is more travel it is desirable to make a width of 15 feet or 18 feet, but the fact is that 9 feet of good macadam road forms a sort of drain or grade for at least 3 feet on the side, and on both sides of the macadam it is generally dry and nice. Then when you turn off one of the wheels stays on the macadam and the other is on this partially dry road, by means of making a drain from the macadam.

I believe that generally throughout the country 9 feet would be fairly sufficient and it would make the expenditure of the money go a longer way.

As to this particular proposition—the road feature of the bill—I do not know that I am altogether in favor of it. We have spent millions of dollars in the State of New Jersey on roads, and I feel really that the States generally should go on and improve their roads. The best way to get good roads is to build them, and many of the States have been very derelict in this matter. Yet every State in the Union is not as fortunately situated as the State of New Jersey with a populous community, and in many instances we would never get good roads in States without rendering them aid by the United States Government.

While in many respects this appropriation seems infinitesimally small, it is a step in the right direction. I believe, notwithstanding the fact that the people of my State have spent millions upon their roads, they would not only condone but commend me for voting for a measure that would give something of the Nation's wealth toward advancing good roads in our country. It would be of great benefit to the people not only for the transportation of their freight and their goods but for methods of social intercourse, and I believe it would enhance the well-being of the people of the United States without regard to the section to which they belong.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer the following amendment, simply saying in explanation of the amendment that as the country gets older, and as it increases in population, and as these roads are being built at the expense of the Government and will be kept up, they will be the main roads of travel, and therefore they ought to be sufficiently wide for teams to pass easily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, line 5, strike out before the word "feet" the word "nine" and in lieu insert the word "twelve," so as to read:

With a road track not less than 12 feet wide composed of burnt clay, gravel, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. The same amendment also should be made in line 22, page 37. I move to strike out "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads gave very careful consideration of this provision in the House bill. Hearings were held before the committee and a majority of the committee concluded that it was not wise to agree to the House provisions; that insufficient data and material matter had been collected for the committee to come to a conclusion regarding a subject of this importance.

Mr. President, I do not believe in departmental legislation, but I do believe in departmental regulation. In the presentation by the advocates of the enactment of the Shackleford provision, as contained in the House bill, a number of statements have been made and reports read from the Department of Agriculture. I should like before a vote is taken to insert in the RECORD a statement in the hearing before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, on page 265, of Mr. Page, who is at the head of the Bureau of Good Roads in the Department of Agriculture. The purport of the paragraph is decidedly in opposition to the adoption of the House amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Oregon to insert certain matter in the RECORD will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, that is a pretty big question, so suppose I present it in this way: Up to the present time about 62 bills for national aid in some form have been presented to this Congress, and they call for very large sums of money. There are a great many of them the results of which have not been considered and the effects of which, I think, would be very dangerous. I consider this measure among the more dangerous. If all the roads of this country—there are about 2,250,000 miles—were constructed in a first-class manner it would cost about $22,000,000,000. That is a very conservative estimate. I think there are only about $16,000,000,000 in the world, and four or five billion of that are unsecured notes. If we were to sprinkle the roads of this country for one summer season with ordinary watering carts and water it would cost about $880,000,000, which is $200,000,000 more than the national revenue. Any plan for the Government to participate seems to me to require a good deal of consideration. I have read all the bills which have been presented for a number of years, and the plan which seems to me to be the most reasonable and practicable for the Government is one for the Government to select a definite system of roads, to be considered from the standpoint of agriculture and commerce, the delivery of the mails, and the national defense, that system not to exceed 1½ per cent of the total mileage of the country. That would give the United States about 33,000 miles of road under this system, which would be the greatest road system under one management in the world. The French have about 23,000 miles. The construction of 33,000 miles of road would require a larger expenditure than I believe the Government could make—that is, to build the roads in sufficient time to suit the general demands of the public. However, if the Government were to adopt this system it could make an agreement with any State that had already improved any portion of this system falling within its limits to take over that portion and maintain it forever afterwards in first-class condition. It could make the same agreement with any State that would in the future build any portion of that system of roads or all of the system falling within that State, the Government to take over the road and maintain it forever afterwards. That would be fair to the older States that have borrowed money and raised it by taxation and have already improved their roads. They would not lose in any way by that, it would be a great incentive for the States which have not spent any money on their roads, and it would be excellent business for them to immediately borrow money and have the portion of the system within their borders constructed according to the Government's standard. I think when this entire 33,000-mile system was completed it would not require over $35,000,000 yearly for maintenance in first-class condition.

That would relieve the Government of an enormous expenditure for construction and you would get definite results. It would give the United States the largest system or unit of road of any country in the world.

Mr. BOURNE.. I should also like to insert in the RECORD a statement from the Postmaster General, contained in his letter of June 21, addressed to the committee, in which he specifically states he is opposed to it on the ground that it would be impracticable.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 21, 1912.

Hon. JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr.,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your communication of the 14th instant making certain inquiries with respect to the provision incorporated in the Post Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, as passed by the House of Representatives, which provides that whenever the United States shall use certain highways for the purpose of transporting rural or star route mail compensation at specified rates per annum for each mile traveled shall be made to the proper State officers.

In reply to your inquiry as to what would be the total expense of classifying the roads, I beg to state that it would undoubtedly be necessary for a representative of the Government to make an inspection of each road sought to be brought within one of the classifications prescribed in the bill. The proposed legislation provides "that any question arising as to the proper classification of any road used for transporting rural or star route mail shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture," and, although the bill does not expressly so state, it would seem to follow that not only should all questions as to the proper classification of roads be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, but that he should also cause the classification to be made.

An estimate of the cost of the initial classification and of subsequent classifications has been made by the Director of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture, and appears on page 5726 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 27, 1912. The mileage of the rural and star routes has not changed materially since this estimate was made, and, as the Office of Public Roads is in the possession of far more data pertaining to highways than is this department, I have no reason to doubt the substantial accuracy of the director's estimate that the annual charge to the Government for the use of the roads now traveled by rural and star route carriers would amount to $16,116,500 per annum, exclusive of the cost of classification, which is estimated at $750,000 for the first year and at $200,000 per annum thereafter.

With reference to your inquiry as to whether this work could be done by the present force of inspectors or whether an additional force would be required, I beg to state that no part of the number of inspectors for which provision is now made would be available for assignment to the duty in question. Owing to the vast mileage requiring inspection and the limited time within which the classification would necessarily have to be completed, a large number of additional inspectors would be required. Under the Post Office Department provision is now made for 375 inspectors, exclusive of inspectors in charge, numbering 15, and the entire force is now working at its full capacity. To perform this work within the limited time necessary, if it be intended that it should be done by this department, would require several hundred additional inspectors. As the proposed legislation would take effect July 1, 1913, and as it is prescribed that payment would be made at the end of the fiscal year, the work of inspection could not be properly begun until the date mentioned. It will thus be seen that the actual work of classification would necessarily have to be done within the first six or eight months of the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1913, and would require during that period the unremitting services, it is estimated, of at least 350 inspectors or agents. During the remainder of the same fiscal year a very material addition, which is almost impossible to estimate, to the departmental clerical force would be required for the purpose of tabulating the information submitted by the road inspectors and of presenting it in proper form on which intelligent action could be based.

Inspectors so added to the regular force should be entitled to receive at least $1,500 each, with a per diem allowance not to exceed $3 for expenses of travel.

In this connection, permit me to suggest that if it should be determined to enact the proposed legislation, with its attendant expenses for rental, classification, etc., the committee consider the advisability of providing specifically that none of such expenses be made a charge against the revenues of the Post Office Department. For the first time in many years the department is now practically self-sustaining, and it would be manifestly unfair, in my opinion, to allow such payments, from which no possible benefit to the Government could accrue, to create another deficit in the department's finances and thus possibly cause an indefinite postponement of some postal reforms, such as 1-cent letter postage, for which there is now a widespread public demand.

In conclusion, I desire to call the special attention of the committee to my letter to you under date of May 22, 1912, relating to an amendment intended to be proposed by Senator GORE to the pending Post Office appropriation bill. That letter read, in part, as follows:

"The proposed legislation for which the amendment in question would be substituted, provides, in effect, that certain highways of the several States shall be divided into three classes, according to grade, width, and construction, and that whenever the United States shall use such highways for the purpose of transporting rural or star-route mail compensation, at specified rates per annum for each mile traveled shall be made to the proper State officers. Nowhere in the bill is it prescribed that the money so paid by the Government shall be used for highway improvements, nor is any provision made for cooperation in that regard between State and Government officers. The proposed payments seem, therefore, to amount substantially to a subsidy to be paid by the United States for the use of public highways for the purpose of continuing to the public a service which, although its benefits are recognized and appreciated in every quarter, is even now the source of an apparent loss of many millions of dollars annually.

"Before such loss is further augmented, as would be practically the case if the provision now incorporated in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives were enacted into law, it is believed that the matter of payment by the Government of compensation for the use of public highways by its mail carriers should be made the subject of an exhaustive investigation by a body, constituted either as proposed by Senator GORE or in some other acceptable manner, which would make a careful study of all questions involved and submit a report to Congress which could be made the basis of thoughtful deliberation and intelligent action."

Before reporting the bill, the committee will, of course, give most careful consideration to this matter in all of its phases, but, in amplification of the foregoing letter, I beg to direct atttention to the fact that, by analogy, if the Government is to be called upon to pay for the use of public highways by rural or star-route mail carriers, it is not unreasonable to assume that it will only be a matter of time when it will likewise be called upon to pay for the use of sidewalks by city letter carriers and of streets by mail wagons. One proposal is just as reasonable as the other, and if payment is to be made in the one case a demand that payment be made in the other will be difficult, if not impossible, to deny.

It need not be stated here that this department is in favor of good roads and will heartily indorse any broad, comprehensive plan of road improvement providing for cooperation in that regard, financial or otherwise, between Government and State officers, but I am strongly of the opinion that the proposed legislation, which provides for payments of sums entirely inadequate to produce any tangible or appreciable results, would utterly fail to accomplish the desired end, and would, in effect, constitute nothing more than a useless and indefensible drain on the Treasury of the United States.

Yours, very truly,

FRANK H. HITCHCOCK,
Postmaster General.

Mr. BOURNE. I would also like to insert in the RECORD a statement from the Secretary of Agriculture as set forth in a letter of June 26, addressed to the chairman of the committee, which I will read, as it is short:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 26, 1912.

Hon. JONATHAN BOURNE,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your letter of June 22, asking for information concerning the possible participation of this department in the carrying out of the Shackleford amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, I have the following statement to make:

(1) There is no available force in this department at present that could be assigned to this work.

(2) The appropriation recommended for the Office of Public Roads for the coming fiscal year is $202,120, all of which is apportioned for special lines of work.

(3) A force of from 250 to 300 trained men would be necessary to classify the post roads as designated in the Shackleford bill. It would be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to obtain and organize such a force, the duties of which would occupy such a short period of time.

(4) The cost for the first year for making such a classification would probably be from $750,000 to $1,000,000, and this work would be of an absolutely nonproductive nature.

(5) The cost of continuing this classification after the first year would probably be between $200,000 and $300,000 per year, depending on the demand for the work.

Hoping that I have answered these questions to your satisfaction, I am,

Very respectfully, JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

As I understand, Mr. President, the motion is to strike out the House provision as improved by the amendments adopted in the Senate and to substitute therefor the Senate amendment, which motion I sincerely hope will prevail.

Mr. PAGE. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question? Has there ever been a suggestion made that the Government might loan States, towns, and counties a fund for highway purposes at a very low rate, perhaps a 2 per cent rate, instead of assuming the direct burden of building these highways?

Mr. BOURNE. In reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont I will state that I heard such a suggestion. Whether any bill has been introduced I can not state.

Mr. PAGE. My own judgment is that this is too great a proposition to pass upon with such haste as we shall have to pass upon it now, and I am therefore inclined to favor the committee recommendation. I wish to say, however, that I have a great deal of sympathy with the idea that the Federal Government ought, in some way, to stimulate and encourage the building of good roads. It occurs to me that we are now accumulating a large fund by way of the postal savings deposits—I understand it has already reached about $20,000,000, and will, of course, rapidly increase in the future. Would it not be practicable to loan this fund, say to the extent of $300 per mile, on a 2 per cent basis to those sections which wish to borrow it for a highway fund? The interest would be only $6 per mile per year, and if it was thought best to have 1 per cent of the principal paid annually, then the entire expense would be only $9 per mile per year, and if it could be so arranged that the town should pay $6 of this $9, the county $2, and the State $1, it would so divide the expense that it would not be unreasonably burdensome. Let me repeat, I believe the time has come when the Federal Government ought, in some way, to stimulate road building, and I do not know but this is the most practicable way in which to extend Federal aid.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me to interrupt him, I will state that was just the idea the majority of the committee had, and that is the reason they offer the substitute now before the Senate, in order to get intelligent ascertainment and conclusion and recommendation of Congress in reference to the action to be taken.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont if there is any particular difference between putting the hands in the Treasury for good roads and for vocational education.

Mr. PAGE. It is precisely along the same lines, and I have studied the vocational education question so much that I think I am inclined to be more sympathetic in regard to the matter of roads.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator advocates national aid to vocational education. Most of us agree with him. Why not also national aid to good roads? It is the same proposition.

Mr. PAGE. Nothing pleases me better than to have that matter suggested at this time. The cost of education in this country is $500,000,000 per year. The vocational education proposition only calls for 3 per cent of that sum from the Federal Treasury. In other words, we stimulate and encourage education without taking large sums from the Federal Treasury, as, it seems to me, is contemplated for the benefit of highways by the proposition now before the Senate. From one point of view, the Federal Government would really contribute nothing under the plan I have suggested, but, as a matter of fact, it would furnish money to build these roads at 2 per cent, which is really worth 3 or 4 per cent, and in this way is making a really very important contribution toward this good-roads proposition.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I make the point of order that the Senator from Vermont has occupied all his time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont is speaking in his own time. However, the first part of his speech was in the time of the Senator from Oregon. The question is on the amendment of the committee as a substitute for the House provision.

Mr. STONE and Mr. SWANSON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, in section 7, page 51, after line 8, to insert:

Transfers to the regular force of the Railway Mail Service may be made, and the needs of the Railway Mail Service with respect to acting, substitute, and temporary clerk service may be supplied, from the clerical force of post offices of the first, second, and third classes, and transfers may be made between the clerical force of the Railway Mail Service and post offices of the first, second, and third classes as the necessities may require, with the consent of the clerk, and the clerical forces of the division superintendents' and chief clerks' offices and terminal railway post offices and transfer services may be supplied either from the Railway Mail Service force, from the post-office force, or as otherwise provided by law or regulations, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I rise to an inquiry as to the order of business. Are the amendments passed over to be first taken up, or is it the intention to go through with the committee amendments to the end of the bill and then return to those passed over?

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I think we will expedite matters more by going through the bill and then returning to the amendments passed over. I would be perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, if any Senator so desires, to have any amendment in which he is interested taken up for disposition. It is perfectly agreeable to me to do so.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the usual, the more orderly way, the better way, is to go through with the bill and then return to the passed-over amendments.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have no objection to that being done, but the attendance is ample this morning to transact business and to act on the contested amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, on Saturday we had up and discussed the amendment to increase the compensation of rural carriers, and I am under the impression that there was then an understanding that that matter should go over until this morning, to come up immediately after we disposed of the good-roads provision.

Mr. BOURNE. I have no recollection of an agreement being made of the nature indicated by the Senator from North Carolina. However, if that is his impression, and the amendment was passed over with that idea in his mind and in the minds of others, it is perfectly agreeable to me that we take that up for disposition now.

Mr. SIMMONS. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the yeas and nays had been ordered on this particular amendment; but, to avoid the difficulty that might grow out of the absence of a quorum, it was passed over. My understanding was that it was suggested that those amendments upon which we could not have a roll call on Saturday evening, because of the absence of a quorum, should go over and be first taken up this morning.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Carolina will let some of the other amendments be proceeded with. I agreed to have ready this morning a certain table which I wished to present. That table is being prepared while the debate is proceeding on other matters.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well; I will be glad to drop the suggestion.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think we can take up the amendment in a short time.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 51, line 23, after the words "nineteen hundred and," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "twelve," so as to read:

After June 30, 1912, clerks in class A shall be promoted successively to grade 3, clerks in class B shall be promoted successively to grade 4, and clerks in class C shall be promoted successively to grade 5, at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's satisfactory service in the next lower grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 18, to insert:

After June 30, 1912, any clerk in a post office of the first or second class receiving compensation of $800 per annum or more, or in a post office of the third class who has performed continuous service in such office for a period of at least one year next preceding the date of his transfer, shall be eligible for transfer to the Railway Mail Service, and if he is a clerk in a post office of the first or second class his compensation may be increased not exceeding $100 per annum at the time of such transfer, and if he is a clerk in a post office of the third class he may be appointed at not exceeding $900 at the time of such transfer.

A railway postal clerk shall be eligible for transfer to the position of a clerk in a post office of any class.

In the case of a transfer under this law to the Railway Mail Service or to a post office of the first or second class without change in compensation, the time served by a clerk in a given grade prior to transfer shall be counted as a part of the year's service on which the clerk's promotion to the next higher grade may be based.

Acting, substitute, or temporary service in railway post offices may be performed by clerks of first and second class post offices, above the first grade ($600), and by clerks of third-class post offices who have served therein at least one year next preceding the date of temporary detail, who shall receive the same pay as when performing the work of the regular positions: Provided, That if their compensation is less than $900 in their regular positions, they may receive $900 in the Railway Mail Service when performing such service, and shall be paid from the appropriation for the Railway Mail Service and be entitled to such travel allowance as is usual to the assignment in the railway post-office line to which detail is made: Provided further, That in cases of emergency such service may be performed by clerks of first and second class post offices of the first grade ($600) and by clerks of third-class post offices, if there be any; if none, details may be made from the substitute list of such post offices, and the compensation therefor shall be at the lowest grade of pay of a regular clerk in the Railway Mail Service, with such travel allowance as is usual.

All Railway Mail Service substitutes remaining on the roll after the passage of this act shall be transferred to post offices of the first and second classes nearest to their places of residence, and in the transfer of substitute railway postal clerks to the substitute clerks' roll in first and second class post offices their relative positions thereon shall be determined by the dates when they were placed on the substitute roll of the Railway Mail Service.

Except in emergencies, when no other authorized means are available, clerks in post offices of the third class shall not be detailed for duty in the Railway Mail Service in any capacity, and shall not be transferred to the Railway Mail Service, as authorized by this act, without passing a competitive civil-service examination.

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the employment of joint employees at a compensation not exceeding $300 per annum, or the employment without additional compensation of regular railway postal clerks to perform such acting, substitute, temporary, or extra service as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 16, to strike out:

SEC. 8. That hereafter postage shall be paid on matter of the fourth class at the rate of 12 cents per pound, except as herein provided.

That no article, package, or parcel shall be mailable as matter of the fourth class which exceeds 11 pounds in weight.

That on each and all rural mail delivery routes of the United States the postmaster at the starting point of such route shall, until June 30, 1914, receive and deliver to the carrier or carriers of said routes all articles, parcels, or packages not prohibited to the mails by law and falling under the definition of fourth-class matter and not weighing in excess of 11 pounds, for transportation and delivery on said routes; and the carriers shall receive at intermediate points on all rural routes such mail matter of the fourth class for delivery on rural routes only.

That postage shall be paid on all articles, parcels, or packages entitled to transportation under the provisions of this act as matter of the fourth class on rural mail delivery routes only at the following rates: Five cents per pound, and 1 cent per pound for each additional pound or fraction thereof up to and including a total of 11 pounds. That the Postmaster General shall make all rules and regulations necessary and not inconsistent with law to the proper execution of this act, and shall provide for the transportation of farm and factory products as fourth-class matter if not perishable in transportation.

That for the purpose of a full and complete inquiry and investigation into the feasibility and propriety of the establishment of a general parcels post or express post a joint committee of six persons, three of whom shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and three by the President of the Senate, is constituted, with full power to appoint clerks, stenographers, and experts to assist them in this work. They shall review the testimony already taken on the subject of parcels post and express post by Senate and House committees and take such other testimony as they deem desirable. That the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall furnish such data and otherwise render such assistance to the said commission as may be desired or available. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of this committee the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The committee shall report fully to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 8. That hereafter fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all matter not now embraced by law in either the first, second, or third class, not exceeding 11 pounds in weight, nor greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employee or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter and not of a character perishable within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery.

That for the purposes of this section the United States and its several Territories and possessions, excepting the Philippine Islands, shall be divided into units of area 30 minutes square, identical with a quarter of the area formed by the intersecting parallels of latitude and meridians of longitude, represented on appropriate postal maps or plans, and such units of area shall be the basis of eight postal zones, as follows:

The first zone shall include all territory within such quadrangle, in conjunction with every contiguous quadrangle, representing an area having a mean radial distance of approximately 50 miles from the center of any given unit of area.

The second zone shall include all units of area outside the first zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 150 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The third zone shall include all units of area outside the second zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 300 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The fourth zone shall include all units of area outside the third zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 600 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The fifth zone shall include all units of area outside the fourth zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 1,000 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The sixth zone shall include all units of area outside the fifth zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 1,400 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The seventh zone shall include all units of area outside the sixth zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 1,800 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

The eighth zone shall include all units of area outside the seventh zone.

That the rate of postage on fourth-class matter weighing not more than 4 ounces shall be 1 cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce; and on such matter in excess of 4 ounces in weight the rate shall be by the pound, as hereinafter provided, the postage in all cases to be prepaid by distinctive postage stamps affixed.

That except as provided in the next preceding paragraph postage on matter of the fourth class shall be prepaid at the following rates:

On all matter mailed at the post office from which a rural route starts, for delivery on such route, or mailed at any point on such route for delivery at any other point thereon, or at the office from which the route starts, or on any rural route starting therefrom, and on all matter mailed at a city carrier office, or at any point within its delivery limits, for delivery by carriers from that office, or at any office for local delivery, 5 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 1 cent for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the first zone, except as provided in the next preceding paragraph, 5 cents for the first pound, or fraction of a pound and 3 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the second zone, 6 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 4 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the third zone, 7 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 5 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the fourth zone, 8 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 6 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the fifth zone, 9 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 7 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the sixth zone, 10 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 9 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the seventh zone, 11 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 10 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

For delivery within the eighth zone and between the Philippine Islands and any portion of the United States, including the District of Columbia and the several Territories and possessions, 12 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 12 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

That the Postmaster General shall provide such special equipment, maps, stamps, directories, and printed instructions as may be necessary for the administration of this section; and for the purposes of this section and to supplement existing appropriations, including the hiring of teams and drivers, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $750,000.

That the establishment of zones and postage rates of this section shall go into effect four months after its passage.

That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I now offer an amendment to section 8 in the nature of a substitute. I should apologize for the way in which it is presented. It has been drawn very hurriedly by me, with such assistance as I have been able to procure. It is very lengthy and I am loath to ask the Senate to listen to its reading, but I desire for a few moments to address myself to the proposed substitute.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, for the Senate to act intelligently we certainly will have to know what is the nature of the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will rule that the amendment must be read. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 8 of said bill and insert the following:

"SEC. 8. That hereafter fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all matter (including farm and factory products) not now embraced by law in either the first, second, or third class, not exceeding 11 pounds in weight, except as hereinafter provided, nor greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employee or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter, and not of a character perishable within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery.

They shall review the testimony already taken on the subject of parcel post and express post by Senate and House committees and take such other testimony as they deem desirable. That the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall furnish such data and otherwise render such assistance to the said commission as may be desired or available. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of this committee the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The committee shall report fully to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912.

"That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, no Senator appreciates more than I do the conscientious and assiduous work of the committee, but I am not in accord with section 8 of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Arizona suspend for a moment? The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 25034) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I had intended to submit some remarks to the Senate at this point, but I will waive that for the present in order that the Senator from Arizona may proceed to the conclusion. At the conclusion of his speech I may have something to say on the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Arizona will proceed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on the 23d of last July the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] addressed the Senate on an adequate general parcel post. It was a comprehensive speech, and as Senator GARDNER spoke as a direct representative of the organized farmers, I trust Senators generally have given the speech the consideration it deserves. Since then Mr. George P. Hampton, the special legislative representative of the organized farmers, has submitted a memorial to the Senate pointing out the objections the farmers have to the Senate committee's amendments to the parcel-post section of the postal appropriation bill. This memorial, introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], has been printed in the RECORD, and for the convenient use of Senators as Senate Document No. 895. Mr, President, I have read this memorial, and its arguments appeal to me as conclusive. I agree with Mr. Hampton that a parcel-post bill ought to provide for the regultaion of rates, weights, and zones by the Interstate Commerce Commission and for the appointment of a joint committee to continue the investigations as proposed by the House. Furthermore, I feel that a parcel-post bill should provide initial rates at least as favorable as those proposed by Mr. Hampton in his memorial. The rates suggested in the memorial are before us, and the demonstration as to their practicability is, it seems to me, conclusive. I have therefore caused to be prepared a draft of a bill embodying the amendments recommended in the memorial, and have just offered it as a substitute for the Bourne bill—that is, as an amendment to the Senate amendment of section 8 of the postal appropriation bill.

The changes from the Senate committee's amendment to section 8 provided for in these amendments are:

1. Providing specifically for the handling of farm products as urged by the farm organizations by inserting after the word "matter," page 58, line 15, the words "including farm and factory products."

2. Inserting after the word "weight," page 58, line 17, the words "except as hereinafter provided." This change is to bring the wording of the section in harmony with the provisions of administrative regulation of rates and weights, for which I provide further along in my amendment.

3. Inserting after the words "except," page 58, line 23, "Alaska and." I have made this change in order to bring before the Senate the question of whether it is not wise to exclude Alaska from the general provisions of a bill plainly intended for the United States proper.

4. By striking out the words "30 minutes," page 58, lines 24 and 25, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "of one degree," and by inserting after the word "square," page 58, line 25, the words "or uniform subdivisions thereof, as the Postmaster General may decide," and striking out the words "a quarter of," which follow the word "with," on line 25 of the same page. These changes are made to give the administration greater latitude in determining the details of administration than is provided for in the rigid restricton to a quadrangle half a degree square provided for in the Bourne bill. Mr. Hampton in his memorial (S. Doc. No. 895) in reference to this particular feature of the Bourne bill said: "The Robinson plan for determining distances, while admirable in its basic features, is crude and unwieldy in the way the details have been worked out. The evidence is conclusive that it can be greatly simplified and its efficiency increased and the cost reduced. Surely these are matters worthy of final review by a joint committee."

In view of these criticisms, I submit that it will strengthen the bill to give the Postmaster General greater scope in these administrative details. The Interstate Commerce Commission, in working out a similar system for the express companies, provided a chart based upon a degree and a secondary chart of 16 subdivisions of a degree for the local zone, and I think the Postmaster General should be given every opportunity to provide similar modifications in this particular if further investigation should prove such modifications desirable.

The amendments in regard to rates include changing from 8 to 12 zones, making the first zone 200 miles instead of 50 miles, and providing 200 miles as the distance of each succeeding zone up to 2,000 miles. The reason for these changes is set forth in the following, which I quote from the farmers' memorial (S. Doc. No. 895, p. 7):

> The postal railway pay is shown to be about 1 cent (0.01032) per pound for 200 miles. (Report, p. 12.) Why, then, if the country is to be given a square deal, is not 200 miles fixed as the maximum limit of each zone, if the 1 cent increase per pound of transportation costs is to be made the basis of division of the country into zones? One hundred miles would be better, so as to make the change in the larger weights average 5 cents instead of 10 cents or more. If this were done it would provide rates as nearly competitive with the express rates as they could be made under the present railway mail pay, while yielding the Government larger profits than are possible under the Bourne rates.

I have changed the definitions of the zone area of the Bourne bill to eliminate the indeterminate phrases and insert in lieu thereof words positively defining the area and making the center of each square the point for determining whether it shall be reduced or extended from any particular zone.

The local zone of the Bourne bill is left as it stood. It is unqualifiedly indorsed by the farmers, and is unquestionably an improvement on the House rural parcel post proposed.

I have changed the plan of the pending bill regarding the ounce rates by making the bill read that "The rates of postage on fourth-class matter shall be by the pound, as hereinafter provided, except that," and so forth.

The increase in the postage rates by zones is 1 cent except in the ninth, tenth, and eleventh zones, where it has been reduced to bring it within the limit of 12 cents a pound, the maximum limit. The proper rate for the first pound in the eighth zone would be 13 cents and in the ninth and tenth zones 14 and 15 cents respectively, but they are made 12 cents in each case, but through all the computations for the rates of these zones, 13, 14, and 15 cents are made the theoretical first pound rate in calculating the remainder of the zone rates and the reductions from the theoretical rates are only made in any case to keep the rate within 12 cents a pound.

The next important change in my amendment is the provision for administrative regulation subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was given to me as it stands by Mr. Hampton, and it represents the desire of the farmers, and should be included in any bill passed by this body as it stands, or at least in some modified form that will be in keeping with the spirit of its purpose. I understand that a similar provision was the most popular feature of the Anderson bill which had such a strong support in the House, and it is, I may say, the very essence of the zone plan.

The remaining important part of my amendment is the restoration of the House provision for a joint committee of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House to continue the investigation and report to Congress at the next session. I emphatically support the farmers in their request for this joint committee, thus affording Congress the opportunity, after the turmoil of the political campaign shall have passed, dispassionately to review the work accomplished and perfect this legislation. My amendments have the merit of approval by the farmers. I have consulted with their representative in drafting them, and if adopted they will mark a great step along the way toward the goal of a parcel-post system equal to that of any country in the world.

Mr. President, I believe the Gardner bill to take over the express companies is the proper, definite, final solution of the parcel-post system, and if I had the opportunity I should vote for that bill. But in the meanwhile I believe it is the duty of the Senate at this session to take some action in keeping with the pledge of the party platforms. All have made pledges in favor of an adequate zone-system parcel post or parcel express, and my amendment, if adopted, will enable every Senator to render the farmers of the country a real service.

My remarks are necessarily fragmentary, and I refer Senators to Senate Document No. 895, the farmers' memorial, as presenting the main argument in support of my amendment, except that I will supplement that argument by asking unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the following, taken from Mr. Hampton's testimony before the Senate subcommittee hearings on parcel post, December 29, 1911. I quote from volume 3 of the hearings, page 854.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

So far as I am aware, Congress has never hesitated to enact legislation providing for the expenditure of large appropriations from the public funds, without any possibility of a direct return, when it has been demonstrated to its satisfaction that the public welfare would be best served by such expenditures. The whole history of Congress is full of such instances, and it is unnecessary for me to cite special cases. Therefore, if it can be shown that the public welfare would be conspicuously served by the establishment of a general parcel post or postal express, which would place this country in that respect on a parity with the most favored nations of the world, even at the cost of a heavy deficit in the first instance, we submit that Congress should not hesitate to enact the necessary legislation without further delay.

The organizations I represent are strongly opposed to wasteful or useless expenditures of the public funds, and desire that the Government shall be economically administered. But they resent this reasonable, businesslike attitude toward public expenditures being construed as niggardliness toward expenditures that are unquestionably necessary in promoting the public welfare. They resent still more strenuously this argument of a possible deficit being made a barrier to the enactment of legislation for the establishment of a modern parcel post, which they are firmly convinced is for the benefit of the consumer, as it will be a potent factor in reducing the cost of living, and it is necessary to give the farmers and rural merchants a square deal. We submit, Mr. Chairman, that this question as to whether there would be a deficit should not deter Congress for a moment from enacting this legislation.

But will there be a deficit? I submit, gentlemen, that no argument yet put forward by any member of the Government has proved that there will be. I concede that no general parcel-post bill based on a flat rate, at any rate proposed, or at a rate that would be of any practical value to the public, could be operated without a loss unless it was extended to the rural districts. The rural delivery is now conducted at a heavy loss. The Postmaster General, in his 1910 annual report, stated that "next to the heavy loss resulting from low postage on second-class mail, the principal inroad into the profits of the postal service is that made by the excessive cost of rural delivery." I presume this committee has an official estimate of what the aggregate of that loss is.

The profit of operating a general parcel post at any rate that could be safeguarded from the competition of the express companies would wipe out the loss on the rural routes, and if the operation of such a general parcel post in the urban districts should be at a loss corresponding to the present deficit on the rural routes, the net results would be no increase in the present loss in postal revenues. If the parcel-post profits from the rural districts should be larger than the deficit in the urban districts, as would most probably be the case, then there would be a net profit to the Government.

Mr. Chairman, the farmers have been largely blamed for the deficit in the postal revenues, owing to the enormous deficit in operating the rural delivery, but we affirm that the blame is unjust and protest against it. We admit the heavy deficit, but have pointed out to Congress again and again, and now point out, that a parcel post or postal express—an indispensable necessity to the dwellers on the rural routes—would wipe out that deficit. The responsibility for this deficit, Mr. Chairman, rests squarely on Congress. And we say, further, that if the opposition in Congress to the establishment of a general parcel post based on consideraion for the expenditure of the public funds is sincere, that it is the duty of Congress at this session to grapple with this problem of deficit in operating the rural routes, and enact legislation that will wipe it out. The legislation we are here to ask you to recommend to Congress will do it.

Mr. ASHURST. Before I resume my seat, I desire to state that a sense of duty has impelled me to offer this amendment and to say what I have in support thereof, and I have done so in the belief that if the amendment which I have proposed should be adopted it would give the country a much more efficient and serviceable parcel-post system than would the present section 8 of the bill, notwithstanding section 8 has the approval of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE], whose valuable services to the public are fully appreciated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the substitute proposed by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. REED. I should like to have the substitute read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is very long.

Mr. REED. Very well; I waive my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

The substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the committee, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 62, after line 18, to strike out:

SEC. 9. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1912, the compensation of rural letter carriers for carrying the mail six days each week on Standard routes of 24 miles in length shall be the sum of $1,074 per annum, to be paid monthly; and on routes exceeding 24 miles in length, the sum of $44.75 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of 24 miles; and on routes under 24 miles in length, a corresponding reduction of compensation per mile per annum shall be paid; on routes carrying the mail three days of each week of the same length as above, the pay shall be one-half the compensation there provided: Provided, however, That because of the compensation herein provided no rural letter carrier shall receive less salary than before the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the continuance of the establishment, maintenance, and extension of postal savings depositories, on page 65, line 6, after the word "section," to insert "And provided further, That out of the sum appropriated in this section shall be paid the following: Director, $5,000 per annum; assistant director, $2,500 per annum; accountant, $2,500 per annum; 1 clerk, class 5, $2,000 per annum; 5 clerks, class 4, $1,800 per annum; 5 clerks, class 3, $1,600 per annum; 8 clerks, class 2, $1,400 per annum; 19 clerks, class 1, $1,200 per annum; 38 clerks, $1,000 per annum; 55 clerks, $900 per annum; three messengers, $720 per annum; 1 laborer, $660 per annum; 3 pages, $480 per annum. And authority is hereby delegated to the Postmaster General to increase the number of clerks and employees in the various classifications above enumerated as the development of the postal savings bank business demands," so as to read:

That the Postmaster General shall select and designate the post offices which are to be postal savings depository offices, and shall appoint and fix the compensation of such superintendents, inspectors, and other employees as may be necessary in conducting, supervising, and directing the business of such offices, including the employees of a central office at Washington, D. C., and shall prescribe the hours during which postal savings depository offices shall remain open. He shall also from time to time make rules and regulations with respect to the deposits in and withdrawals of moneys from postal savings depositories and the issue of pass books or such other devices as he may adopt as evidence of such deposits or withdrawals. The provisions of the act approved June 25, 1910, are hereby modified accordingly. The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1912 of $500,000 made by section 5 of the act approved March 4, 1911, for the postal savings system, is hereby reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year 1913 for the purposes mentioned in this section: And provided further, That out of the sum appropriated in this section shall be paid the following: Director, $5,000 per annum; assistant director, $2,500 per annum; accountant, $2,500 per annum; 1 clerk, class 5, $2,000 per annum; 5 clerks, class 4, $1,800 per annum; 5 clerks, class 3, $1,600 per annum; 8 clerks, class 2, $1,400 per annum; 19 clerks, class 1, $1,200 per annum; 38 clerks, $1,000 per annum; 55 clerks, $900 per annum; 3 messengers, $720 per annum; 1 laborer, $660 per annum; 3 pages, $480 per annum. And authority is hereby delegated to the Postmaster General to increase the number of clerks and employees in the various classifications above enumerated as the development of the postal savings bank business demands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 18, to insert:

SEC. 14. That the provisions of section 8 of the act making appropriations for the District of Columbia approved June 26, 1912, shall not apply to the appropriations provided by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 22, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 15. That the Postmaster General may expend for the service of the Post Office Department during the month of July, 1912, a greater amount than as the sum of one-twelfth of the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1912 bears to the whole of the appropriations of said fiscal year, notwithstanding the provisions of the joint resolution extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies, approved July 1, 1912: Provided, That the total expenditures under this act for the whole of the fiscal year 1913 shall not exceed the amounts hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments that have been passed over will now be considered. The first amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 16, after the word "pay," insert "and for payment of services in excess of eight hours."

Mr. BRISTOW. That is the amendment that I hope will be disagreed to, because it makes a provision for overtime which will be a very embarrassing provision if it is made. It changes an existing condition, and it will lead to very great expenditure and an increase in the appropriations, in my judgment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I suggest to the Senator that this amendment ought to be considered after section 5.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator from Kansas is correct in his contention that this is not necessary as supplemental legislation, providing section 5 remains in the bill, I will be very glad in conference to have it stricken out.

Br. BRISTOW. Referring to section 5, my purpose was to undertake to amend section 5.

Mr. BOURNE. Will not the Senator just allow this to go over?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am perfectly willing to let it go over.

Mr. BOURNE. And we will return to it in case section 5 should be amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the amendment will be passed over. The next amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 18, strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so that if amended it will read:

And to provide for the promotion of 50 per cent of the clerks in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so that it will read:

And for the promotion of 50 per cent of the clerks in second-class offices from the fourth to the fifth grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 23, in the total, strike out "eight hundred and seventy-eight" and insert "seven hundred and fifty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment, Mr. President. I want time to see what the amendment is. What page is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Page 12.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not hear the page or the paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 12, lines 23 and 24.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 17, where the committee proposes to insert a new paragraph beginning on line 9:

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized to pay, in his discretion, rewards to postal employees whose inventions are adopted for use in the postal service, and for that purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That not to exceed $1,000 shall be paid for one invention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, line 16, after the word "pay" and the comma, insert "and for services in excess of eight hours."

Mr. BRISTOW. That will go over the same as the other amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over for the present.

The SECRETARY. In line 18 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so as to read:

And for the promotion of 50 per cent of the letter carriers in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 20 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so as to read:

And for the promotion of 50 per cent of the letter carriers in second-class offices from the fourth to the fifth grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In lines 22 and 23 strike out "eight hundred and two thousand one hundred and seventy-five" and insert "seven hundred and forty thousand," so as to read:

City Delivery Service, $32,740,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, line 4, after the word "carriers," insert "and for services in excess of eight hours."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment will be passed over for the present, without objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is right.

Mr. BOURNE. What amendment is passed over on page 18?

Mr. LODGE. Another eight-hour amendment.

Mr. BOURNE. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is right. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 1, after the word "substations," insert:

Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1912, letter carriers of the Rural Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,100 per annum: Provided further——

Mr. McCUMBER. I move as a substitute for the committee amendment what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert:

Provided further, That on and after September 1, 1912, all rural carriers now serving daily routes of 24 miles or more shall receive as compensation for such service the sum of $1,200 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments; those serving daily routes of less than 24 miles shall receive as compensation such proportion of $1,200 as the miles of the routes served by them bears to 24 miles: Provided further, That fractions of 1 mile shall not be considered in fixing such salary: And provided further, That no compensation shall be less than $600.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before the question is put on the substitute I move to amend the committee provision by inserting "twelve hundred" instead of "eleven hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment is already pending.

Mr. BOURNE. That was offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] and is pending, I will say to the Senator from Georgia. Is the Senator from North Dakota prepared to state, for the information of the Senate, what the cost will be to the Government by the adoption of the substitute he offers for the committee's amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will first be put on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Alabama offered it before I did. So it is the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, what I desire to say will be as applicable to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON], or the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], as it is to the matter to which I desire to present the amendment. So, with the permission of the Senate, I desire to explain the effect as well as the purpose of my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have several times called attention to the great disparity between the fees that are paid for rural delivery and the fees that are paid for urban delivery. I desire wherever an opportunity affords to overcome this great disparity. I desire wherever it is possible to do so to bring the wages of the rural carrier or Government employees employed in the service outside of the cities to a standard that they will approximate as near as possible the wages paid in the great cities. I appreciate the fact, Mr. President, that the cost of living in the greatest cities is somewhat more expensive than in the little towns from which rural service starts, but I also understand the cause of that greater expense. It is brought about by the same thing which I am trying to remedy, namely, the greater the pay that is given in all lines of industry in the great cities the greater the standard of pay, the higher the cost of living, and the higher the cost of rental, and the result is that you get a congestion of people in the great cities that ought to be distributed over the entire country. Just as soon as you have a wage-earning capacity in employments outside of the great cities equal to that within them, you will have answered the oft-repeated question of what to do with the congestion within the great cities.

Population will always drift to where it will receive the greatest remuneration for a given number of hours of labor, and if the remuneration in the country is equivalent to that in the city the country will build up to a far greater extent than is possible under present conditions and relieve the city of the excessive cost of living as well as its congestion.

Let us remember also, Mr. President, that the high cost of living, so termed, in the great cities is not due entirely to the excessive cost of the necessaries of life over that in the country, but due to a great extent to the greater opportunities for spending the wages earned in the cities. I say with absolute confidence that the net earnings of a rural carrier is not one-third on the average of the net earnings of those carrying the mails and delivering them within the limits of the great cities. I say it is not one-third of the amount.

Now, Mr. President, there ought to be a change. There is no reason in the world why we should pay those within the city limits a net profit for their services of about three times the amount that is paid to those in the country.

In 1909 I had occasion to look into this matter quite extensively.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am going to ask the Senator if he does not think that the actual physical labor of a rural carrier, who has to traverse 24 miles a day delivering the mail, is much greater than the physical labor of a city carrier distributing the mail during the day in a city?

Mr. McCUMBER. The hardships and the physical labor of the rural carriers are very much in excess of those imposed upon the letter carriers in the cities, as I will show before I am done with the subject.

So that we may take up this matter in its order, Mr. President, I have prepared a number of tables. The first one is the present schedule of salaries of rural carriers, showing the number of carriers of each grade, the length of the route, and the rate of pay. I will ask that this may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I simply call attention to the fact that the total number of carriers who carry the mail over 24 miles is 29,143, which, I think, is about 47 per cent of the entire number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from North Dakota will be granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Present schedule of salaries of rural carriers, showing number of carriers in each grade.

Length of route.	Rate of pay.	Number of carriers.
4 and 5 miles	$400	2
6 and 7 miles	440	10
8 and 9 miles	480	77
10 and 11 miles	520	186
12 and 13 miles	560	270
14 and 15 miles	600	372
16 and 17 miles	700	569
18 and 19 miles	800	1,185
20 and 21 miles	900	3,246
22 and 23 miles	960	6,774
24 miles and over	1,000	29,143

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I also desire to present a table taken from the Rural Free Delivery News of February 10, 1910, showing the average net earnings of rural letter carriers after providing and maintaining the equipment necessary for the performance of their duties for six months ending December 31, 1909, compiled from expense statements furnished by carriers in practically every congressional district in which rural delivery service is in operation. They are given here by States, and I will ask that this table be inserted as a part of my remarks. I will simply call attention to a few of these figures. For Alabama, net earnings for six months, $188, or $32 per month; for Arkansas, $177.08, or $29.51 for each month.

Mr. BOURNE. That is on the basis of a salary of $1,000 per year?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is on the basis of the present law providing for a maximum of a thousand dollars per year.

For California it is $234.76, or $39.13 per month.

Without going over all of the figures, the net earnings, as given during that time, were on the average of $189 for each carrier, or $31.50 a month. Multiplying that by 12 you will get the average yearly compensation of $378. I ask that this table may also be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be made.

The table referred to is as follows.

Mr. BOURNE. Was that the average on a basis of 24 miles or the average on a basis of the carriers from 6 to 30 miles?

Mr. McCUMBER. On the basis of all.

Mr. BOURNE. I would ask the Senator, in that connection, whether he thinks that statement would be exactly fair and just, without the explanation that some of these routes would be only 6 miles and some 8 miles long, and that the carrier's time consumed would probably not be over two hours?

Mr. McCUMBER. The average, however, is about 24 miles; so that would necessarily be——

Mr. BOURNE. The average on 42,000?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; about 27 per cent of the routes over 24 miles.

Mr. BOURNE. Does the Senator mean to say that of the forty-two thousand three hundred and odd carriers in the United States a majority of them travel over 24 miles?

Mr. McCUMBER. I said 47 per cent. There is 47 per cent of them by number which, I think, the records show travel over 24 miles.

Mr. BOURNE. I can not dispute the statement of the Senator, but I simply say it is a great surprise to me.

Mr. McCUMBER. I gave the number. There are some forty-odd thousand employees altogether. The number employed on routes of 24 miles and over is 29,143. Therefore, over 47 per cent of the entire number carry the mail more than 24 miles.

Mr. BOURNE. What is the date of the paper from which the Senator is reading?

Mr. McCUMBER. This is taken from the last statement.

That is not all, Mr. President. I have here another table that is based upon my own information, obtained by writing to all of the rural delivery letter carriers in the State of North Dakota. This was in 1909, at a time when they were receiving $900 for the longest route. I want to go over a few of these, so as to give the Senate an idea of just what the net earnings of rural carriers are. I take these from the whole number, those which I think will better represent the average. I thought we could deal with the matter by individual cases and understand it better than we could by taking the general average. I first take the reply of F. H. Minor, of Wahpeton, N. Dak., my home town. I asked for the capital invested and for the cost of maintenance, and I find that F. H. Minor gives the following under the heading of "Capital invested":

Four horses, $500; 1 buggy, $75; 1 mail wagon, $75; harness, $75; sleigh, robes, horse blankets, etc., $40; total, $720.

Cost of maintenance: Hay and grain for horses, $550; horseshoeing, repairs, etc., $70. Total, $620.

Having considerable personal knowledge of the life of horses and vehicles, I have allowed a depreciation on horses, buggies, and so forth, of about 20 per cent a year. That gives the average working life of a horse at over five years; and from the best information I can get from all of the carriers that is about right. Then, on this capital invested there would be a depreciation of $144, which, added to the $620 expense, would make the total of expenses $764. As the carrier receives $900, that would give him a net earning of $236, or $19.66 a month. I want to ask Senators candidly what they think of a proposition that will pay one man here in the city of Washington $1,200 a year, or $100 a month, and pay a rural carrier, who must go out in the country under all conditions, a net earning of $19.66 per month?

Mr. BOURNE. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me——

Mr. McCUMBER. Gladly.

Mr. BOURNE. The average compensation for the city carriers and the city clerks is $1,069.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is $1,069 now, but it is under a law which allows an increased amount after a given length of service. I think after two or three years' service the maximum amount is paid. They are graded according to the length of service, and soon, under the operation of the law, all will receive $1,200.

Mr. BOURNE. No; the Senator is mistaken. Unless the law may have been changed the average would be the same, unless by law we increase the compensation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think the average will remain the same, because the letter-carrying service is somewhat recent; but I think that in a very few years there will be ten drawing the maximum salary where one will be drawing a smaller salary.

I will take the next case, and we will see how the cases approximate each other. The next is the case of Clarence Peterson, at Napoleon, N. Dak. That is about 200 miles from the place I have already given.

Capital invested: Four horses, $600; 1 buggy, $75; 1 cart, $20; cutter, robes, blankets, harness, and so forth, $50; total invested, $745.

Maintenance: Feed for horses, $480; horseshoeing and repairs, $60; depreciation—that is given here at $100—$640. Therefore depreciation should not be deducted in this case.

I will take another case—passing over a few—that of Thomas J. Seegardson, of Carpio, S. Dak.

Capital invested: 4 horses, $400; 1 wagon, $85; sleigh, $25; harness, $30; buggy, $75; total investment, $615.

Maintenance: Feed for horses, $420; horseshoeing, and so forth, $120; total expense, $540.

Add your 20 per cent depreciation of $123 and you would have an expense of $663, or a net earning of $337, or $28.08 a month.

Mr. President, many items are not taken into consideration here, such as taxes and insurance, that would still further decrease the amount of the net earnings in the rural districts. I will take only one case more, that of William J. Devany, of Devils Lake, N. Dak.

Capital invested (in this instance he uses only 3 horses): 3 horses, $450; mail wagon, $65; cutter, $30; robes, harness, and so forth, $56; total, $601.

Maintenance: Feed for horses, $432; shoeing horses, $36; total, $468.

Add 20 per cent for depreciation, or $120, and you have a total expenditure of $668 and net earnings of $392, or $32.62 per month, out of which he must also pay the taxes and other little necessaries, such as extra clothing, and so forth, that are needed in the wintertime.

Mr. President, I ask that this table may be printed as a part of my argument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have but one more statement along this particular line. I have a letter here from one who was previously engaged in the business of rural delivery in 1910, but is now out of the business because he could not make his expenses. I want to call attention to a portion of his report to the department, a copy of which he sent me, which was made for the month of December, 1910.

On December 2 he described the roads as "soft-snow roads." I know in that particular country what that means. It is very heavy soil and really is almost impassable at times under such conditions. The next date given is December 7—"snowdrifts." That condition must have lasted for several days. On December 16 I find "severe snowstorm; too dangerous to go out." On the 18th, "snowdrifts." On December 21, "drifted roads; snowstorm"; December 22, "drifted, unbroken roads"; on the 23d, "drifted roads"; on the 24th, "roads drifted"; on the 25th, "wind and snow"; on the 27th, "blizzarding"; on the 28th, "snow-clogged roads"; on the 29th, "exhausted team"; on the 30th, "drifted roads"; and on the 31st, "soft-snow grade."

That gives a general idea of some of the conditions that must be contended against by the rural mail carriers, and those who know anything about their work will appreciate the difficulties they have to overcome in getting around the country, especially in the wintertime. Owing to the condition of the roads the rural carrier must necessarily have missed some days, and for those days the amount due him was deducted. I do not know that the same rule prevails now. I also found at the time I made the examination that if, for instance, the roads were so impassable that the carrier could not reach every mile of his route, or if a bridge was out, or any other difficulty existed, there was deducted from his earnings a proportionate amount of that day's salary on the basis of the actual miles traveled, compared with the number of miles on his route; but when the roads were so bad in certain sections that he had to drive around and go 10 miles farther in order to make his delivery, no extra compensation was given him. It may be possible that that character of injustice has now been remedied, but it had not been a year or so ago.

Mr. President, I have been asked what extra cost my amendment would involve. I have here another table, showing the length of routes in the United States, the present rate of pay, the proposed rate of pay under my amendment, the number of carriers on June 30, 1912, the total amount paid at the present rate, and the total required by the proposed amendment. Under the present rate of compensation—$400 for the shortest route of 4 and 5 miles, of which there are only two, $440 on 10 other routes, and $480 on 77 other routes—the total amount required under the present law is $40,430,020. If the salaries of rural carriers are increased so that the lowest amount would be $600 and the highest amount $1,200, as provided in the proposed amendment, the total amount required would be $48,396,800, or a difference of $7,966,780. I understand that under the Senate committee amendment which is proposed to this bill, increasing the maximum for rural carriers to $1,100, there would be added an expense of about $3,500,000——

Mr. BOURNE. Three million six hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. McCUMBER. Three million six hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. Deducting that from the $7,966,780, we would have as the extra cost of this amendment the sum of $4,341,780.

Mr. President, I know of no place in the service where three or four million dollars can better be appropriated than to increase the compensation to the carriers of our rural mail, when we consider that to-day, measured by their net earnings, they are the most grossly underpaid employees of the Government. I therefore hope that the amendment will be adopted. I ask that this table be made a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The table referred to is as follows:

Length of route.	Present rate of pay.	Proposed rate of pay under McCumber amendment.	Number of carriers June 30, 1912.	Total amount pay, present rate.	Total amount required by proposed amendment.
4 and 5 miles	$400	$600	2	$800	$1,200

Mr. SMITH of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BOURNE. I was going to ask the Senator from North Dakota if in his amendment he also embodied the increase in the total appropriation to cover the $4,341,780, which will be added, so as to take care of the amendment, if adopted?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; if my amendment should be adopted it would necessitate a further amendment to increase the total amount by about four and a half million dollars.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the Senator from North Dakota takes his seat——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator only wishes to ask a question, I will yield to him.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know that I fully understand another feature of the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. As I heard it stated at the desk, it provides that the maximum salary on a route of 24 miles shall be $1,200.

Mr. McCUMBER. One hundred dollars a month.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, the amendment provides that there shall be a reduction on the shorter routes, upon a mileage basis, according to the pay allowed per mile for the 24-mile maximum route?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; provided that no carrier shall be paid less than $600 per year, or $50 per month.

Mr. SIMMONS. In other words, a carrier on a 12-mile route would only be allowed $600.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; $600 would be the very lowest. The amount would range from $1,200 to $600, $600 being paid on a 12-mile route.

Mr. SIMMONS. For every mile less than 24 you take off $50?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. In other words, therefore, you regulate the pay of the carrier on a route of any less than 24 miles by the number of miles. You make that the basis of the calculation.

Mr. McCUMBER. The proportion would be as the number of miles actually traveled bear to $1,200.

Mr. SIMMONS. Fifty dollars a mile. Does not the Senator think under that arrangement of fixing the compensation where the route is not up to the maximum, upon no other basis than the number of miles traveled, it is rather a hard rule? The department does not adjust it in that way now. Under the present law and under the House proposition the department would adjust the compensation not absolutely upon the mileage basis, but would take other things into consideration as well as the number of miles to be traveled. To make clear what I have in mind, the carrier who has to travel only 15 miles a day may have to incur an expense almost as great as the carrier who travels 20 miles a day. The carrier who travels only 12 miles a day will incur, I think, in almost every instance much more than half the expense of the carrier who travels 24 miles per day. Therefore, it does not seem to me quite equitable and just to regulate the matter purely upon the basis of the number of miles traveled. The department does not seem to have adopted that fixed and hard rule. It considers the number of miles to be traveled in fixing the rate of compensation where it is not a maximum route, and considers other things as well. Does not the Senator think that is a more equitable and a more just plan of regulating the compensation where the route is not a maximum route?

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President; on the whole I think not. In nearly every section of the country where we have rural delivery there will be some causes that will make the travel very disagreeable. In some sections it would be hilly; in other sections exceedingly cold; in other sections the roads would, perhaps, be rather muddy and hard to travel; and in other sections there might be other causes to cause delay and make the work harder.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is just the point at issue, with the additional point that if you take a 20-mile or a 24-mile route——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can not hear the conversation, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was suggesting that if you compare a 24-mile route, which is the maximum route, with a 20-mile route no carrier could serve his patrons on a 20-mile route with one horse. It would take practically two horses to properly cover that route, and it would take only two to make the 24-mile route.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it would take three, I think.

Mr. SIMMONS. The expense probably to the carrier on the 20-mile route will be just as great as the expense to the carrier who makes the 24-mile route; and it does not seem to me that it would be just to leave out of consideration the fact that the expense of serving the lesser route would be practically as great as the expense of serving the longer route.

Mr. McCUMBER. My idea in offering the amendment, Mr. President, was that the line that would be drawn would be between $600 and $1,200. There are very few routes of less than 12 miles, and the proportion would be made between the 12-mile route and the 24-mile route, and not between the 1-mile route and the 24-mile route.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, when the Senator from North Carolina interrupted to ask a question of the Senator from North Dakota I was just about to address the Senate for the purpose of explaining the difficulty the committee had in undertaking to reach a satisfactory basis for the classification of payments to rural carriers. We thought carefully over the mileage plan, and reached the conclusion that the mileage plan alone could not be used to determine the pay. The number of patrons to be served for a particular length of route largely contributes to the increase of the work of the carrier. The kind of road used affects the service of the carrier; and there are other elements besides distance which should be considered in fixing the compensation of the carrier.

We have adopted, as in Committee of the Whole, a parcel-post provision; the other House has already adopted the rural parcel post; and beyond any question the Senate will agree with the House in adopting the rural parcel post. Under the rural parcel post the amount of service and the amount of labor placed upon a carrier who drives for 12 miles might be just as great as that placed upon the carrier who drives 24 miles. The amount of transportation of freight that falls on him might be sufficient to justify his being paid as much as a carrier who simply drives twice as far. So that, the committee concluded, after full conference with the Post Office Department and with officers of the service who knew the details of the work of the different carriers, that we would not be adopting an equitable plan if we undertook to adopt solely the plan of distances as the basis of compensation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, did the committee consider the proposition of providing a fixed amount for subsistence, say, $150 or $200 a year?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; we had so much that was new that we did not feel justified in going into that plan at the present time.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think that would really be a more just plan, because, as I think the Senator suggested a moment ago, the expense of conveyances, horses, and so forth, is a fixed expense, and very nearly the same whether the route is a long one or a short one?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think, Mr. President and Senators, that the department itself can look at all of these features of the work in fixing a compensation for the present, and that eventually we will have to modify our system so as to make a specific allowance for the expenses that fall on the carriers.

Mr. JONES. It has seemed to me that if we could allow about $200, without probably making an increase in the salary, it would be a more just and equitable adjustment of this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We concluded that we could not ourselves establish a fixed basis and that it was safer at present to leave it to the department, simply increasing the amount of the yearly compensation.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but we do not allow the department now to fix any amount for subsistence. As I understand, the carriers get a fixed salary on the basis of the length of the route.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When we struck out the provision in regard to the length of the route, we allowed the department a discretion in fixing the compensation not limited by the length of the route.

Mr. JONES. So that the department may take into account in fixing that compensation the expense to which the carrier is subjected?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Entirely so.

Mr. JONES. Well, I think we are proceeding in the right direction.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We thought it would be hardly just to fix the salary according to distance.

Mr. BOURNE. I will state furthermore, Mr. President, that the committee were governed in their action somewhat by the fact that the Post Office Department has appointed from among its officials a commission to study this particular question, to see if a more equitable and just method of determination as to the rates to be paid for services rendered could be arrived at than the one now prevailing, and we thought it wise to wait the conclusion of their ascertainment and the submission of their report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to give my support, however, to the proposition that, instead of $1,100, the maximum salary for rural carriers shall be $1,200. I agree fully with the conclusions reached by the Senator from North Dakota upon that subject.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that in drawing this amendment I assumed that the department will still continue to make the division as to compensation in the future as it has done in the past under exactly the same kind of a law, except that the maximum would be larger. Under the present law those carriers who have 5 miles to travel receive $400; 7 miles, $440; 9 miles, $480; 11 miles, $520; 13 miles, $560; 15 miles, $600; 17 miles, $700; 19 miles, $800; 21 miles, $900; 23 miles, $960; and 24 miles and over, $1,000. I simply wanted to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this scale of salaries is made entirely upon a mileage basis and does not take into any consideration whatever the question of the condition of the roads and the many things the Senator would leave for the department, and I am assuming that the department will do just exactly the same in the future as it has done in the past.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator to another thing; which is, that under the present condition a carrier on a 15-mile route would receive $600. Those who would receive $600, I would leave practically as they are; but on routes from 15 to 24 miles and up to 30 and 35 miles I would increase the compensation by gradations which the Postmaster General would have authority to establish under my amendment; so that those traveling 24 miles and over would receive $1,200. Only 917 in the entire service, according to the report of the Postmaster General, are serving routes of less than 17 miles.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am in favor of increasing the maximum to $1,200. I have no question that with the parcel post and the rural parcel post the amount of work upon the carriers will greatly increase, and I have no doubt the returns to the Government from the parcel-post service of the rural carriers will more than amount to the entire increase that has taken place since that service has been organized. I think $1,200 should be made the maximum salary. I myself believe that it is wise to leave a latitude with the officers of the department in adjusting the plan of compensation upon the amount of work done as well as for the distance traveled. I doubt the wisdom of restricting it simply according to distance.

I shall vote for the report of the committee, first having voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to increase the amount of compensation to $1,200 instead of $1,100. I am sure that the additional parcel-post work which will be done by the rural carriers will put work upon them far beyond the increase of compensation which we are giving them, and will bring back to the Government far more from their work than the additional compensation proposed to be allowed. I think the rural carriers ought to have $1,200 instead of $1,100.

Mr. McCUMBER. Has the Senator any minimum salary provided for in his amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. I propose to vote for an increase from $1,100 to $1,200. That was the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. I offered a similar amendment, but found he had already offered it. I would not object to a minimum.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was correct when he said the carrier on a minimum route must necessarily have teams and vehicles, and so forth, and that he will be put to such expense that $50 a month ought to be the minimum salary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think there ought to be a minimum salary of $600 and a maximum of $1,200, and I will be glad to vote for such a minimum. It is only as to the question of how we shall work out the amount of compensation that the Senator from North Dakota and I differ. I doubt the wisdom of limiting it entirely to a mileage basis.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then the Senator practically agrees with me upon fixing a minimum and maximum salary?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Would it not, then, be well to let my amendment go through and let the committee of conference work out a method of determining how the payments should be made between the maximum and the minimum?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it may be well to amend it so as to make the maximum $1,200 and the minimum $600. That can be done very easily.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Georgia will yield to me, I wish to state that under the present law we fix the maximum compensation. The law now provides that it shall not be more than $1,000, I believe. The department have construed that as authorizing them to adjust the compensation for lesser distances. I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that if he would simply provide in his amendment a maximum compensation and a minimum compensation, eliminating the remainder of his amendment, the department could, and would, as it has done before under similar conditions, fix the compensation not altogether upon the basis of mileage, but consider other items which enter into the matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the suggestion is a pretty good one, and I will modify my proposed amendment, with the consent of the Senate, to conform to that suggestion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. While the modification is being made, I only wish to add that mileage will less and less be a just basis of compensation as the rural parcel-post delivery increases, because the amount actually transported in connection with the parcel post will enter more largely into the amount of work required from the carriers.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, the assumption is that the contract made by the rural carrier is that he is going to have a load equal to his capacity for carrying. In case a period is reached where the load exceeds that, additional carriers will have to be put on; so I do not see why we should take into consideration, in the increase of compensation here proposed to rural carriers, the probable increase in packages they may carry under the parcel post. The facts are that the rural carriers to-day, on an average, carry about 24 pounds of packages, and the facts also are, according to computations made by the department, that a rural carrier could carry 150 pounds. If the mail carrier should carry 50 pounds instead of 24 pounds, in my opinion he would not be entitled to any increased compensation because of that fact.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will modify my amendment, and ask that it be read as modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, in lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee, beginning in line 1, after the word "substations," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That on and after December 1, 1912, all rural carriers now serving a daily route of 24 miles or more shall receive as compensation for such services the sum of $1,200 per annum, payable in monthly installments: Provided further, That fractions of 1 mile shall not be considered in fixing such salary: And provided further, That no compensation shall be less than $600.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did I understand the Senator from North Dakota to say that there are rural routes in the country not exceeding 5 miles in length?

Mr. McCUMBER. The report shows 2 who are serving routes which are indicated as 5 miles in length, 10 serving routes that are indicated at 7 miles, and 77 at 9 miles. On those of 5 miles the rate is fixed at $400; on those at 7 miles, at $440; and on those at 9 miles, at $480.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the Senator to now urge that a man carrying mail on a 5-mile route shall receive not less than $600?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think there are many of those routes; but if he has to go only 5 miles he has to have an equipment, and taking the equipment that is necessary for him in that 5-mile service into consideration and the cost of maintenance of horses, and so forth, he could not afford to do it for less than $50 a month.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the proposition to increase the salary of the rural carrier to $1,200 a year as the maximum at this time; but I think it would be very unjust and unfair to those who carry the longer routes to pay to the man who goes but 5 miles $600. I think the present arrangement is much better, much more equitable.

I appreciate as fully as the Senator from North Dakota does the expense which the carriers are put to in preparing themselves to make their trips and in the upkeep of their equipment. I am very much inclined to the proposition suggested by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], namely: Leave the carrier's salary as at present, but give the man whose route is 18 miles or more in length $200 a year for subsistence, and allow the one whose route is less than 18 miles $100 annually for subsistence. This would in fact increase the compensation of the shorter route men $100 and that of those who make the longer trip $200. There certainly is that difference in cost of equipment and upkeep.

My own experience is that those on the short routes do not require the same equipment as the others, and there the carriers may engage in other kinds of business. This increase would fairly meet the expense of the short-distance carrier, as his duties occupy only a portion of the day. But on the other routes, where the whole time of the carrier is required, they should receive more pay for their work. If this subsistence was established now, then hereafter in considering this question we would simply deal with the salary of the carrier. An allowance for horses and vehicles should be made, but it must be evident that the equipment required by the long-route man is much greater than that necessary to the short-distance man.

As I said, I am in sympathy with the amendment, and I believe twelve hundred dollars is not too great compensation for the standard route, but I can not bring myself to agree to the statement of the Senator from Georgia that the prorating of that compensation among the carriers on less than standard routes is a matter which ought to be left to the discretion of the Post Office Departmnet. I think there might be just criticism of that method. It would give an opportunity for some very arbitrary rules to be adopted by the department in reference to the distribution of the salary. Favoritism might be practiced. I would prefer, if we are going to make an increase of $200 a year, to leave it to be distributed under existing rules, so that each carrier will know exactly what he is going to receive.

I may be mistaken in what the Senator from Georgia stated, but if I understood him correctly he said that under the present law the Post Office Department uses its discretion. That is not my understanding of the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator misunderstood me. I did not make that statement, because I do not know.

Mr. TOWNSEND. My understanding is that the salary now is prorated among the carriers according to the distance which each one of them travels. If we are going to increase the pay, as we ought to increase it and as I want to increase it, I should like to have it understood that the salary is to be distributed exactly as is the existing salary.

It seems to me that we ought to increase the salary $200 based upon the present condition of distribution, not fixing a minimum of $600 or changing the order of the department in reference to its payment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that the Senator, then, admits that the present carrier serving only 5 or 6 miles has to have a certain equipment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Surely.

Mr. McCUMBER. He has to have almost the same equipment that one would need driving 24 miles.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hope the Senator did not understand me to say that, because I did not.

Mr. McCUMBER. What I want to get at is this: Considering the equipment a carrier would be compelled to have, I suppose at least one horse and buggy and the care and expense of that, what would the Senator say would be a reasonable compensation for the very shortest route of 5 miles?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not prepared to state that. I am satisfied that it should be in proportion to what is paid for the 24-mile route. I would be willing, in fact, to allow him something for maintenance and such a proportionate increase in salary as his route is to the standard route.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then the Senator——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Wait a moment; let me answer that. I would be willing to allow something for maintenance, but the man who would drive a 5-mile route would not devote that horse and wagon, certainly not the horse, exclusively to the mail business; he would use it for something else. That is the experience of all of the carriers who have driven short routes that I know anything about. So I say that the present method of distribution is very equitable for those exceedingly short-route men.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there is nothing in the bill which provides for any allowance to be made for maintenance. The Senator's argument would have considerable force, of course, if a proper allowance was to be made for maintenance, and that allowance would depend upon the length of service on the assumption that the carrier who travels 5 miles would not need as expensive an equipment and the cost of maintenance would not be so great as if he were compelled to drive 24 miles. But taking the whole proposition in the bill it seems to me that there ought to be a minimum. In looking over the report on the Post Office appropriation bill I find from the tables to which I have already referred that there were only 2 who are serving routes of 4 and 5 miles and that there were only 10 who were serving routes of 6 and 7 miles. When you get above that to 8 or 9 miles a day there is not much time for any other character of business to give your attention to the balance of the time; it really requires one man with his team one day. Therefore it does seem to me that we ought to have a minimum and the minimum ought not to be less than $600.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I understand the Senator correctly, under existing law a man who carries the mail about 12 or 13 miles gets somewhere near $600.

Mr. McCUMBER. If he carries it 14 to 15 miles he receives $600.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Under the proposed law, if we increase the salary to $1,200, then a man who carries 8 or 10 miles would probably get $600, and the man who carries a less distance would get more than he is receiving now. What I am contending for is that on the very short routes $600 is too much, considering that $1,200 is all that is paid for the carrier on the 24-mile route, and the man who carries on the 5-mile route can make money in doing something else, devoting himself to some other kind of business, while the carrier on the 24-mile route can devote himself to nothing else.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that outside of 12 routes the minimum is $480? That is only $120 less than $600. The maximum is to be $1,200. If we add $200 to the maximum, I think we can well add $120 to the minimum.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But you add something to the minimum by your $200 increase. You add something to the minimum amount under the present rule of distribution.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the Postmaster General will properly apportion that amount between the several services. The only difference is the addition on the $600 of $120 more than what may be said to be the minimum, with the exception of those 12 cases. We add $200 to the minimum. Between those rates I think we can get nearly adequate justice.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not want to delay the Senate, but I want to make myself clear by saying that under the present method of distribution if we increase the maximum salary $200, making it $1,200, the minimum man is going to receive more than he is receiving now, the same as your maximum man, and I think it but just to let it be distributed according to the existing rules of the department. The men who devote all their time to the rural service should be paid properly for that service, and those who give only a portion of their time should also be paid for the time and service they render, and subsistence should be allowed according to equipment required. There is no definite proposition for subsistence pending, so the best we can now do is to increase the salary proportionately, based on the increase of $200 per annum to the carrier on the 24-mile route.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I would be glad to accept the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, provided this further proviso be added to it——

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I think the amendment I offered is first to be considered, perfecting the text of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] if he presses the amendment he submitted. Does the Senator from Georgia desire the amendment he suggested to be acted upon?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I suggested it, and the Senator from Georgia offered exactly the same amendment I had previously offered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should not have offered it. The Senator from Alabama offered it. I gave my support to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 4, before the word "hundred" strike out "one" and insert "two," so as to read:

Letter carriers of the Rural Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,200 per annum.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. This does not make any change as to how it shall be distributed. It leaves the regulations as they are now in the department. When traveling longer distances and where the difficulties are greater the carriers receive a greater compensation and the others are diminished.

I wish to say further that we have the rural parcel post already in the bill. That has been adopted by the House and the Senate in one form or another, and it will very largely increase the earnings of the Government, and this increase is nothing but just. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply wish to say in explanation that I will vote for the amendment, as it is to perfect the committee amendment, but after it is carried I shall then ask for a vote upon my amendment, which would be a substitute, the only difference being, of course, that one fixes a maximum and my amendment fixes both a minimum and a maximum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer my amendment now as a substitute for the amendment as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute submitted by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the proposed amendment on top of page 43 insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That on and after September 1, 1912, all rural carriers now serving daily routes of 24 miles or more shall receive as compensation for such service the sum of $1,200 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments: Provided further, That fractions of 1 mile shall not be considered in fixing such salary: And provided further, That no compensation shall be less than $600.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOURNE. Now, I ask consideration of the amendment that I send to the desk, to follow the one just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves an amendment in addition to the amendment just agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment just agreed to the following proviso:

Provided further, That after the taking effect of this act the Postmaster General shall establish and promulgate rules and regulations for the letting of contracts for the carrying of mails on rural routes as near as may be upon the same plan of advertisment and contract now provided by law for the star-route service, no contract to provide a compensation in excess of $1,200 per annum.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is a proposition to go back to the old star-route service and nothing else.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask to have the amendment again read? I did not understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter upon any discussion of the amendment, but the palpable effect of the adoption of the amendment would be to substitute on most of the rural free-delivery routes in the country the old star-route system.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 46 an amendment was adopted on Saturday, at the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which reads as follows:

Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to religious, fraternal, temperance, or other similar publications.

I move, at the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, as it was through his suggestion I first proposed the amendment, that, after the word "temperance," the word "scientific" be inserted.

Mr. POMERENE. Is the Senator reading from the reprint?

Mr. CLAPP. I am reading from the RECORD of Saturday's proceedings; but in the bill itself, of which I have a copy, it appears on page 45.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment, which was agreed to, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, line 20, after the word "holders," the following proviso was inserted:

Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to religious, fraternal, temperance, or other similar publications.

It is proposed, after the word "temperance," to insert the word "scientific," so as to read:

Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to religious, fraternal, temperance, scientific, or other similar publications.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment agreed to will, without objection, be reconsidered. It is reconsidered. The Senator from Minnesota now moves to amend it by inserting the word "scientific" after the word "temperance." The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to have the Senator from Minnesota or some other Senator explain the reason for exempting these publications from the provision. If any one class of publications is required to uncover and show up its ownership, why not apply it to all classes of publications just as well? I do not see any reason for making exemptions of any class. Let them all tell who their owners are and in whose behalf they are published.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, of course I am for one opposed to the entire Senate amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. And so am I. I am opposed to the entire provision.

Mr. CLAPP. I think we are invading a domain there that we can well let alone. But I assume that the underlying purpose of the committee amendment was to have the public know what the influences were which might actuate the attitude of the press, including the magazines.

Now, assuming that that might become the law, it seems very plain to some of us that especially as to religious, fraternal, and scientific journals even that reason could not apply, and Saturday, on the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, the amendment which has been referred to was adopted. I propose, as soon as the present amendment is considered, to offer another amendment enlarging the exemptions, but in discussing it with the Senator from New Hampshire, and at his suggestion, I first offered the amendment including the word "scientific."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. It is not agreed to yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a further amendment?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. It is still before the Senate. Now, I move to strike out the period after word "publications" and to insert a comma and the following:

or weekly newspapers of less than 5,000 circulation.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment, if the Senator please. As I have already stated, I am opposed to this whole provision, but it does seem to me if there is any force in the suggestion that lies at the bottom of the committee amendment it can have no reasonable application to the thousands of average weekly papers throughout the country; and in order that there may be a line drawn I merely propose to insert the words "of less than 5,000 circulation."

I do not care to discuss it further.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be first reported.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment just stated, following the word "publications," and before the period, insert the following:

Or weekly newspapers of less than 5,000 circulation.

Mr. BRISTOW. I can not understand, if it is desirable from the standpoint of the public interest to know the owner of a newspaper, why the ownership of the weekly newspaper should not be just as public as of a daily; a local paper as a metropolitan paper. If the purpose is to develop who owns the paper, why it is not necessary that the ownership of the weekly paper within its sphere of influence should not be known the same as the ownership of the daily paper within its sphere of influence.

Mr. CLAPP. In the first place, I take it that ordinarily the community knows practically who own the local weekly paper. While this whole provision, to my mind, is obnoxious, it seems to me particularly so as to the small paper, because, disguise it as you may, it goes somewhat to the financial status of the paper.

Many of these papers are, I think it is fair to say, struggling, so far as finances are concerned. Nobody claims for a moment that great interests are behind them. I concede their potency in molding public sentiment, but there is no suggestion that behind the ordinary country newspaper there is any great interest. I shall vote to take this whole amendment out when we come to it, but it does seem to me to require the publisher of a small weekly paper to publish who may be interested in it, who may hold its obligations, if they happen to be in the form of a trustee obligation, is carrying this matter too far.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am not discussing the merits of the general proposition as to whether it will be effective or not; but it is just as injurious to the public welfare for an influence to own a large number of small papers as one large paper, and probably more so.

I have known weekly papers in my time that have been acquired to serve a certain purpose by interests that were not interested in the welfare of the community where they owned the paper.

Whether or not this method will have any influence in correcting the evil of acquiring papers throughout the country in order to promote certain ideas or for certain purposes I am not now discussing, but to make the exception of a weekly paper seems to me like being wholly unjustified, because if it is to correct an evil it ought to correct that evil just as well as the one relating to the larger papers.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not believe any evil exists to any great extent. I know in my own section of the country the local press is independent, and I believe that the metropolitan press in my section of the country is independent. I put the distinction more upon the ground that in the last analysis this goes somewhat to the credit of these institutions. While it probably in the case of a great journal would not embarrass its credit at all, yet a man who was working along trying to run a country newspaper might be seriously embarrassed by it. It seems to me it is a burden we have no business in putting upon any of them, and especially upon the small country newspapers.

That is all I care to say on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER. On page 45, line 16, after the word "year," I move to insert "on blanks furnished by the Post Office Department."

Mr. BOURNE. I accept that amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I move, on line 18——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please permit the Chair to have the amendment submitted by him stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, line 16, after the word "year," insert the words "on blanks to be furnished by the Post Office Department."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, on the next line, I move to strike out the word "editors" and insert the words "managing editor."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, line 17, strike out the word "editors" and insert the words "managing editor."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania the purpose of using the words "managing editor."

Mr. OLIVER. Because I take it the purpose of this provision is to fix the responsibility. In every newspaper establishment of any size in large cities there are a large number of writing editors. I do not think the law contemplates that everybody who is connected with the writing force of a paper shall have his name published in these reports. The managing editor is the responsible editor of the newspaper; everything that goes into the newspaper is supposed to be supervised by him; and the publication of the name of the managing editor alone I think would be sufficient to accomplish the purposes that are sought.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the purpose of the Senator from Pennsylvania is admirable. He intends to include, for instance, the night editors, the city editors, and certain editors of the various departments. Each paper has an editor, and it also has a managing editor. A managing editor is responsible, generally speaking, for what appears in the news column, and the editor is responsible for what appears upon the editorial page. I suggest that he change the amendment so that it will read "the editor and managing editor."

Mr. OLIVER. I am perfectly willing to have that substituted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Those are the two men in authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. On the same line, I move to strike out the word "publishers" and insert the word "publisher," using the singular number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, line 17, strike out the word "publishers" and insert the word "publisher."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to make an inquiry. What is meant by the word "publisher"? Does the Senator mean if the newspaper is published by a corporation the name of the corporation?

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I would understand.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. BOURNE. Provision is already made in the Senate substitute for the stockholders and officers and the security holders of the corporation. It would apply simply where there is not a corporation ownership, but was held by individuals.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In many newspapers there is no such official as the publisher. The publication is by a corporation, and the corporation has a president, of course. Does the Senator mean the president of the corporation?

Mr. BOURNE. That is provided for, as the Senator will see from a perusal of the substitute, so called, by the Senate committee. This is where they are held by individuals, one or more, who may be publishers of the periodical.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OLIVER. For what purpose does the Senator from Missouri desire me to yield.

Mr. REED. I ask that the amendment which the Senator from Pennsylvanoia just offered be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, line 17, strike out the word "publishers" and insert the word "publisher."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when the Senator is through——

Mr. OLIVER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think, as a matter of fact, to make that definite and certain it should be "publisher or owner."

Mr. OLIVER. I rather think that the Senator from Nebraska is right, that it would be better to put in "publisher or owner" and strike out the words "business manager," because in ordinary newspaper practice, as I understand it, at least it is so in our section, the publisher and the principal owner are considered as the same person. When we speak of the publisher of a newspaper we mean the principal owner of the newspaper. I only wanted in some way, definitely, to fix the proper way of complying with the provisions of the law, if it should become a law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will permit me, I believe the transposition of these words would possibly bring order out of the provision. After the word "editor" have it followed by "publisher and owner, business manager," and so forth.

Mr. OLIVER. I suggest that the words "business manager" are entirely unnecessary there. For instance, with the paper in which I am interested there is no such officer as business manager. It is not a definite term at all. If you include the publisher and the owner that will be sufficient. The business manager, if there is one, is simply a salaried man at any rate. I do not see why his name should be included. I only want to secure a phraseology which as nearly as possible will cover all the principal elements of newspaper publications all over the country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The real difficulty is that the practice varies in different regions. As the Senator from Pennsylvania says, some papers have no business manager. The paper that I am interested in has no business manager. Some papers have no publisher except the corporation that publishes it. Others have a known publisher. It ought to be phrased in such a way as to cover each publication.

The law reuires the publication to adopt a title that is known at the time, and I thought by making the phraseology something like this it would be covered: After "post-office address of the editor," say "publisher, owner, or business manager." Then if there were no publisher the business manager would take the place.

Mr. OLIVER. With the consent of the Senate, I will modify my amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will allow me to give it again, perhaps in a better form, I will suggest, after the word "editor," the words "publisher, owner, or business manager."

Mr. OLIVER. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be stated.

Mr. REED. That is not satisfactory to me for different reasons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, line 17, after the amendment just agreed to, strike out the words "publishers, business managers" and insert "publisher, owner, or business manager."

Mr. REED. As the bill is now drawn it uses the plural—"editors, publishers, business managers, and owners." The plural employed in this form includes the singular, so if there is one editor his name must be furnished, if there are two or more they must be furnished. If there is one publisher and that fact is stated, it fully satisfies the requirements of the law, but if there be two or more, then their names should appear.

I think the bill as now drawn absolutely covers the case and will embarrass no one. A newspaper that has but one business manager will state that fact, and a newspaper that has but one publisher will state that fact, but if the newspaper should happen to have two publishers, then they will be required to set forth their names.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. REED. To limit it as suggested would make it so that if there were two business managers or the management of the business office was divided that would not necessarily be stated. If there was more than one proprietor or owner, then the fact would not have to appear. It sometimes happens that there is a partnership in the control and ownership of the newspaper. The language as it is now, I think, absolutely covers the case. Nobody will be embarrassed by it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator will realize the impossibility of what he suggests. If there is a partnership, then the partnership is the publisher. There are not two publishers; there is only one publisher. That is the partnership.

Mr. REED. But if the partnership is an entity, like a corporation, or two or more people doing business under some sort of firm name, it is essential that those names should appear. The principal purpose of this bill is to advise the public as to just who is owning the paper. The partnership may operate under a third name; it may operate under the name of John Smith & Co., and yet the partners may be named Jones and Jackson and Thompson. The very purpose is to search back of the name and get the names of the real publishers and owners. That is the very reason of it. In a corporation we have nothing but the corporate name, and hence the bill proposes to go back into the question of stock ownership and copartnership. It could be truthfully stated that the paper is published by the Smith Publishing Co. That might be a copartnership, and it might be composed of half a dozen men, and the very fact that the public desires to know might be concealed back of that partnership name. I think the bill is all right as it is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, so far as the Senator's point relating to publishers is concerned, I believe, on second thought, he is correct; but he is obviously wrong when he applies his argument to editors. Any newspaper of considerable size has an editor, a managing editor, a telegraph editor, a night editor, a city editor, a sporting editor, a society editor, and a number of other editors, and it is obvious that it is not the purpose of this proposed law to require the names of all those editors to be inserted. Therefore, so far as the editorial control is concerned, all that is required is to know the editor and the managing editor, the one who controls the editorial page and the other the news pages of the paper. So far as the publishers are concerned, if it is desired to get at the names of those in a partnership publishing a newspaper, possibly the Senator has stated his point well; but, so far as I am concerned, I think the amendment might be so changed as to leave a possibility of securing that result.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. In a moment. Replying to what my friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has said, if it is conceded by the Senator that the names of publishers ought to appear for the reasons I gave, and to the question he presents in regard to the editors, I will say that I am not so certain that the Senator is correct about that. One of the greatest evils, in my opinion, of the newspaper business—and, like all other great business ventures, it is liable to have some evils attached to it—is the fact that the public do not know, and can not find out, who is responsible for the articles that appear; they do not know who the editors are—who the writers are. The paper is owned by perhaps a great corporation; it speaks as by authority, and you never get back to the individual responsibility of the man who wrote the article. I question very much whether the public is not entitled to know just who it is who gives expression to the various sentiments printed and the statements that are put forth. The newspaper world, I think, will not complain of that; I do not see how they can justly complain of that. Every man ought to be willing to stand back of any assertion he makes or of any argument which he puts forth.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would the Senator, for instance, carrying his argument to its legitimate conclusion, if it should be necessary, then, not only require the names of the editors of all the departments in the newspaper, but the names of the reporters who write the articles as well?

Mr. REED. I am not sure, sir, but it would be an excellent reform if every man who put anything into a newspaper had to sign it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That would be the legitimate conclusion of the Senator's argument.

Mr. REED. But that would be somewhat revolutionary; and not being a practical newspaper man, as is the Senator from Nebraska, and not wanting to get into a field where I would be without experience, I am not prepared to say that should be done; but when a person achieves enough distinction on a newspaper to be known as an editor, the fact that he is an editor, it seems to me, could well be printed in the newspaper. It does not take much printer's ink nor much space on the large papers to print the names of the editors or to furnish them in these statements.

There may be about this bill some things that on test will be found to be objectionable; and if they are, I should be quite willing to assist in remedying them; but I believe the bill has been pretty carefully drawn, and that it ought to be passed about as it is on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska, which will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, in lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "publishers, business managers, and owners" and to insert the words "publisher, owner, or business manager."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the word "owner" in the amendment to the amendment should be "owners."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification in the amendment to the amendment will be made. The question is on the amendment to the amendment as modified.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, beginning on page 45, in line 20, of the amendment of the committee, in my print of the bill, I move to strike out all after the word "corporation," down to and including the word "holders," in line 21.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, beginning in line 20, it is proposed to strike out of the committee amendment the following words:

And also the names of known bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, my reason for proposing this amendment is because I think in the case where a newspaper property is bonded in the regular way, it is impossible for the owners to know who all of the bondholders are, so that the publication of the facts called for would only partially convey the information that is desired.

Mr BOURNE. Mr. President——

Mr. OLIVER. If the Senator will indulge me a moment, I will say that I do not think it is fair to compel the owner of a property to disclose the fact that he has a mortgage on his property; it is of no interest to the public; and this makes provision requiring him to publish who are the owners of the property and who are behind the property. I do not think it ought to cover the bonds or mortgages on his newspaper property.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, the amendment yesterday adopted cures the defect mentioned by the Senator from Pennsylvania in the beginning of his remarks by the substitution of the word "known," so that it now reads:

Also the names of known bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think, Mr. President, that a publisher should be compelled to disclose to the public the fact that he owes money or that he has a mortgage on his property, and to publish it twice a year. I think it is invading the domain of private business and private business rights. I do not think that that provision ought to be in the bill. I think as long as the owner publishes the names of his stockholders and of the owners, it ought to stop there. There is no necessity for publishing the names of the mortgagees twice a year, publishing the fact that he has a mortgage on his property. It is not right and it is not fair.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, to determine the accountability of the newspaper to the individual, if any such exists, other than to the owner himself, I believe that it is desirable and necessary to have the provision as in the Senate amendment, namely, the names of the known bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders, because the obligation might not be to the stockholders, but might be to the security holders. The purpose of the provision, as I understand, in its initiation in the other House, which is concurred in by the Senate committee, is to show what the bias is or what the accountability may be, directed to what individual, as governing possibly the publishers of the paper.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I do not see that the fact that a newspaper owes money to a bank, a savings bank, for instance, should make that savings bank the dictator of the policy of that newspaper, and for that reason I do not think that this provision ought to be insisted upon.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the provision works no hardship. Under the law of practically every State it is the duty of every holder of a mortgage to record that instrument in order that there shall be notice to all the world of the fact of its existence. In many States the withholding of such an instrument from the record is held to be a fraud upon the creditors of the party giving the mortgage. So the information will already be upon record by all those proprietors of newspapers who propose to treat the public fairly by recording mortgages which exist, and it will apply principally to those newspapers which have secret mortgages.

If we intend to carry out the purpose of this proposed law, which is that the people who read the newspapers shall be advised of the control back of the newspapers, then we all understand that that purpose will be rendered impotent if we do not inquire into who it is who holds the mortgages and securities of the paper, because under that is frequently covered the real control of a newspaper. It is not inquiring into private business. Every newspaper that is published and has the use of the mails is engaged in a public business in one sense. The Government of the United States is carrying its publications for much less than the real cost. The newspapers have certain rights under the law which are not granted to the ordinary citizen. Therefore I say if we are going to pass a law, let us do it so that the public will know who are the real owners and proprietors of the paper and what influences there are which may control the paper, because they control the financial life of the paper.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I want to make one additional observation along the line suggested by my colleague [Mr. REED] and others who have spoken in agreement with him.

I was struck by the remark of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] that if a national bank or a savings bank should loan money to the publisher of a newspaper it did not follow, and ordinarily would not follow, that the bank would control the policies of the publication. I am not so sure of that. Let me state a case that I believe does not infrequently occur. Suppose, for example, that over in the great State of Pennsylvania some man was a candidate for governor or Senator or for any other important office, and some potential newspaper in that State was advocating his nomination or election, or opposing it, taking the side of an opposition candidate; and suppose that paper should say harsh and even libelous things concerning the candidate to whom it was opposed. If it should so happen that the candidate it was supporting was a large creditor of the publishing company, that he had loaned it money, that he was the holder of its securities to an extent that he had the newspaper within his power, would it not be well that the public addressed day after day by such a publication should know that fact?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, to that I will answer that if any individual or any institution should loan money to a newspaper with the purpose of controlling its policies, they would take very good care to conceal that fact by not making the mortgage a subject of record. A bond secured on a mortgage upon newspaper property is a matter of public record, and everybody can see it who goes to the records. The objection that I raise to this provision is that it compels a man who owns a newspaper property to twice a year publish to the world the fact that he has a mortgage on his property—no matter to whom. If his creditors aim to control his policy, his creditors can very readily conceal the fact that they are his creditors, so that it need not be published in this way.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I take it from the Senator's remarks that he thinks it is a very embarrassing thing to have the fact published that a mortgage exists. Yet does not the Senator know that the newspapers are making a regular business of printing lists of mortgages which are recorded by other people and placing that fact before the public every day?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, to put a mortgage on one's property is no disgrace, and it is published ordinarily when the mortgage is put on record; but that is a very different thing from having the statement repeated twice a year during every year of a newspaper's life. I do not think the Congress of the United States ought to place any industry under such a ban.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word. The whole truth about the matter is—and we must face it—that in many instances newspapers are controlled in their policies upon important matters by those holding bonds and mortgages. There is nothing more common than for some man to be put forth as the nominal owner and editor and manager of a paper which is in fact owned and controlled by some financial power back of him. The Senator says that that will be concealed. That is true; it may be concealed. It is also true, however, that the true owner may be concealed; that misstatements may be made in regard to any of these matters about which we propose to require statements; but, because misstatements may be made in some instances is no reason for failing to require information to be given; and if misstatements are made, then somebody will have been guilty of bad faith and the remedy will be at hand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the committee amendment as amended, in the nature of a substitute for the House provision.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, at the beginning of line 23, after the word "same" at the end of line 22, it is proposed to strike out "or the originals thereof: Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said postal service, or the presenting by any such person or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress, or any Member thereof, shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to send to the desk and have read for the information of the Senate two letters which were handed to me this morning by the gentlemen whose signatures they bear, with the request that they be presented to the Senate. In doing this I am simply complying with the request and not assuming any further responsibility, except to say that these gentlemen came to me as representatives of the associations they claim in their letters to represent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Washington, D. C., August 9, 1912.

Hon. JAMES A. REED,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to respectfully inform you that the amendment introduced by you on Saturday to section 6 of the Post Office appropriation bill or the amendment offered by Senator NELSON, which are substantially the same, meet with the hearty approval of the National Association of Letter Carriers. Assuring you of my appreciation, and also of those whom I have the honor to represent, in your efforts to grant the right of appeal to postal employees, I beg to remain,

Very sincerely, yours, WILLIAM E. KELLY, President.

RAILWAY MAIL ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Washington, D. C., August 10, 1912.

Hon. JAMES A. REED,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring again to our interview of a few days ago on the Post Office appropriation bill, with special reference to section 6, permit me to say that the employees in the postal service are gratified with the attitude of the House and the Senate committee toward our appeal for the right of a hearing and defense in case of removal or reduction. This provision in section 6 is very desirable and will serve to protect the employees against arbitrary removals or reductions. It will afford an opportunity to know on what grounds the employee is to be removed or demoted, and will further allow opportunity to make a defense.

We had hoped that the Senate would retain that part of the proviso under this section granting postal employees the right to petition Congress, or any Member thereof, for a redress of grievances. As indicated to you during our interview, we still hope that something may be done either on the floor of the Senate or in conference to secure to us this privilege, or rather, this right.

In the proviso stricken out in section 6 there is a proposition which encourages affiliation with outside organizations and the formation of organizations among Government employees without restriction. It is this particular feature of the proviso that seems to have complicated matters and is probably responsible for most of the opposition to the entire proviso. We who are in the service desire to make it clear that we have never urged, and do not now urge, that Congress should by legislation encourage Government employees to form organizations or affiliations with outside organizations, whose aims and policies might at some time or other force us into an embarrassing attitude toward our sworn duty to the Government. We would prefer to have the organization feature eliminated, but would like the substance of the last half of the proviso (stricken out by the committee) restored, granting us the right of appeal to Congress.

We have organizations now in each branch of the postal service organized to promote the efficiency of the service, to advance the welfare of the employees, and to pay benefits in case of accident, sickness, or death. These organizations are quite free from outside interference or domination, are controlled by men in the service, and are able to meet every legitimate need from an organization standpoint.

The men of our service are willing to trust Congress for an equitable adjustment of grievances that may arise from time to time, provided Congress is properly advised as to service conditions. With the "right of appeal" these organizations or individual members thereof will be able to give information to Congress regarding the needs of the service without fear of demotion or removal. Except among a very limited number there is no demand from the men actually in the service for that part of the proviso of section 6 which would subject the postal service and eventually the civil service itself to the dangers of secret organizations and outside affiliations and interference.

We are satisfied from our interview with you that you understand our position accurately. The amendments submitted by you and Senator NELSON to-day are substantially the same and are in accord with the hopes and desires of the men of our service as expressed to you in person several days ago. We have no doubt that you and Senator NELSON will be able to reconcile the phraseology of the amendments proposed so that our friends who believe we should have the right to petition Congress may unite in support of an acceptable amendment that will meet the end in view.

Assuring you of our appreciation of the interest you have manifested in this matter, I am,

Very sincerely, P. J. SCHARDT,
President Railway Mail Association.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there are two distinct amendments apparently printed as one. The first amendment is simply to strike out the words "or the originals thereof." It has no relation to the proviso which follows. The Chair will first put the question on that amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just a moment. On April 10, 1911, I introduced a bill covering very much the same subject included in section 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator allow the Chair to put the question on striking out the four words "or the originals thereof." They have no relation to the proviso.

Mr. REED. I do not understand that. I have been trying to follow it, but have been unable to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will examine the original bill, on page 48, line 23, he will see that the words "or the originals thereof," proposed to be stricken out, have no relation to the amendment which follows, striking out the proviso.

Mr. REED. I understand now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out those words.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as I was about to say, on April 10, 1911, I introduced a bill in the Senate covering very much the same proposition involved in section 6. I desire to have printed in the RECORD so much of the bill as I have not marked out to show that the provision that is part of section 6 is almost verbatim the provision of the bill to which I refer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

And no person holding a position under the civil-service laws shall be removed therefrom except for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service and for reasons given in writing, and the person whose removal is sought shall have notice of the same, and of any charges preferred against him, and be furnished with a copy thereof, and also be allowed a reasonable time for personally answering the same in writing; but no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the officer making the removal; and copies of charges, notice of hearing, answer, reasons for removal, and of the order of removal shall be made a part of the records of the proper department or office, as shall also the reasons for any change in rank or compensation; and copies of the same shall be furnished the person affected upon request, and the Civil Service Commission also shall, upon request, be furnished copies of the same or the originals thereof.

Mr. JONES. While I am on my feet I simply desire to say that I am heartily in favor of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] or that suggested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] with reference to the formation of organizations of postal employees. I intended to put in the RECORD substantially the same letter the Senator from Missouri has had read.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what his amendment is? It does not seem to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], which was first submitted, will be stated, and then the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will be stated.

Mr. REED. My amendment was first, I think, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Senator's amendment will be first stated.

Mr. REED. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Are we now to vote upon the question of whether we will strike out the House provision as the first proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the proposition of the committee, but the text of the House bill can be amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the amendment that I offered was really intended to be offered in the event that the House provision was stricken out and to take the place of it. The Senator from Washington has asked for an explanation of this amendment. I call his attention to the fact——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, can we not have both amendments stated from the desk, so that we may know what they are?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done upon request of the Senator. The two amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by Mr. REED is in lieu of the words proposed to be stricken from the bill, on pages 48 and 49, to insert the following:

The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress or any Member thereof or to furnish information to either House of Congress or to any committee or Member thereof shall not be denied or interfered with.

The amendment proposed by Mr. NELSON is in lieu of the words proposed to be stricken from the bill, on pages 48 and 49, to insert the following:

Provided, however, That the presenting by any person or groups of persons employed in the postal service of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if it is possible to do so, I should like to see the vote first taken on whether we will strike out the House provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is entirely proper. The Senator can withhold his amendment until that motion is acted upon.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, so far as I can understand, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri does not protect the postal employees in the right to form associations for the improvement of the conditions of labor; in other words, it would leave stricken out of the bill that portion of the House provision of section 6 relating to organizations. The clerks have an organization now and have had for some time, apparently with the consent of the Post Office Department. It is obvious that the right to form such associations is a great advantage to the employees. There are many things which need to be called to the attention of the department which can not be called to the attention of the department by individuals. The only way in which they can properly be presented is through some organization, and because of the fact that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri—which really is proposed as a substitute for section 6—does not protect the employees in the right to form such associations, even as to those which they now have, and would leave the employees subject to be disciplined for remaining members of associations, it seems to me the provisions of the House bill in this respect ought to be retained and that the motion to strike out ought to be voted down.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word. I know the Senator from Washington does not want to put me in any different light than the true one. I have already stated that I desired to offer this amendment of mine in the event that the House provision was stricken out, and I asked that the vote be taken first upon the question as to whether it should be stricken out. I prepared the amendment I offered because I wanted at least to preserve to these men the right of petition to Congress. I do not know that the Senator and I are at all at variance, but I would not want to be put in the position of having offered this amendment with a view of denying to these men the right of organization.

While I am on my feet, I want to say that some four men claiming to represent these organizations—I have had read here the letters from two of them—stated to me that they believed their right to petition Congress might be jeopardized by insisting upon the House proposition as it came here, and for that reason they desired to wait. One or two of them went to the extent of saying they did not desire the right to organize as contemplated by the House bill, and went further and stated that they now did have organizations that were not being interfered with; but there are others who have come to me since and have stated that they do desire the House provision and that they feel that their rights are being impinged upon by departmental orders. One of those orders I read into the RECORD on Saturday. All I am now asking is that the Senate shall vote upon the question as to striking out the House provision. If that motion is carried and if the provision is stricken out, I then desire to offer the amendment which has been read.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the House text by inserting after the word "employees" in line 25, page 48, the words I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "employees," in section 6, line 25, on page 48, it is proposed to insert "not affiliated with any outside organization."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that recognizes the right by law of these employees to form associations within the service, and I think it meets the desires of practically all of the leaders of the various organizations. It will also, as I think, remove any objection to adopting the House provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the text of the House bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin rise to address himself to the amendment of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to address myself to the section before it is amended in any respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I know of no reason why a different rule should apply to the employees in the Post Office Department and in the postal service from that in any other department of the Government. As I understand, there are at present in a number of the departments of the Federal Government regular union organizations of employees affiliated with the Federation of Labor. Experience shows that this organizing of Government employees has not resulted in disturbance of any kind or been conducive to strikes, or that it has in any manner been detrimental to the service.

Senators will remember that some two years ago there was a great deal of friction and trouble in the postal service. It arose, as I understand it, from an effort on the part of the Postmaster General to impose additional extraordinary service upon railway postal clerks and other employees in the postal service, in order that his department might make an exceptional record for economy.

This departmental decree of 1910, which became known as the "take-up-the-slack" order, so changed the conditions under which the men in the service had to labor that there was general complaint; and notwithstanding the Executive regulation which had been issued by former President Roosevelt and President Taft, known as the "gag order," those complaints reached Members of the House and Senate early in 1911. There was a general suspension of the promotions to which the men in this service were entitled under the law, and as I say, to the very great hardship of the men and to the detriment of the service, extra and extremely burdensome duties were laid upon them.

There was a reduction in the force, and the withholding from the crews of the usual complement of helpers. Notwithstanding Congress had made provision for the appointment of additional post-office clerks and carriers to meet the increase in the business due to the expansion of the country, the Postmaster General arbitrarily refused to make these appointments and fill these positions.

The result of this policy which placed a premium on inefficient service was not only dissatisfaction on the part of the employees, but it brought a general complaint from business men over the country because of delays in the delivery of mail. The cutting down of the forces that handled the mails upon some of the principal railway post-office routes, the failure to provide sufficient help in the post offices, and the failure to supplement the existing carrier forces with additional men, resulted in throwing such an additional burden upon the men in the service that they were not able to handle the mail of this country with the expedition demanded by the people and to which they are rightfully entitled. It was a daily occurrence to have great quantities of "stuck mail" piled upon the trucks of transfer stations such as Pittsburgh, and for such mail to be carried "unworked" from Pittsburgh to New York and back to Pittsburgh again.

I cite that as typical of the condition existing on many of the heavy mail routes throughout the country.

I regret, Mr. President, that I have not been able to tabulate a mass of information which I gathered upon this subject with the purpose of ascertaining exactly the conditions and of presenting a digest of that material to the Senate at the proper time. I mailed a series of questions to all of the railway mail clerks whose addresses I was able to obtain. I sent out, I think, something like ten, twelve, or fifteen thousand circulars. I have the replies. The matter is very interesting, and would be very instructive, I am certain, if it was in form to be presented to the Senate. It reveals the fact that the conditions in this service are probably more arbitrary than in any other branch of the civil service.

I will say, in passing, that I incurred the displeasure of the Post Office Department in making this investigation and my mail was subjected to an espionage that was almost Russian in its character. Letters addressed to me were opened in violation of the postal laws. I have here before me [exhibiting] a package of envelopes, a few out of hundreds, bearing evidence that the mail was rifled and the contents of the envelopes examined by some one presumably who was hostile to the purpose which I had in seeking information.

It was, Mr. President, because of the condition which the Postmaster General forced upon the men under him that dissatisfaction broke out in an aggravated way in the tenth division of the Railway Mail Service on the Tracy and Pierre railway post office. I do not know whether reference has been made to that matter in this debate. I do know that it engaged the attention of some of the committees that have charge of this subject of legislation, and that everywhere it was characterized by the officials as a strike on the part of the employees.

I contend, Mr. President, that, as is abundantly shown by the testimony, it was nothing of the sort. With the provisions of section 6 just as passed by the House enacted into law, I can not conceive that it would be possible for any organized opposition to the Post Office Department or to the Government to go to the point of open rebellion. Indeed, I think the conditions which arose in that particular district would have been obviated if the men had been organized and had the benefits that go with organization.

Second Assistant Postmaster General Stewart, referring to this trouble before the House Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, stated that railway post-office clerks on the Tracy-Pierre line struck. Mr. Van Dyke, president of the tenth division of Railway Mail Association, an organization recognized by the department, in answer to the questions of the committee, said that these men had signed a protest to the chief clerk, in which they made a statement that they could not work under the heavy and extra duties imposed upon them in the run. They said they did not think the department should ask them to do that work, and that they could not take the run out. For this threat they were suspended.

Mr. Van Dyke was asked by Mr. YOUNG, a member of the committee, if these men quit their jobs, and to this question he replied: "No, sir; they refused to do the extra work and the chief clerk suspended them without trying to placate them."

Mr. Van Dyke, in his testimony, called attention to the fact that 20 men on the Elroy and Tracy line committed exactly the same offense, that of signing a statement refusing to fill an extra helper run after a set date, and in their case the department filled the vacancy. Mr. TALCOTT of the committee asked this question:

Mr. TALCOTT. The cases were not exactly the same?
Mr. VAN DYKE. They refused to go out after a certain date; the two cases are parallel.
Mr. DIES. No; the 10 actually quit work and the 20 only threatened to quit.
Mr. VAN DYKE. The men on the Tracy-Pierre line did not quit; they threatened to quit; the same action.

As a result of the conditions in which the men in the Railway Mail Service found themselves, those in the northwest section, in February, 1911, organized what was known as the Brotherhood of Railway Postal Clerks, and it was after this organization was completed that the department issued its orders against secret organizations of postal employees.

Mr. President, I ask leave to print, without detaining the Senate to read, that order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The order referred to is as follows:

General Order No. 1170, issued from the office of the superintendent on Tuesday of each week, for the information and guidance of postal clerks, postmasters, and all concerned.

NORMAN PERKINS, Superintendent.

SECTION 1. GENERAL.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, March 13, 1911.

Mr. NORMAN PERKINS,
Superintendent Railway Mail Service, St. Paul, Minn.

SIR: I am sending you herewith a copy of a letter from the honorable Second Assistant Postmaster General in regard to the reported movement among the clerks to organize lodges of secret organizations in the service.

Please publish the same in your general orders for the information and guidance of the clerks.

Respectfully,

ALEX. GRANT,
General Superintendent.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, March 13, 1911.

Mr. ALEX. GRANT,
General Superintendent Division of Railway Mail Service.

SIR: Referring to the reports that postal clerks at various points are forming lodges of secret organizations of railway postal clerks, I desire that steps be taken at once to acquaint all in the service that such action is regarded as inimical to the interests of the Government. All clerks when they enter the service take an oath to well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office to which they are appointed and to perform all the duties required of them and to abstain from everything forbidden by the laws in relation to post offices and post roads. It is incompatible with their obligation to the department that they should assume another oath with a secret organization in the service which may at any time interfere with the obligations which they have assumed upon entering the service. This is not to be construed as interfering with any right which a clerk may have of acting personally and individually with reference to organizations outside of the postal service.

You are directed to advise all railway postal clerks as to these principles of employment and views here expressed and that they shall be governed thereby.

JOSEPH STEWART,
Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Prior to the issuance of this regulation and the "take-up-the-slack order" of the Postmaster General there was general dissatisfaction in the civil service of the Government, not confined to the Post Office Department, because of the two Executive orders, one issued by former President Roosevelt and the other by the present Executive. These orders the Senate is familiar with, and I will not take the time of the Senate to read them, but will print them in connection with my remarks without reading.

Following is the order issued by President Roosevelt January 25, 1906:

All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the executive departments or independent Government establishments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the departments, or independent Government establishments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The order issued by President Taft, under date of November 26, 1910, was as follows:

It is hereby ordered that no bureau, office, or division chief, or subordinate in any department of the Government, and no officer of the Army or Navy or Marine Corps stationed in Washington, shall apply to either House of Congress, or to any committee of either House of Congress, or to any Member of Congress, for legislation, or for appropriations, or for congressional action of any kind, except with the consent and knowledge of the head of the department; nor shall any such person respond to any request for information from either House of Congress, or any Committee of either House of Congress, or any Member of Congress, except through, or as authorized by, the head of his department.

WILLIAM H. TAFT.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that under date of February 8, 1912, this Executive order was modified to provide that employees be not removed except for just cause and to give every employee whose removal is recommended an opportunity to be heard; and also providing that the heads of departments shall forward to Congress petitions received from employees.

These Executive orders denying the right of petition to men in the public service, the action of the department as set forth in the Stewart letter, the experiences of the men in the railway mail and other branches of the service, who were reduced or dismissed or their condition made so onerous that they were forced to resign because they declined to sever their connection with the organizations of which they were members and which had for their object the betterment of labor conditions—all this created a just demand for legislation of the character contained in section 6 of this bill.

In a debate on Saturday the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] asked if there had ever been an instance in which an employee had been either demoted or dismissed because of his connection with any union, association, or club.

As an answer to that question I desire to place in the RECORD the examination of George W. Nichols, of Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Nichols was 22 years in the Railway Mail Service. His only offense, so far as the record shows, was his joining the Railway Postal Clerks' Protective Association. He was examined by his superiors in order to ascertain whether he was a member of that association, and the questions and answers as taken down at the time are as follows:

Q. Are you a member of the Railway Mail Clerks' Protective Association?

Knowing that the answer to that question would cost him his position, he replied:

I decline to answer. I consider this a private affair.
Q. This is a secret organization, is it not?—A. Yes; I suppose so.
Q. It is composed entirely of postal clerks?—A. I do not know.
Q. Have you attended any meeting?—A. I decline to answer.
Q. This association affiliates with the American Federation of Labor, does it not?—A. Do not know.
Q. Do you decline to answer any and all questions concerning this association and the matter of your membership with it on the grounds that it is no concern of the department?—A. I do.

He was further questioned by his chief clerk at Cleveland, Ohio, March 30:

I have called your attention to the letter from the honorable Second Assistant Postmaster General, under date of March 13, 1911, defining the attitude of the department with relation to the formation of secret organizations within the Railway Mail Service.
Q. You are a member of the Postal Clerks' Protective Association, are you not, Mr. Nichols?—A. Yes.
Q. You have been nominated for office and your name placed upon the ballot?—A. I suppose so; yes.
Q. What office, may I ask?—A. I think it was trustee.
Q. The ballots that were sent out are returnable April 1, are they not?—A. I don't remember.
Q. Now that you have been made acquainted with the position of the department with relation to organizations of the character of the Postal Clerks' Protective Association, which I understand is a secret organization, please say what your future policy will be with regard to membership in that organization and performance of duties of the office for which you have been nominated, if elected.—A. Well, I take the ground that that letter of Mr. Stewart's is entirely beyond his authority; that he has no right to make any such regulations. My position is such that I don't intend to withdraw.
Q. You will serve as an officer of that organization if elected?—A. I certainly will—if I remain in the service. I've got to the point that I don't care whether I stay or not, as far as that's concerned.
Mr. FORMANEK. That will be all.

Following this examination of Mr. Nichols came this order of removal:

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

REMOVAL.

The removal and the discontinuance of the pay of George W. Nichols, railway postal clerk, class 5, with pay at the rate of $1,400 per annum, between New York, N. Y., and Chicago, Ill., are hereby ordered.
For conduct detrimental to the welfare of the service. Pay office: Cleveland, Ohio. Date of order: April 4, 1911. Form 2417. 5-3527. E. M. K.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
DIVISION OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Washington.

SIR: An order removing you and discontinuing your pay as a railway postal clerk has been issued, as indicated on the reverse side of this sheet.

Respectfully,
G. F. STONE,
Acting General Superintendent.

To GEORGE W. NICHOLS,
Railway Postal Clerk, Cleveland, Ohio.

April 6, received. (Through office of Div. Supt., R. M. S.)

There was no complaint, Mr. President, that Mr. Nichols did not perform the duties of his office strictly in accordance with the rules and regulations of the department. There was no complaint that his personal conduct was in any respect detrimental to the service. He was removed from the public service after 22 years of faithful performance of duty simply because he joined an organization of railway mail clerks against which the department brought no charge but of which it was not in favor.

The Railway Postal Clerks Protective Association is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor; the Brotherhood of Railway Post-Office Clerks is not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor; but the ban of the department seems to reach both organizations.

I will now place in the RECORD a letter which I received from St. Paul, but I withhold the name, because to publish it would endanger the position of the writer:

ST. PAUL, MINN., ——, 1911.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Since answering your inquiries regarding conditions in Railway Mail Service, and the attitude of the Post Office Department against our organization, I must now supplement my answers to questions 1 and 2, as follows:

Yesterday, 18th instant, I was ordered to call at the office of Division Superintendent Alex. Grant, who insisted that in accordance with letter of Assistant Postmaster General Stewart, it was my duty to withdraw at once from the National Brotherhood of Railway Postal Clerks; that failure to do so would be considered as insubordination; and that the "department" was determined to break up such organization. I answered that I had a clear idea of my duty in that regard and besides had good sound legal advice to the effect that the Post Office Department had no right to prohibit us from organizing.

Mr. GRANT. Then I am to understand that you are a union man—you believe in union?

Answer. Yes, sir; I do believe in union principles and believe that they would be for the best interest of the public, the clerks, and also the officials of the Post Office Department.

Mr. GRANT. Well then I see that you and I can never agree on that subject. You understand that anyone who takes such a stand against the department is liable to get hurt, and you'll have no kick coming.

With this veiled threat he dismissed me from further interview.

I answered, "Very well, Mr. Grant, we all perfectly understand your powers under the 'gag rule,' but always have denied, and will deny, the right and constitutionality of that rule."

I understand that numbers of clerks are being daily called to his office and talked to in practically the same manner, a little variation now and then, depending on their attitude.

I want to submit, Mr. President, another letter. This letter was written from Boston, Mass. It calls attention to the case of Mr. Quackenbush, removed from service because he persisted in being a candidate for an office in the Railway Mail Service contrary to the wishes of the department. I have had this letter copied, and I will ask the Secretary to read the copy I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., April 12, 1911.

HONORABLE SIR: Undoubtedly you have received many letters of grievances from railway mail clerks, of the hardships they have had to endure by the action of the department in its line of the so-called economy plan.

Our cause as so represented has been presented by men from the Railway Mail Association who were not of the rank and file and could or did not present the cases of those who were the greatest sufferers.

Of those who lately appeared before the Post Office Committee to represent our cause one was the national president, one was the national secretary, and the third the president of first division, Railway Mail Association.

The first, since that interview, it is rumored, has been taken care of; the second, the secretary, holds a lucurative position at Portsmouth and not in the Railway Mail Service; the last, the president of the first division, Railway Mail Association, rumor has it, has been connected with post-office inspector's office here at Boston. How could these men, who had their own individual interest at stake, represent the rank and file of those who had been the greatest sufferers?

There are many of those who have been less fortunate who could tell many things of privations and reductions along these lines, could they be heard without fear of reprimand or something worse.

Men of long service, not only in the mail service but in the service of their country, and those who from injuries received on the road after a partial recovery being assigned to some light duty, have been made to feel that they have indeed labored in vain. The order of continuing in service 12 consecutive days of the messenger service on the Boston, Springfield and New York railway post office, which previously had been 6 days on and 6 off.

And this a veteran of 42 years of service on the road as well as a veteran of the Civil War.

The reduction in salary and grade of the clerks in charge of the dormitories at Harrisburg and Boston.

The former twice reduced, as stated by A. C. Walton, brought about "by his not keeping his mouth shut."

The one in charge of Boston Dormitory reduced in rank from class 2 to class 1 with a loss of $400 salary, and that order issued over the signature of Alex. Grant, made forcible by a rubber stamp and apparently by no other order.

And this, a veteran of the service as well as a veteran of the Civil War, assigned to a position as clerk of dormitory after a partial recovery from injuries received while in performance of duty on the road as mail clerk and after suffering nearly three years as a result from his injuries.

These conditions have not been removed nor many others which were happily enjoyed previous to the present conditions.

From the information given by our representative, A. C. Walton, we were told if we remained quiet all would be well.

How were those promises kept? When President Walton was asked: "What have you to tell us that has been promised to better our condition?" "That I am not at liberty to tell, as my talk with the officials was confidential." And this from our representative. What that talk meant and what object he had in view has been made plain, as two efficient clerks have been made to feel, by a summary removal without any warning. Civil service, notwithstanding, still survives, a laughing farce and a cruel mockery.

The cause of their removal is laid to their too active part at a meeting recently held by the R. M. A., at which President Walton presided, and at which it is supposed some remarks were made by these two clerks relative to the gag rule, or the right of appeal.

Now the solution as we see it is that the clerks were removed at the suggestion of A. C. Walton—from the fact that one of these men, C. H. Quackenbush, is a candidate against A. C. Walton's reelection as president, and from whom he feared defeat.

From the fact that A. C. Walton, since his return from Washington, has been a constant visitor at the post office inspector's office, and the clerks have been summoned to appear and sign papers, whether or no that at any time they had loaned money to any of the officials of this department; that some one else must be made to suffer for too active part in bringing about his defeat.

Clerk H. W. Strong, of the Boston and Springfield railway post office, was asked by A. C. Walton to make a statement relative to a slight altercation between him and C. H. Quackenbush, which occurred some four years ago or more. He did not give it.

Clerk C. H. Quackenbush is our choice because he is upright, straightforward, and manly, and has been elected by a large majority.

If there ever was a man whose acts while in the capacity of friend and foe needed probing it is this same A. C. Walton. No clerk feels that his position is safe who stands in his way.

If retribution could be wrought upon this man, whom we look upon as a Judas, there are men who could be found to show him up in all his false colors.

This man, it is rumored, sought to have the clerks attend a meeting of the American Federation, and caused inspectors to be posted to mark all mail clerks who should attend.

In the name of liberty and all it implies, freedom of thought, speech, and all that belongs to an American citizen, the right to act, speak, and think without the fear that should he so act or speak he might be smartly dealt with.

Remove from us these fears by your influence and these 10,000 railway mail clerks will rise up and call you thrice blessed, and in them you will find an everlasting and grateful people.

I have called attention to the fact that the department has placed its ban upon the brotherhood, which is a nonaffiliated society, and also upon the Railway Mail Clerks' Protective Association, which is an organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The department officials take the ground that they do not object to organizations of men employed, provided they have no outside affiliation. Now, I have shown clearly in the case of the brotherhood, which has no outside affiliations, that the department is opposed to it, and the only organizations of postal employees which the department seems to favor are those which are dominated by the officials of the Post Office Department. This has been the case with the Railway Mail Clerks' Association. The head of that organization is now either in the galleries or lobbies, or possibly interviewing some Member of this Senate. His name is Peter J. Schardt, and his home is in Milwaukee, Wis.; and he is, so far as the Railway Mail Clerks' Association is concerned, absolutely under the domination of the department.

In this connection the officials of the department represent the department, and as such they have endeavored to and have influenced the election of officers of the organizations of employees. They directly influenced the election of Mr. Schardt, and in support of that statement I want to submit a letter of E. C. Olwin, assistant chief clerk at Grand Forks, N. Dak., which was introduced in the House hearings, and has not been controverted or explained:

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., March 25, 1911.

DEAR BROTHER CLERK: The ballots for the coming division election will be mailed to each member of the association soon, and I wish to call your attention to a few things connected with association affairs in connection with the candidates for division president.

You are no doubt aware of the fact that Van Dyke is the "Brotherhood" candidate for division president, and we can not now afford to have two organizations in the Railway Mail Service, both working for the same ends, but one in harmony with the department and the other antagonistic to the department. I believe the R. M. A. is in a better position now to get what the clerks deserve in the way of better pay, better hours, better cars, etc., than ever before, and by continuing the present organization I believe we will accomplish all we desire in the course of another year or two.

The department and Congress recognize the R. M. A. as the official organization of the railway postal clerks and will not recognize the "Brotherhood," and it is a certainty that if the "Brotherhood" is allowed to gain control of the R. M. A. we will lose all the prestige and influence that we have gained by fair and honest dealing with the department.

We will never gain anything by antagonizing the department, and past experience has proved that everything Congress has done for us has been recommended by our department officials, and it has been proved by past experience that Congress will not grant us anything that has not been recommended by the department.

Our association may have been too easy in the past, and I believe we should adopt a more aggressive campaign for the future and in presenting our grievances to the department be prepared to convince them that our claims are just and that we are properly entitled to them.

We know that our present vice president, P. J. Schardt, is the man best fitted to conduct our national affairs for the next year, and a vote for Van Dyke means a vote against Schardt.

We have a candidate for division president who will meet all the requirements, is a sound, level-headed man, quiet in demeanor, but with a determination to do whatever he undertakes to do, and who will not try to tear down the present R. M. A., but who will do his best to make it stronger and more effective. That man is Mr. O. E. Johnson, of the Chi. & Minn. R. P. O., and a vote for him means a vote for Schardt and for a better and stronger R. M. A., and, incidentally, a vote to better our own condition, not by antagonizing the department, but by working in harmony with them.

Think these things over before casting your vote, for I am sure if you do you will vote for Johnson.

Fraternally, yours, E. C. OLWIN.

I believe Mr. Schardt is the gentleman who furnished the Senator from Minnesota with the information which he communicated to the Senate and with the amendment which he offered.

Mr. President, the purpose of maintaining this organization among these clerks is to better their condition, to enable them to present as an organization their grievances. And the domination of such organization by the officials of the Post Office Department is an adroit means of destroying its efficiency as an instrument to benefit the employees which it represents.

And as a further evidence of the influence which the department exerts in the control of these organizations I want to submit the statement made to the House Committee on Reform in the Civil Service by Oscar F. Nelson, president of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks.

That organization represents some 4,000 post-office clerks. I think it is something like six or seven years old. It is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. There has never been a strike or anything approaching a strike through the influence of this organization. Its services have been effective. It has brought about the classification of clerks in that department under the civil-service laws of the country, as I shall show in a moment. The head of the department, the president, is not in the service. He was dismissed as a clerk from the Chicago post office. He had been particularly efficient. He had just a few weeks before his dismissal received a promotion to the highest salary possible in the service in which he was employed.

The cause for his dismissal was that he gave publicity to the insanitary conditions existing in some part of the post-office building in Chicago where the clerks were required to perform their services. He had made every possible effort to secure a remedy for those conditions. Being unable to do so he furnished some facts to the press of Chicago, and publication was made of the conditions. They were simply horrible. He was not driven to take this course until four deaths had occurred right in that office from contagious disease contracted as a result of the insanitary conditions. The public health officers of Chicago, as soon as their attention was called to the conditions, condemned the situation as they found it; and yet this young man, one of the brightest fellows I have met, was removed from the service because he had given publicity to these outrageous conditions. In his testimony or statement made to the House committee is found the following:

I want to submit to you the facts in connection with the passage of the classification bill that the letter carriers in the post offices are now working under. In 1906 our national organization was formed.

That is one of the organizations that does not enjoy the favor of the Post Office Department.

At that time the postal service throughout the country and the post-office clerks throughout the country were dissatisfied with the conditions that they were working under. These conditions had never been realized in Chicago until 550 resignations were made from the service within the period of six months. The civil-service secretaries and examiners throughout the country wrote to Washington stating that they could not get men to take the examination for the positions because there were no classifications of salaries. The clerks started at $50 per month and never knew when they would be promoted. It was absolutely necessary to go out and secure political aid and influence in order to get promotions.

In Chicago they could not get men to take the jobs, and the postal service, or Mr. Hitchcock, recommended the passage of the classification law. He called in the president of the clerks' association and told him he would recommend the passage of the classification law. He said, "It is not going to be what the boys want, but it is the best that we can do for them, and I want you to see that the clerks of the country are satisfied with the classification recommended by the department." He said, "I am going to recommend a classification law which will provide a maximum entrance salary of $600 and $100 automatic promotion until a $1,000 salary is reached." The carriers at that time—and since, I believe, 1884 or 1886—had been working under a classification law which provided $600 for the first year, $800 for the second year, and $1,000 for the third year. They had felt during all that time the increased cost of living, and their organization had made a request of the department that they recommend a classification which would give them $1,200 per annum. The president of the National Letter Carriers' Association came to Washington to secure, if possible, the adoption of the amendment. This was during the session of the winter of 1906 and 1907. Mr. Hitchcock, who was then First Assistant Postmaster General, became aware of the fact that Mr. Holland, the president of the National Letter Carriers' Association, was in Washington attempting to influence legislation along the lines that I have mentioned—that is, to secure an amendment to the classification bill. He immediately ordered Mr. Holland to return to his post of duty, and Mr. Holland, not being desirous of leaving the interests of the letter carriers here in Washington, had some Congressmen wait on Mr. Hitchcock, and these Members of Congress appealed to Mr. Hitchcock that Mr. Holland be allowed to remain in Washington during the session. Mr. Hitchcock told these Members of Congress to send Mr. Holland to him and he would have a talk with him. Mr. Holland came in to see him one day and Mr. Hitchcock said: "I will allow you to remain in Washington on one condition." Mr. Holland said "What is it?" Mr. Hitchcock said "On the condition that you will not be a candidate for reelection for national president of the National Letter Carriers' Association." Mr. Holland agreed to this and was allowed to remain here in Washington for the purpose of influencing the legislation I have spoken of.

Mr. PUJO. Was he drawing his salary during that time?

Mr. NELSON. No, sir; a substitute was working in his place, and he received no salary; he was on leave of absence without pay. The classification bill was passed; that law classified the salaries of the clerks and carriers, and made the positions transferable and interchangeable. As I said, that law was passed, and the clerks and carriers were appreciative of it; and at the convention of the Letter Carriers' Association, which took place the following September, Mr. Hitchcock was invited to be present, and he was also invited to attend the clerks' association convention. When Mr. Hitchcock came to Canton, Ohio, and found the letter carriers unanimous in their recommendation and indorsement of Mr. Holland, he immediately ordered Mr. Holland suspended from the service.

Of course the clerks felt very grateful to Mr. Holland. He had been instrumental in securing, as they believed, the passage of this classification legislation—

When he went into the convention hall to address the carriers' association he refused to accept the hand of the president and addressed the carriers without addressing the president. By this action he practically snubbed and insulted the representative of the carriers' association. The carriers realized that something was wrong, and they held a conference with Mr. Holland. Mr. Holland then recalled his promise to Mr. Hitchcock not to become a candidate for reelection.

Mr. DIES. Was he a candidate for reelection?

Mr. NELSON. He had not told the carriers that he would not accept a reelection, but it was simply the unanimous sentiment of the delegates to the convention that Mr. Holland should be reelected. The delegates then held a caucus among themselves and finally told Mr. Holland that they thought he ought to withdraw from the race for reelection; that he ought not to stand for reelection in view of his promise, because they realized that it was absolutely necessary to have the good will of the department. Mr. Holland also realized this and refused to be a candidate for reelection.

It is perfectly apparent, Mr. President, from what I have submitted to the Senate, that the department desires to maintain a check upon the organization not alone because of the control which it gives over the presentation of grievances of the employees to Congress or to the Executive, but also because of the political prestige which it secures by such control. These organizations hold conventions; the Postmaster General or his representative is present, and as a result there is always a laudatory resolution passed expressing the gratification of the particular organization with the administration of the department and expressing confidence in the official who is present representing the administration.

These resolutions are used in the political campaigns which follow. The presence of the officials of the department at such gatherings always prevents free discussion, as the men are fearful if they express their real sentiments with reference to the conditions in the department or of the rules under which they must work they will bring upon themselves the displeasure of the department and be punished by demotion or separation from the service.

This may appear to Senators as an exaggeration, but in this connection I desire to call attention to the case of a railway postal clerk who, in pursuance of his plain duty, reported the unsanitary condition of cars in which he was compelled to work on the Great Northern road. This is his letter—I withhold his name for the same reason that I have withheld others:

ST. PAUL, MINN., ——, 1911.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: Your circular letter under date of March 31 received, and I take pleasure in returning same filled up as requested. In connection with this I beg leave to call your kind attention to the severe discipline which I am undergoing at the hands of the department.

I was reduced from class 5, at $1,500, to class 4, at $1,300, account my sanitary reports of the cars in which I work. I was reduced without a hearing or any papers in the case. I have exhausted my every effort to be reinstated and have failed. The department asked for these reports; insisted on getting them as good or bad; if bad, to state briefly in what respect. I gave the information asked for to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Supt. Perkins informed me personally that the Great Northern Railway people were responsible for my reduction; that they had taken up my report with the department at Washington direct, and I am now living in fear of another reduction at the hands of the department or the pleasure of the railroad company. In connection with this paragraph I will add that it will be necessary for me to take another voluntary reduction to a side line, as I am not physically able to do class 4 work on our line.

Mr. President, to permit a department head to pass judgment as to what society, association, club, or form of organization an employee shall be allowed to join is equivalent to permitting him to control the organization and directly tends to foster a bureaucracy.

Any Senator who has been told by an officer of an existing postal organization "that the employees do not want the provision that provides for the right of membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization retained in this section" has good reason to question the sincerity of such a representative of the employees, because certainly the retention of such provision in this section can do no harm. It does not compel the employees to join any particular organization or any organization at all; it simply protects them in their right to join any society, association, club, or other form of organization the same as every other citizen does.

It is possible that a representative or officer of a postal employees' organization who states "that the employees want that provision stricken out"—if he is in the service and under the control of the department—has in a roundabout way been advised by some department official to make such request. Certainly no one can imagine why an officer or representative of the employees should request that such provision should be stricken out.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] in the debate on Saturday upon the authority of Mr. Schardt asserted that 90 per cent of the men employed in the Railway Mail Service were opposed to the restitution of the proviso to section 6 which has been stricken out by the committee.

I believe, Mr. President, that I am in a position, from the correspondence which I have had with some twelve or fifteen thousand of these railway clerks, to say that that statement is utterly without foundation; but even if the statement be true, I do not believe that it is a reason for striking out the paragraph. That proviso is as follows:

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said postal service, or the presenting by any such person or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof, shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

I believe that this proviso should not have been stricken out by the committee. It simply provides a guaranty to the employees of the postal service of the rights which they have under the Constitution and the laws of the country and a right which should never have been questioned by the department.

This paragraph would never have been inserted in the bill had it not been for the unwarranted interference of department officials with the freedom of the men to join whatever organizations or to form such organizations as they saw fit. When the department endeavored, by the order of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, to put these organizations under the ban of the Government the department assumed a power which it does not possess. There is nothing in the law giving to the Postmaster General or his assistants or to the President power to say what organization an employee of the Government may join and what organization he may not join. To assert such a power is to strike a blow at individual liberty.

The postal employee is at all times responsible to the head of the department and subject to disciplinary action for any violation of rules or regulations, whether he be a member of an organization or not, and the department head should not be permitted to go further than that in his supervision of the employee.

I know that there has been instilled into the minds of Senators and others a great fear that legislation of this character will open the door to new dangers. The representatives of the department before the Post Office Committee of the Senate and other committees of Congress have pictured the dangers of a "strike" on the part of employees of the Government. They misrepresented the facts in regard to the case of the men on the Tracy-Pierre line to make it appear that there was a precedent for a strike against the Government. I have demonstrated from the records that instead of striking those men were suspended and in that suspension a gross injustice was done to these men as they were discriminated against and men who were guilty of indentically the same action—that of protesting against the performance of extra work, of doing the work of another man whom the department refused to appoint simply because it desired to make a showing of economy—were permitted to remain in the service and their demands acquiesced in. It appears under the circumstances that the Tracy-Pierre men were suspended or dismissed merely as an object lesson and to make the postal employees everywhere feel that they were to be subjected to punishment without redress and that so far as they were concerned a reign of terror prevailed.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was correct in the statement that he made when he said:

If the Government can not settle its differences with its employees without the intervention of the strike, then the Government is a failure.

The denial to these employees of the right to form these organizations, the curtailment of their right to petition Congress, and lay before the Members of either House the grievances which they have against the department might lead to conditions which would become so intolerable as to goad men to desperate action; but I can not conceive of a strike against the Government in any branch of its service so long as the constitutional guaranties of all of the employees are in full force and effect.

The denial to these employees of the right to affiliate with outside organizations, even outside labor organizations, is a contradiction of the action of the Post Office Department and of the action of other departments of the Government. Men employed in the Government Printing Office and in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving are members of the Typographical, the Pressmens, Bookbinders, Stereotypers, and Lithographers Unions. The men employed in the navy yards are members of unions. There is a local union of the employees of the Geodetic Survey. The stationery engineers and firemen employed in the Government plants in this and other cities are members of unions. And all of these organizations of employees in these varied Government activities are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Why, even the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, an organization which has been in existence since 1906, has, with the express permission of the Post Office Department, been affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. For the information of Senators on this point I desire to direct attention to a statement taken from an Associated Press dispatch in which former Postmaster General Cortelyou and the present Postmaster General were quoted upon this point:

Employees can form all the unions they desire; there is nothing in civil-service regulations to prevent them, but it is understood that the department will insist on loyal service from each employee as an individual and without any thought of his affiliation with any organization.

That is the true rule. And a department which can not maintain such relations with its employees and permit them to connect themselves with whatever associations they may choose to join is a badly managed department of government.

Mr. Hitchcock, then the First Assistant Postmaster General, at the same time issued the following statement:

There is no postal regulation which prohibits the employees of the department from joining organizations of this kind (referring to unions), but there is an Executive order, issued January 31, 1902, which directs that employees of the Government shall neither directly nor indirectly, through associations, make any attempt to have their rate of compensation increased.

He referred, of course, to Executive orders, against which so much complaint has been made. Of course, Mr. Hitchcock merely stated a fact which everybody understood and is familiar with—that up to that time there was no order prohibiting these men from joining associations. It was only when Mr. Hitchcock was desirous of making the showing of economy in the department, to which I have referred, and imposed upon the employees in the Railway Mail Service extraordinary and burdensome labors creating friction in the department, that this order was made.

The employees of municipal governments all over the country are organized and affiliated with other organizations. Ninety per cent of the school-teachers of Chicago are members of their own affiliated organization.

Notwithstanding all of this organization and the sore grievances which many of these employees have suffered at the hands of the General Government and municipal government, I have not and I do not believe that anyone else has ever heard of a strike against the Government.

I believe that this proviso should be restored to the bill and that it should be restored without the addition of any special legislation denying to these men the right to strike. While I do not believe that there will ever be a strike against the Government, still I do not want written into the laws of this country a direct prohibition of this right, as affecting any of the employees of the Government. Men do not strike and endure the resulting suffering and privation unless they have expectation of accomplishing some beneficial result.

The only condition under which there is any possibility of a strike occurring in the Government service is in the event of an Executive order interfering with some of the natural or constitutional rights of the employees. But where the workmen have the right or the privilege of appealing to the legislative branch of the Government for relief, having a knowledge that relief can come only through a majority of both branches of the legislature and the approval of the President, and that a strike can not create such majorities, there is not the remotest possibility that a strike would ensue, even though their grievances are not remedied when brought to Congress.

The greatest strikes which have occurred in the United States have taken place when the men involved in them were not members of labor unions or where a very small portion of them were trade-unionists.

The great railway strike of 1877 occurred when less than 10 per cent of the men were organized. In the great bituminous miners' strike of 1894, where 240,000 coal miners were involved, less than 20 per cent of them were members of the union.

In 1897, in the second great bituminous coal miners' strike, where over 300,000 miners were involved, less than 20 per cent of them were members of their organization.

In the anthracite strike of 1900, 143,000 men quit work, and yet only 8,000 of them were members of organized labor.

Two years later, when what is known as the great anthracite strike occurred and 147,000 men came on strike, less than 25,000 of them were organized.

The recent strikes in the Westmoreland coal fields of Pennsylvania, and the textile workers of Lawrence, Mass., and the garment workers of New York and Chicago, were spontaneous uprisings against intolerable conditions without any previous organization of labor having existed in their midst. Organization followed the strikes, but did not precede them.

The impression has been given that the American Federation of Labor is an organization that accomplishes its ends by means of strikes; but the American Federation of Labor has no authority to declare strikes. It does not assume any jurisdiction over trade affairs. It is simply a congress of the different trade-unions of the United States. Each trade-union has complete trade autonomy. Each trade deals with its own trade disputes without interference by any other trade or by the American Federation of Labor.

Affiliation with the American Federation of Labor would not in any manner tend toward creating strikes or strike conditions. On the contrary, when any trade organization brings its grievances to the attention of the American Federation of Labor it only does so for counsel and advice. And it has been the invariable practice of the officials of the American Federation of Labor to advise the trade affected to exhaust all other means to adjust their disputes before resorting to strikes.

The American Federation of Labor is a great organization, having great responsibilities, and there is nothing which tends more toward conservatism in handling trade disputes than responsibility. It follows, then, that affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, instead of tending to produce strikes, has a tendency to prevent them. It is a well-known fact to students of the labor movement that labor organizations have prevented more strikes than they have ever authorized.

In the best-organized industries in the United States trade disputes are generally adjusted by mutual conference. This fact does not get into the newspapers and does not become generally known, while the strikes, being the exception rather than the rule, attract attention, and from that grows the assumption that labor organizations are institutions created for the purpose of promoting strikes.

The assumption that because a trade-union is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor it would be compelled to engage in a sympathetic strike in order to assist some other labor organization whenever it was deemed advisable by the American Federation of Labor is a misapprehension of the facts. The American Federation of Labor has no power to authorize or order one trade organization to strike in sympathy with and for the assistance of another. No trade organization can be ordered on strike except with the consent of its own members, and the laws of trade-unions very frequently require that the vote of the members of the union necessary to authorize a strike must be two-thirds of the entire membership.

Mr. President, I believe that the provisions of section 6 of the House bill are wholesome; I believe they will make for good order and good service in the Post Office Department; I believe they will be conducive to contentment in the service, and that they will afford an orderly means for these men to make their grievances known, both to the department and to Congress, to secure the removal of any injustice under which they may be suffering. I believe that it will be a great mistake to strike out any portion of the House provision, and I trust the Senate will vote to preserve it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to make some remarks. I had intended to say what I have to say this morning when the unfinished business, which is the tariff measure, was laid before the Senate, but at that time the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] was addressing the Senate on some provision of the Post Office appropriation bill, and not desiring to interfere with him I postponed what I have to say.

I think this is an opportune occasion to say something about the President's veto of the wool bill and about that illusive but potential quantity known as a Tariff Board, and I think I had as well speak now as later. I shall not detain the Senate long, but I have something that I desire to say and I am going to say it now.

Mr. President, I am going to criticize the President. But as preliminary to what I purpose saying and to acquit myself of personal or partisan prejudice, I desire to remark, in passing, that personally I am a friend of the President. Personally I hold him in high, even affectionate, esteem. I believe him to be a high class man, with ideals and impulses naturally good. I believe him to be a patriotic American, devoted to the institutions of his country and the welfare of his people; and I believe that if he should be left to follow the bent of his own judgment and inclination he would seek with singleness of purpose to promote the public weal. But, unfortunately, he is so environed by political exigencies, and is so harrassed and confused by the advice and importunities of political partisans, and by interests to which his party is obligated, that frequently, as in this instance, he permits himself to be overpersuaded and to follow a course of conduct which somehow I do not believe has the free sanction of his deliberate judgment. Instead of leading he too often permits himself to be led, and becomes more the servant of a party faction and of special interests than of the people. He too often furnishes a shining example of a good man going wrong. So much for that.

I come now to the immediate matter in hand—this veto. It is well, briefly, to recall the more pertinent and important facts connected with this legislation that the exact situation may be before our minds. Mr. Taft was the candidate of the Republican Party for President in 1908. At that time he had behind him a united, confident, aggressive party. During the campaign of that year Mr. Taft declared in numerous public speeches that the public interests imperatively required the revision of our tariff laws, and that that revision should be made for the purpose of materially reducing the duties on importations. He took the position, which was a correct position, that the existing duties—those prescribed in the Dingley law—were so much too high that they afforded an almost free opportunity for the organization of industrial trusts and combinations in this country, and that they were unduly oppressive and heavy on American consumers. He took occasion at one time, I think more than once, to especially denounce the rates of duty levied under the Dingley law on wool and woolen fabrics. He was reported to have declared that the wool schedule, Schedule K, was absolutely indefensible. These utterances, Mr. President, stood unchallenged as the doctrine of his party, and was so accepted by the American people. The Democratic Party in that campaign, as it had for many years before, contended that the then existing tariff law was nothing less than a statutory shelter for monopoly, and advocated an immediate and radical revision downward. It seemed as if Mr. Bryan, the Democratic candidate, and Mr. Taft, the Republican candidate, were speaking very nearly the same language in 1908. I am sure that both were then speaking what they thought. Mr. Taft was elected President in November, 1908, and was inaugurated on March 4, 1909. With an apparent purpose of keeping faith with the people and carrying out his pledge the new President assembled Congress in extraordinary session a few weeks after his induction into office for the purpose of revising the tariff law. We sat here all through the heated months of that year considering that subject. Out of it came what is known as the Payne-Aldrich law. During the consideration of that measure, taking up schedule after schedule, there was a long spirited and sometimes acrimonious debate. It was a great fight we had in both Houses of Congress. The Republicans had a large majority in both Houses, and in this Chamber their forces were led by a no less conspicuous man than the former Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich]. The bitterness of the fight resulted in dividing the Republicans into factions, one faction known as "regulars" and the other as "insurgents." There were all kinds of conferences and all kinds of plotting to bring about results. These conferences and this plotting was not only between Republican Senators themselves, but extended to outside interested parties, and even to the White House. A tremendous pressure was brought upon everybody, and undoubtedly upon the President, by those who were opposed to any substantial reduction in tariff rates. I am sorry to say that it is generally believed, and with too much reason, that the President yielded to this pressure and lost a splendid opportunity to assert a leadership that would have made him strong in the confidence and hearts of the people. He did not seem to be able to withstand the pressure upon him, and to assert the courage of his convictions. Instead of leading along the path of his own choice, he weakened and followed the leadership of others. That was a pitiful mistake he made. He signed the Payne-Aldrich bill when he ought to have vetoed it. He not only signed it, but afterwards, like one boasting of a conscious sin out of the hope of giving to it a better face, he publicly declared that it was the best tariff law ever written into the statutes of the country. We had the disappointing spectacle of the President applauding a law which in no wise voiced the promises he had made to the people, but, on the contrary, utterly ignored them. I say this because this Payne-Aldrich law instead of reducing tariff taxes on the average materially increased them.

Of course the people looked upon this performance with disfavor, regarding it as a party betrayal of public confidence. At the next election—1910—the people registered their protest by electing a Democratic House and by displacing a number of Republican Senators with Democrats. Shortly after that election, in April, 1911, the President called Congress together again in extraordinary session for the special purpose of considering a reciprocal trade agreement tentatively made between the President and Secretary Knox on the one hand and the Canadian Government on the other hand. But after the Congress assembled, the Democratic House concluded to take up the tariff question in addition to the Canadian reciprocity agreement, holding to the view that our people were more concerned in our domestic affairs than they were even in the question of Canadian reciprocity, important as that was. The Republicans of both Houses had ignored their promises to the people respecting tariff revision, and the people turned them out of power and installed a Democratic House. This House determined to keep faith with the people and to take advantage of this first opportunity to demonstrate that they intended to do so. Accordingly they passed some important tariff revision bills, among them a bill revising Schedule K, materially reducing the Payne-Aldrich duties on wools and woolen manufactures. This House bill, with some amendments, was passed by both Houses during that extra session and sent to the President. He vetoed it. He vetoed it on the ground, distinctly stated, that a certain executive body, which he styled a Tariff Board, had not completed certain investigations they were making into the woolen schedule, and had not, therefore, reported upon their work. Every effort made by Democrats during that session to reduce tariff duties was stubbornly resisted in both Houses by the great body of Republican Senators and Representatives, and because of that opposition and the opposition of the President to the legislation passed, that session of Congress ended without accomplishing any practical result.

Congress met again in regular session last December. By that time the Tariff Board had completed their investigations into the wool schedule and had delivered their report to the President. At the opening of the Congress in December the President transmitted that report to the legislative branch of the Government. The Democratic House proceeded at once to again take up the work of revising the tariff and passed several bills, among them another bill revising the wool schedule. That bill was sent to the President some 10 days ago, and again he disapproved it. It is that veto I purpose to discuss.

Mr. President, this résumé is sufficient to call to our minds the pertinent historical facts connected with this matter. Let me now state this particular case in as concrete a form as I can:

1. As a candidate in 1908, the President declared emphatically that the duties on wool and woolens were so high as to be indefensible, and that they should be substantially reduced; and in this declaration he was in accord with the contention of the Democratic Party.

2. The Republican Congress of 1909 passed the Payne-Aldrich bill, which, instead of reducing duties as a whole, increased them; and that law left the old Dingley duties on wool and woolens practically unchanged.

3. The President approved this Payne-Aldrich bill, thereby making it a law, and afterwards declared that it was the best tariff law ever enacted in this country.

4. The President vetoed the Democratic wool bill passed at the extraordinary session of last year, which bill materially reduced taxation, and vetoed it on the sole ground that his Tariff Board had not reported.

5. The President has just vetoed another Democratic bill, passed at this session, reducing the exorbitant duties on wool and woolen manufactures, and vetoed it this time on the ground that the bill did not conform to the recommendations of his so-called Tariff Board.

Mr. President, I desire to express my opinion about this much vaunted Tariff Board. What is it, anyhow? How was it created, and what is the legitimate scope of its authority? I think the country is entitled to an intelligent answer to these questions. How was it created? What is its genesis, and from what law does it derive its existence and authority? In one of the sections of the Payne-Aldrich law of 1909 it is provided that the general tariff rates prescribed by that law shall be the minimum rates to be charged; then the law goes on to provide that an additional rate of 25 per cent ad valorem shall be charged upon all importations from all countries until the President of the United States, after investigation, shall discover and determine whether any particular country is discriminating against the United States in its tariff and fiscal policies; and that whenever he finds that there is no discrimination against us by any particular country, that he shall thereupon issue a proclamation to that effect, and that thereafter importations from that country shall be subject only to the general or minimum rates prescribed by the law, thus remitting the additional charge of 25 per cent. The general rate is designated as the minimum rate, while the general rate plus the 25 per cent ad valorem is described as the maximum rate. The reason for this provision of law is apparent, and there is no need to detain the Senate by any further explanation of it. Now, at the very tail end of this section fixing these minimum and maximum rates, and containing the provision authorizing the President to examine into the facts with respect to each country and to make the necessary proclamation with reference thereto, occurs this provision:

To secure information to assist the President in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by this section, and the officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, the President is hereby authorized to employ such persons as may be required.

It is upon this provision of law which I have quoted that the so-called Tariff Board enjoys its right to exist. The President was not authorized to appoint a Tariff Board, in the sense in which the term is generally understood, but was merely authorized "to employ such persons as may be required" to enable him to find out whether any foreign country was discriminating in any way within the purview of this law against the United States, so that he might know when and where to apply the maximum or the minimum rate of tariff taxation on importations. That is all there is to this Tariff Board, at least in the beginning. But let us follow the development of this scheme about a tariff board a little further. In pursuance and under the authority of this provision of law the President appointed three gentlemen to make the investigations provided for and to report to him. This was to be purely an executive board, to be appointed by the President to get information for his special use. These appointees did not constitute a board for anything. They were merely individual appointees, appointed to go about under the direction of the President to gather information for his advisement. Later on the President, backed by a number of Republican Senators and Representatives, conceived the idea of creating by law a permanent tariff commission, clothed with power to make examinations into the various tariff schedules, so as to find out and report upon questions relating to the cost of materials, labor, and so forth, in manufactured products, both in this country and other countries. Bills to establish such a commission were introduced, but the Congress refused to pass any of them. Thereupon the President proceeded arbitrarily to make a tariff board of his own. The President referred to this matter in his message of August 17, 1911, vetoing the wool bill of that year, in this language:

I took advantage of a clause in the Payne-Aldrich bill—

The clause I have quoted—enabling me to create a board of three members and directing them to make a glossary and encyclopedia of the terms used in the tariff and to secure information as to the comparative cost of production of dutiable articles under the tariff at home and abroad.

Subsequently the President informed Congress that he had added two members to this Tariff Board—two Democratic members. Mr. President, I regard this act of the President as a plain usurpation of power. We have heard much about the arbitrary methods of Mr. Roosevelt when he was President. We were disposed to excuse many of his extraordinary performances on the ground of ignorance on his part of the correct constitutional functions of the Executive. But we can not offer that excuse for Mr. Taft. I am aware that after the passage of the Payne-Aldrich law the Congress slipped into appropriation bills certain provisions intended to give some slight color of authority for what the President had assumed to do, in spite of the refusal of Congress to create a tariff commission. I will here quote the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation bills of 1911 and 1912 covering this subject. I quote first from the act of 1911:

To enable the President to secure information to assist him in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, and the officers of the Government in administering the customs laws, including such investigations of the cost of production of commodities, covering cost of material, fabrication, and every other element of such cost of production as are authorized by said act—

As are authorized by said act—and including the employment of such persons as may be required for those purposes; and to enable him to do any and all things in connection therewith authorized by law, $250,000.

The act of 1912 is in this language:

To enable the President to secure information to assist him in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, and the officers of the Government in administering the customs laws, including such investigations of the cost of production of commodities, covering cost of material, fabrication, and every other element of such cost of production, as are authorized by said act, and including the employment of such persons as may be required for those purposes; and to enable him to do any and all things in connection therewith authorized by law, or if a Tariff Board be established by law then for the purpose of meeting the expenditures authorized by the law, $225,000, together with the balance unexpended July 1 next of the appropriation made for these purposes for the fiscal year 1911.

The Tariff Board, if established by law, shall make report to each House of the Congress on the wool and woolen schedule not later than the first Monday in December, 1911.

The provision in the Payne-Aldrich law for enforcing which these appropriations were made authorized the President to appoint such persons as he deemed necessary to make the investigation required by that act for the purposes set forth in that act, and which I have already outlined; but the sundry civil bill of 1911 contained these words, "including such investigations of the cost of production of commodities, covering cost of material, fabrication, and every other element of such cost of production," etc.; and the same provision was carried into the sundry civil bill of 1912, with the further provision that the appropriation made by that bill should be used to pay the expenses of a Tariff Board in the event a Tariff Board should be established by law, thereby clearly recognizing that no such board had been established by law. And right here I wish to say that every man of experience in congressional legislation knows full well how comparatively easy it is to stick into appropriation bills things that have no proper place in such bills and which ought to be kept out of them. It is a sad commentary on the work of Congress, but it is true that as a rule appropriation bills represent little more than the judgment of appropriation committees and that they ordinarily receive less careful attention on the floor of the Senate and House than almost any other bills considered by Congress.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I desire to make a suggestion as to the impression made upon me during the time I have had the opportunity of being a Member of this body, and that is that the Senator does not go quite far enough when he says that appropriation bills register the judgment of the Appropriations Committee. I go still further and say that about four-fifths or nine-tenths of that judgment of the Appropriations Committee is drawn from—I started to say "the dictation," but I will not use so strong a term as that—but from the recommendation, which is almost invariably followed, of the executive departments. They really make out the appropriation bills by telling the legislative branch what to do and what to appropriate, and the appropriation is generally made in such aggregate sum that Congress, when the matter is presented for their consideration, do not know what they are in fact doing. We have a half page, with a dozen different subjects enumerated in one long paragraph and winding up with a lump appropriation, "in all, $1,500,000." Then it is left to the department to distribute that $1,500,000, according to its own sweet will, among the various subjects—more of it here or less there, as it may suit the convenience or judgment of the departmental officers.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, what the Senator says is quite true. He has been here longer than I have been and longer than most of us have been, but what he says accords with the experience and knowledge of nearly every Senator serving in this Chamber. Moreover, it is a fact that these bills are usually considered and finally disposed of in the closing hours of a congressional session. The two Houses are nearly always at loggerheads on numerous items in all the important appropriation bills, and these bills, as a rule, are the result of the action agreed upon by the conferees of the two Houses by way of settling their differences. Hence, it often happens that unwise and ill-considered provisions creep into these bills.

Mr. President, this motherless Taft Tariff Board—I can not call it a bastard, for it has a father—has already cost the Public Treasury over a half million dollars. The Government has never possessed a piece of official machinery which has proved itself to be at once so useless and so expensive. At the present session the Democratic House of Representatives refused to make any further appropriation for its continuance, and because of this it has been given out that the President would veto the sundry civil bill when it reaches him. If this occurs, we will stand face to face with this novel proposition, that the President, having arbitrarily and substantially without legal authority undertaken to establish a permanent tariff commission, a thing Congress refused to establish, will now veto one of the great appropriation bills if Congress refuses to appropriate $200,000 or more to support it.

Mr. President, we are up to this proposition: That the President has arbitrarily assumed to create a tariff board and to select and appoint the men constituting that board, without even submitting their names to the Senate for confirmation, and that he now insists upon Congress recognizing it as a permanent institution, whether Congress approves of it or not. This board is essentially purely an Executive board, organized by the President and wholly under his control. Shall Congress close its eyes to this unauthorized act of the President and obey his behest?

Mr. President, during the campaign of 1908 Mr. Taft was a bold, outspoken advocate of tariff reduction, especially of reductions on wool and woolen fabrics. When, last year, we passed a reduction bill and sent it to him he vetoed it on the sole ground that this self-styled Tariff Board of his creation had been directed by him to make certain investigations covering wool and woolen manufactures, and that the board had not yet reported and would not report before December following. Well, the board reported in December, and the President transmitted the report to Congress. After reading this report and having the benefit of the information and recommendations of the board, the Congress passed another reduction wool and woolen bill; and now the President returns that bill, vetoed on the ground that the bill was not, in his judgment, framed on the lines of and in accordance with the report and recommendations of this board. In the first instance the President vetoed a bill because the board had not reported, and in the second instance he vetoes a bill because the bill does not conform to the board's report. Mr. President, if this were not a really serious matter it would be funny. Who are these gentlemen of the Tariff Board that their opinions should be entitled to such reverence by Congress and the President? I would not say a word offensive to them, nor have I any reason to; but I think it is fair to say that there is nothing we know about them that would give us occasion to accept their ipse dixit as a matter of course. The Congress is supposed to represent the people of the United States; and in these two Houses there are now, as there have always been, men of wide learning and experience in affairs of this nature and who are supposed to have some capacity for performing the duties laid upon them by the Constitution and their constituencies. But the President would make the Congress but an echo of a tariff board of his own sole creation and appointment. To my mind that view is utterly intolerable. I do not believe that the people of this country expect or desire their Representatives in Congress to revise the tariff laws in that way. Why, sir, there is nothing new or especially strange about tariff laws. Congress has been passing such laws for a hundred years and more. Congress has access to almost all possible avenues of information. I need not enlarge upon that, for everyone is familiar with it. And, after all, is there any Senator here willing to depend upon and blindly follow the recommendations of this board? I read the very able and exhaustive report made by the House Ways and Means Committee when the bill the President has just vetoed was first reported to the House. That committee, after fully examining the report of this Tariff Board, expressed themselves as having little confidence in its accuracy or its value. I desire at this point to quote an extract from that report.

I will ask leave to insert the extract in my remarks, without reading, as it is somewhat extensive, simply saying that the Ways and Means Committee of the House, by its vote, discredited the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission is granted to insert the extract.

The matter referred to is as follows:

1. The theory of applying tariff duties according to the difference in the cost of production in this and in foreign countries, upon which the board has projected and prepared its report, is entirely erroneous and untenable. Furthermore, if this theory could have been systematically and carefully applied, it would not have afforded trustworthy results for guidance in preparing tariff legislation.

2. The board's report is fragmentary and incomplete, and rests on an incorrect statistical basis. Hence it has no claims to confidence for the results set forth therein, even should the reliability of the theory of the cost of production be conceded.

3. Those persons who are willing to overlook the lack of theoretical soundness and of statistical accuracy, will find the data of the report too fragmentary and incomplete to admit of conclusions with reference to rates of tariff duty. Even under the most favorable interpretation of the report, conclusions as to duties can be reached for only a few paragraphs of the wool schedule, and for these paragraphs it is not possible to formulate definite conclusions, because the figures vary widely, and seriously lack uniformity and comparability. So much is this the case that justification is apparently afforded in the report for rates that are in conflict with one another. It is thus seen that the report leaves the question of the tariff duties on wool as much unsolved as before the Tariff Board was formed.

4. So far as conclusions can be drawn from the board's report, it furnishes nothing to justify any change in the rates proposed in H. R. 11019. With full recognition of the incomplete, fragmentary, and unsatisfactory nature of the data, and with full admission of the inadequate and unreliable basis afforded for computations, the following table may be regarded as setting forth, as well as it is possible to do, the conclusions as to the rates of duty justified by the report.

Comparative equivalent ad valorem rates of duty in 1910 and 1911 with those of H. R. 22195, together with the rates computed from the Tariff Board report, as equalizing cost of production.

1 Combed wool or tops not reported. 2 No data furnished by Tariff Board.

In making the computations from which have resulted the rates shown in Table 15, as justified by the Tariff Board's data, the most expensive and difficult conditions indicated by the data as attending production have been employed with a view to being more than just in the conclusions. As will be observed from the figures shown, the necessity of protection to equalize the difference in the cost of production beyond the rates carried by H. R. 11019 exists in but few instances, and these are in all probability the result of the high costs which have been presented and used by the board in the computations.

5. In preparing H. R. 11019 of last session and H. R. 22195 of this session no intentional provision was made for protection, the endeavor being to reduce and adjust rates so as to produce the largest amount of revenue consistent with the proper consideration of the consumer. It is believed that the rates of this bill approach very closely, at least, to the best revenue-producing points, and these rates should, if enacted into law, permit such quantities of imports as will effectively regulate domestic prices. Such competition would be an important service to the people, as it would encourage increased consumption and production by making more nearly normal the conditions of supply and demand. The report of the Tariff Board, so far as it admits of conclusions, shows that the rates which meet the consumer's needs also sufficiently satisfy those of the producer.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not think it necessary to proceed at greater length with my discussion of this subject. The President said in his veto message last year that he though it would be the part of wisdom to delay tariff legislation until the Tariff Board had reported. When he transmitted the report of the board in December he expressed the hope that Congress would then proceed to enact a law reducing duties on wool and woolens. Here is what he said:

I now herewith submit a report of the Tariff Board on Schedule K. The board is unanimous in its findings. On the basis of these findings I now recommend that the Congress proceed to a consideration of this schedule with a view to its revision and a general reduction of its rates.

Congress took him at his word and passed such a bill. Now he vetoes that bill on the ground, as I have several times said, that it is not in accordance with the recommendations of the board. He says that according to the Tariff Board the duty on wool should not be less than 35 per cent ad valorem, whereas the bill fixed the duty at 29 per cent ad valorem. The President ignores the judgment of Congress out of a tender consideration for the judgment of five men, unknown to fame, whom he had appointed to make an investigation under his authority.

I am sorry to say it, for I like the President, but it looks too much as if the President was playing politics. He is a candidate for reelection and he is beset by numerous embarrassments. As a candidate his position is difficult. Tariff revision is uppermost in the public thought. Gov. Wilson declares for a sane revision downward in accordance with his party platform, and the bull moose is roaring for a radical cut in all the schedules. With Wilson to the fore—calm, self-possessed, masterful—marching on triumphantly, and with the wild Bull Moose roaming and roaring promiscuously, what can a standpat candidate do? To whom can our distressed and anxious protected monopolies turn for succor if not to the President, and to whom can the President turn if not to them? The protected interests, rich and powerful, know how to fight for a continuance of the advantages they have long enjoyed. They exercise a mighty influence in the political as well as in the industrial affairs of the country. I am genuinely sorry to say that it looks as if the President has been weak when he should have been strong, and yielded when he should have been firm. I can not but think that he will discover before many moons that weakness at a crucial period is always a fatal blunder. But after all this is only another sad example of a good man going wrong.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a proposed unanimous-consent agreement, which I ask to have read and submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed agreement will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Tuesday, August 13, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and that not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on said day the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, except that anyone offering an amendment shall be allowed five minutes to explain the same, and the chairman of the committee or any Senator shall have a like time to discuss such amendment, and upon the bill itself through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. REED. Let it be read again. We could not hear it in this part of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed agreement will be again read.

The Secretary again read the proposed agreement.

Mr. CLAPP. May I inquire if that means that any Senator assigned by him, referring to the chairman.

Mr. BOURNE. No.

Mr. CLAPP. Then it should be any one Senator, I think.

Mr. BOURNE. It is "any Senator."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I was not in when the order was read. I should like to know if it interferes in any way with demanding a separate vote in the Senate. I want to ask for a separate vote——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not interfere at all with the right of a Senator when the bill goes into the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. I just came in the Chamber, and I should like to know what the request is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed agreement will be again read.

Mr. BACON. As Senators can not be here all the time, I think we should get a quorum present in order that the proposed agreement may be known to all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Curtis	Massey	Simmons
Bailey	Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Guggenheim	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Bourne	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Smoot
Bradley	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Stone
Brandegee	Jones	Perkins	Sutherland
Bristow	Kenyon	Poindexter	Swanson
Catron	La Follette	Pomerene	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lodge	Reed	Warren
Clapp	McCumber	Root	Williams
Cullom	McLean	Sanders
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Shively

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] will be again read.

The Secretary again read the agreement, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Tuesday, August 13, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and that not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on said day the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, except that anyone offering an amendment shall be allowed five minutes to explain the same, and the chairman of the committee or any Senator shall have a like time to discuss such amendment, and upon the bill itself—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the agreement? The Chair hears none.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar, under Rule VIII, and that it consider bills to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar, under Rule VIII, considering only unobjected bills.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest to the Senator from Utah to change his motion, so that instead of calling all the bills under Rule VIII the Secretary call the roll of Senators and allow each Senator a chance to bring up a bill or two bills.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there would be objection to that course. It will not take very long to pass over bills to which there is objection. Then, if we can not get through to-night with the calendar, when we proceed again we will commence at the point where we left off.

Mr. CUMMINS. The result will be that those bills early on the calendar will receive consideration, and those bills late on the calendar will not.

Mr. SMOOT. I would say to the Senator the next time the calendar is considered I will be in favor of starting just where we left off this morning and then no one will have an advantage over another. That is the way we have done in the past, and I think it is the proper way. I ask that the question be put on my motion.

Mr. LODGE. I make no objection to the motion, but I only desire to say that before the Senate adjourns it will be necessary to have a short executive session, as I have a report that it is necessary to make to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I think, before I consent to a unanimous consent of that kind——

Mr. SMOOT. I have not asked unanimous consent. I have made a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. PAGE. And to act on bills to which there is no objection?

Mr. LODGE. To act on unobjected bills.

Mr. PAGE. I do not know that I ought to consent to that, although I think I have a right to insist now upon my former contention——

Mr. SMOOT. The motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2151) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use at his discretion surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been three times read. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no amendment, it will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah whether that bill was reported from the Finance Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill was reported from the Finance Committee favorably, and it has been on the calendar nearly the whole of the session. I will state that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has objected to it several times. There is a full report on it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the question because I do not remember that the bill was ever discussed there. Perhaps I was not present.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator was not present if he does not remember it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood that there was objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia object?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 256) affecting the sale and disposal of public or Indian lands in town sites, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read in full and certain amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs have been agreed to. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Saying a bill has been read and amendments agreed to, and so forth, gives little information, unless the Senator in charge of the bill will give a little statement about it. I do not desire to unnecessarily object.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a bill the Senator from Georgia has objected to heretofore.

Mr. BACON. It is the same bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The same bill.

Mr. BACON. I object again, then, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

The bill (S. 5076) to promote instruction in forestry in States and Territories which contain national forests was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go over under Rule IX.

Mr. BORAH. What bill is that?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a bill providing for primary nominating elections in the District of Columbia. It is too late now to have a primary election.

Mr. BORAH. As the author of the bill is not present I do not think the bill should go to Rule IX.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2051) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been once read.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us hear the bill read before we pass upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again reported.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. REED. I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5728) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Senate resolution (S. Res. 242) directing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to inquire into and report to the Senate whether post-office inspectors are being sent through the country to influence postmasters to aid in the election of delegates for or against any candidate for the Presidency, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4204) to provide for the final settlement with the Tillamook Tribe of Indians of Oregon for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain agreement between said parties dated August 7, 1851, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask that that bill and the six following bills may go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator, why not let those bills go to the calendar under Rule IX?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They may for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are seven of them reported by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to have them passed over and go under Rule IX.

The bills referred to were placed under Rule IX, as follows:

A bill (S. 4205) to provide for the final settlement with the Clatsop Tribe of Indians, of Oregon, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain agreement between said parties dated August 5, 1851.

A bill (S. 4533) to provide for a final settlement with the Kathlamet Band of Chinook Indians, of Oregon, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties dated August 9, 1851.

A bill (S. 4534) to provide for a final settlement with the Wheelappa Band of Chinook Indians, of Washington, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties dated August 9, 1851.

A bill (S. 4535) to provide for a final settlement with the Lower Band of Chinook Indians, of Washington, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties dated August 9, 1851.

A bill (S. 4536) to provide for a final settlement with the Waukimum Band of Chinook Indians, of Washington, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties dated August 8, 1851.

A bill (S. 4537) to provide for a final settlement with the Nucquee-clah-we-muck Tribe of Indians, of Oregon, for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain unratified treaty between said parties dated August 7, 1851.

The bill (S. 3316) to repeal an act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

ANDREW H. RUSSELL AND WILLIAM R. LIVERMORE.

The bill (S. 284) for the relief of Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to take jurisdiction over the certain claim of Col. Andrew H. Russell and Col. William R. Livermore on account of the alleged infringement by the United States of their patent, No. 230823, dated August 3, 1880, for a magazine firearm, and make findings and conclusions of fact and law and report the same to the Senate in regard to the following matters, to wit:

Said court shall ascertain and determine and report whether said Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore would have any lawful claim for damages or compensation against the United States on account of any such alleged infringement if the United States were an individual or private corporation, and if so, the amount of such damages or compensation; also whether the alleged invention upon which said claim is based was known or used by others in any foreign country before the alleged invention or discovery thereof was made by either the said Andrew H. Russell or the said William R. Livermore; also whether the manufacture by the United States of a certain magazine firearm, known as the Krag-Jörgensen rifle, under a certain license from the Krag-Jörgensen Gewaerkompagni, of Christiania, Norway, was an infringement of the patent No. 230833 for a magazine firearm granted to said Andrew H. Russell. The court is further authorized, with other testimony which may be submitted by either side, to receive and consider, subject to objections as to its competency and materiality, the testimony already taken in the certain suit brought in the United States Circuit Court for the District of Massachusetts by Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore and dismissed for want of jurisdiction: Provided, That the Krag-Jörgensen Gewaerkompagni shall receive such notice of the hearing of said claim as the court shall direct, and the said Krag-Jörgensen Gewaerkompagni shall be permitted
